STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:30 a. m. in room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee) and McCarthy.

Senator Tydings. The committee will come to order.

I think it appropriate first that the record show why this committee is meeting and what its scope and purpose is to be in these proceedings. Senate Resolution 231, introduced by Mr. Lucas, was considered, amended, and agreed to on February 22, 1950. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are, or have been, employed by the Department of State. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable, and if said recommendations are to include formal charges of disloyalty against any individual, then the committee, before making said recommendation, shall give said individual open hearing for the purpose of taking evidence or testimony on said charges.

In the conduct of this study and investigation the committee is directed to procure by subpoena and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of all the Government employees in the Department of State, and such other agencies against whom charges have been heard.

The resolution was adopted by the Senate because of certain statements made on the floor of the Senate on Monday, February 20, 1950, and Wednesday, February 22, 1950.

In order that the committee may have all of the evidence that it should properly consider available in the record, the chairman has had the pages dealing with the information and charges and debate on these 2 days culled from the Congressional Record and, without objection, at this point the proceedings of the Senate dealing with this matter will be incorporated by reference in the record. Is there any objection? (None.) They will be incorporated by reference in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. In the course of these congressional deliberations, Senator McCarthy, of Wisconsin, made certain statements in, I believe 81 different cases, and gave a short account of why he thought each of the cases questioned the loyalty of the individual in each case. Senator McCarthy has been invited by the committee to come before us today as our first witness.

I am sure, Senator, that you yourself realize that the individuals who are charged with disloyalty to our Government are confronted with one of the most serious charges that can be leveled at a patriotic or other individual.

Senator McCARTHY. Especially the "or other."

Senator TYDINGS. If these men are guilty of these charges, the committee would want to find it out. If they are not guilty, we will want to inform the public accordingly.

Unless the chairman is overruled, all witnesses coming before this committee will be sworn. In your own case, as a Member of the Senate, the chairman is not going to compel you against your will to submit to be sworn, but I would like to ask you now if you would consent to be sworn.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is an excellent idea to swear all witnesses. I do not think we should have anyone take advantage of any immunity, whether it is a Senator, Secretary of State, or what, so I would like to be sworn.

Senator TYDINGS. I am glad you said that, Senator. That is the way I feel about it. I think we all ought to feel that way. If you will hold up your hand, I will proceed to swear you.

Do you promise that the evidence you shall give in the pending matter before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Senator McCARTHY. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Now, Senator McCarthy, the information you presented to the Senate has been read by all of us, I am sure. You will want to supplement that, no doubt, and comment further on it.

Senator McCARTHY. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. But, before you do, there is one matter that, to make the record complete as of the congressional debate, I would like to ask you about for just a minute.

If you will turn to case 14, that you mentioned in the Record—

Senator McCARTHY. Do you know what page that is on, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. I will try to find it in a minute.

Case 14 is in the Congressional Record of February 20, 1950, page 2051, column 3, and page 2052, column 1. I would like to read this particular case to ask you a question dealing with the other 81 cases.

Senator McCARTHY. Certainly.

Senator TYDINGS. I am quoting your remarks:

Case 14: This is a case of pressure from a high State Department official to obtain security clearance for an individual with a bad background from the standpoint of security. He was appointed in December 1945 as a translator in the State Department. This is an interesting case, showing the extent to which some of their superior officers will go when they find that some of these very unusual individuals are going to lose their jobs. He was appointed in December 1945 as a translator in the State Department. A report from another Government investigating agency, under date of January 9, 1946, advised that the subject should be dismissed as a bad security risk because he was flagrantly homosexual. He had extremely close connections with other individuals with the same tendencies and who were active members of Communist front organizations, including the Young Communist League.

I think this is interesting, Mr. President. I asked one of our top intelligence men in Washington one day, "Why do you find men who are so fanatically Communist? Is there something about the Communist philosophy that attracts them?"

He said, "Senator McCarthy, if you had been in this work as long as we have been, you would realize that there is something wrong with each one of these individuals. You will find that practically every active Communist is twisted mentally or physically in some way."

Senator McCARTHY. Let me interrupt you there, Mr. Chairman. The "or physically" should not be in there. I was quoting accurately. I do not agree with the "or physically." I think a vast number of people have physical defects. I have some myself. I do not think that makes a Communist. Let's make that clear. I wanted to make that clear as we go through it.

Senator TYDINGS. It is reported in the Record. I have read the Record as it is reported.

The State Department's own security agency recommended the discharge of this employee on January 22, 1946.

Now this is the part to which I would like to draw your attention. I will repeat that.

The State Department's own security agency recommended the discharge of this employee on January 22, 1946. On February 10, 1946, this individual's services were terminated with the State Department. Subsequently, on April 1, 1946, the action discharging this individual was rescinded and he was reinstated in his job in the State Department. In this case a CSA report of September 2, 1947, is replete with information covering—and this is the point—

the attempt of a high State Department official to induce several individuals who had signed affidavits reflecting adversely upon the employee to repudiate their affidavits. The file shows that that high State Department employee even went out and personally contacted the individuals who signed the affidavits and asked them, "Won't you repudiate them?"

This individual, according to the security files of the State Department was a very close associate of active Soviet agents. As to whether he is in the State Department at this time or not I frankly do not know, but in view of the fact that he was reinstated, I assume that he is.

Now, the purpose of reading that is this. Is this man who was in the State Department, this high State Department official whom you allege tried to doctor the records, one of the cases of the 81 that you brought before the Senate, or have you referred to him here only to substantiate the facts in case 14?

Senator McCARTHY. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that you will have to let me go through these cases as I have them documented, and we will get to that case. I think we will have to wait until we get to that case, and I can assure you we will get to it. I have other cases documented for your information this morning. I am going to ask the committee to do this, if I may. As I discuss one case, let's try and stick to that case, and I assure you we will get to all of them without any trouble at all. I will be unable to jump, say, from case 1 to case 72 back to case 58. As of this time I can assure the Chairman that all the information which he wants on case No. 57 will be gotten to him, but I frankly cannot give him that information now, because I haven't arrived at that case this morning. I am sure we won't get to that case this morning.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute. Just a minute. Just a minute! All I am asking you is this. This is a very serious charge——

Senator McCARTHY. Very serious.

Senator TYDINGS. That a high official in the State Department is tampering with the records to protect people who are charged with disloyal activities.

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

✓ Senator TYDINGS. What I would like to know is this: Is he one of the cases that you are going to bring before this committee, or is he just incidental in this case? You can certainly tell me that.

Senator McCARTHY. I will bring his name before the committee and give the committee all the information.

Senator LODGE. I would like to express the hope that Senator McCarthy will get the courtesy everyone gets, of being able to make his own statement in his own way, and then be subject to questioning.

Senator TYDINGS. The only reason I am bringing this out now is, we want to hear Senator McCarthy. We have put this all in the record. I have read over all of these cases three or four times, and studied the possible ramifications of them. I would like to know whether we are to hear this as a collateral matter of proving case 14, or whether this man himself is to be charged with disloyal conduct as a separate case. You can certainly answer that, and then we can leave it.

Senator McCARTHY. I will answer that. I will give the committee all of the information which I have. If the committee decides this man is disloyal, all right. If they decide not, it is up to the committee. There will be no information held back from the committee, and I want to thank the Senator from Massachusetts very much. I would like to be allowed to proceed and present the information in an orderly fashion, and the committee can be sure that any questions they have to ask will certainly be answered. I will answer that question, Senator, that you will be given all the information on the case.

✓ Senator TYDINGS. Let me ask the questions, Senator McCarthy. I am at least charged with the responsibility of conducting this hearing, and I prefer to conduct it as I want it conducted and as the committee wants it conducted, rather than to have you tell me how to conduct it. I will be glad, and we will give you full and free opportunity to present anything you want to present.

✓ All I am asking you now is, do you know the name—I do not want you to tell it—but do you know the name of this particular high State Department official who is allegedly aiding disloyal persons in the State Department? Do you know the name?

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, when we get to case No. 57 I will give you all of the names in that case. No names will be held back.

There are any number of names. I frankly cannot remember the vast number of names.

Senator TYDINGS. You know whether you know the name or not, and you can answer "Yes" or "No" and we can end this right here.

Senator LODGE. I do not think we ought to put the witness in the position of answering "Yes" or "No." I think he has a right to develop his own statement in his own way, and then be subject to questioning, which is a normal procedure here.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to ask him now, Do you or do you not know the name of this high official in the State Department who allegedly committed the very thing that I have read?

Senator MCCARTHY. Senator, I can go back to my office and dig up the name. I am not prepared to testify in case No. 57 this morning. I was sure we would not get to case No. 57. When we get to it, the Senator will have all of the information which I have. I assure him of that. And I hope that then he takes advantage of that and completes the investigation.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, if you will listen to me a moment, I think you and I probably can arrive at an understanding.

Senator MCCARTHY. I am sure we can.

Senator TYDINGS. You have made on the floor of the Senate statements concerning 81 individuals. That is all right. The reason I am interested in this case particularly is that in no other case that I recall, and I read them all several times, is there any allegation that any high official in the State Department is covering up disloyal activities or disloyal persons. This was the only case where that happened.

Now if we have such an individual in the State Department, and we may have—I don't know whether we have or not—the most important thing this committee could do right away to clean out any subversive elements in the State Department is to find out who this man is, and we don't want you to give his name in public, but find out who he is and get him out of there. We don't want to wait until case 57 or 86 or next week. We certainly don't want somebody high up in the State Department who is shielding disloyal persons, fixing their records and asking people to withdraw their comments.

Now if this were just an ordinary matter of one individual, that would be one thing. But I cannot think of anything more important in this whole hearing. Maybe this is true or false, I don't know. But I would like to know if you know the name of this man. Then we will go on and let you testify.

Senator MCCARTHY. A very good question, Mr. Chairman, and I tried to explain to you that I cannot give you information now on case No. 57.

Senator TYDINGS. I said case 14.

Senator MCCARTHY. Let me answer when you ask a question, please.

Let me add this, too. If you are eager to get to that case today, when the testimony ends this morning if you will come to my office I will dig that case out and give you all the names in the file, all the information you want. I cannot give you testimony on case No. 57 because I have prepared cases which I think are more important. I hope the committee will try and take the information which I have. I have it available for you. As I say, if the chairman feels that case No. 57 is urgent, he can come right over to my office as soon as we get through and he and the reporter can take all of the information on case No. 57, but that is all I can tell you on that now.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, we do not want to go to your office. We are conducting a hearing.

Senator McCARTHY. You will have to wait, then, until I get the information over here, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. You are in the position of being the man who occasioned this hearing, and so far as I am concerned in this committee you are going to get one of the most complete investigations ever given in the history of this Republic, so far as my abilities will permit.

Now what I am asking you now is, Do you or do you not now know the name of this man? Don't tell me. Do you now know it?

Senator McCARTHY. At this particular moment, Mr. Chairman, I could not give you the names of half of these.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not ask you if you could give me the names. I asked you if you knew this name.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I cannot give you any information on case 57. Have I made that clear? Case No. 57 will be developed and you will get all the information, every name that is in this file, when I get to that case.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, this is the most unusual procedure I have seen in all the years I have been here. Why cannot the Senator from Wisconsin get the normal treatment and be allowed to make his statement in his own way, and not be cross questioned like this before he has had a chance to present what he has?

Senator TYDINGS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will listen to me, what I have already put in the record are the 81 cases that the Senator from Wisconsin brought to the attention of the Senate and the country on the Senate floor. Now I asked him first whether this particular individual was one of the 81 cases. He did not seem able to tell me that, although I thought it was the most important allegation of disloyalty in the whole 81 cases.

I then, in order to ring it down into focus, asked him if he could tell me the name of this man. I did not want him to tell me here in the open, but I wanted to know if he knew it, because it seemed to me to be a rather odd situation that here, out of all these cases, was a high official of the State Department who was attempting to falsify records, suppress evidence, and protect disloyal persons, and no charge of a separate case, so far as I could find, was made out against him as one of the things we should investigate. So before leaving these 81 cases which I have put in the record this thing attracted my attention, and simply before we closed the Senate part of these hearings I am asking the Senator, Is this man known to him so that he can give us his name?

If that is not a reasonable request, he can say "Yes" or "No" or "I will go get it for you and in executive session I will give it to you."

Senator LODGE. I think it is a perfectly reasonable request, Mr. Chairman, at the proper time.

I think it is the most important request that will be made on this question, but I think this is the wrong time to make it. I think the Senator from Wisconsin ought to have the courtesy that every Senator and every witness has, of making his own presentation in his own way and not to be pulled to pieces before he has had a chance to utter one single consecutive sentence.

Senator GREEN. It seems to me that it is important to proceed in this unusual manner, not only for the reason stated by the chairman but for this reason: We may be asked to call upon the State Department to produce papers or evidence. It may be this very man to whom that might be left. If there is such an individual in the State Department suppressing information, distorting facts, we ought to tend to that before we ask the State Department for any papers.

Senator LODGE. Of course we ought to know it, Senator Green.

Senator GREEN. The question is whether the witness knows the name or whether it was imaginary.

Senator LODGE. We ought to know that man's name; we ought to know the names of all these people in here. All I say is that every witness, whether he is a Senator or whether he is not a Senator, is entitled to make his statement in his own words, and not, the minute he sits down, be subjected to a whole lot of piece-meal questioning, thereby making it impossible for him to make his presentation. I think it is just common courtesy and fairness to let a man make his presentation.

Senator TYDINGS. We will give him all the chance in the world to make his statement, if he will simply say he doesn't know the name of the man or he does know the name of the man. Certainly he can tell us whether he knows the name or does not know it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, why is it so vital at this original jump-off meeting of this committee to know the name of an individual man, when the witness says in due course and in the course of his presentation he will give and disclose to this committee those names? It would seem to me that Senator McCarthy ought to be permitted to present his charges, his allegations, his information, and then this committee can look into them and evaluate which is the most important to first go into.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may answer my distinguished colleague's argument, it is this, that if we are going into the files of the State Department, we ought to have confidence that they are not furnished or handled by an individual against whom such a charge is made as that he is a high officer in the State Department using his power improperly, because the testimony which we may need may come through him, and therefore we ought to clear the decks before we proceed. Not only that, but if these charges are true, that man still has access to the files in the meantime. That is my point.

Senator LODGE. If it were essential to do this so soon, why wasn't it done the minute Senator McCarthy made his speech on the Senate floor? Why did we wait until this particular moment?

Senator TYDINGS. Let me say this: I have no desire to delay Senator McCarthy. I am anxious for him to get on. My first question was, Is this individual who is accused of fraudulent conduct in the State Department to be made a case number?

Now, it seems to me that we can find out if he is, and then that's that. And the second question is, Does the Senator know the name of this man? He can say "Yes" or "No" and that would be that and we could get on with this thing.

Senator LODGE. I hope Senator McCarthy will be allowed to proceed in the normal way.

Senator TYDINGS. I still leave my two questions to be answered. I think that the most important thing before this committee is to clear out men in high places if they are guilty of fraudulent conduct, suppressing evidences of disloyalty in the State Department. There is nothing we are going to do that is more important than that.

Senator LODGE. Of course I favor doing that too. We all want to get rid of all the rotten apples in the State Department. That is the purpose of this investigation, and simply because I object to Senator McCarthy being torn apart this way does not mean I am not interested in getting these men cleared out. But this is a most extraordinary and unusual procedure, to start off in this confused way. It is not the way things are done around here.

Senator TYDINGS. All he has to do is answer two very simple questions: "I don't know the name of this man, Senator," or "I do know the name of this man, Senator. He won't be made a case subject."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How will that help the investigation at this point, if he answers?

Senator LODGE. If he says it at 3 o'clock this afternoon, why isn't that just as good? You have waited all this time before you brought it up.

Senator TYDINGS. This is a public hearing and I do not want too much of this in star chamber.

Senator LODGE. Let's have it in public in Senator McCarthy's own time and own way. Give him the courtesy of letting him make the charges to the best advantage from his viewpoint.

Senator McMAHON. As I understand it, what you want is to know the name of this man as quickly as possible, because it is conceivable, because of what Senator McCarthy said about him, that he could frustrate this investigation. As I understand it, that is the purpose of the question. It is obvious that he hasn't got it with him at the moment. It is too bad that he hasn't, because I, too, would like to know if this rascal is in the State Department, and if that is what he is up to, and I hope that before the end of the day we can have the name of this person, because I think it is pertinent, Senator, at the beginning of this investigation, to drag out this key figure, who is apparently, if your charge is true, right down there with his hand on the throttle, and we ought to know that as quickly as possible.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, this man has been in the State Department, apparently, according to the statement of Senator McCarthy, I think, on the floor, since, let us say, 1947.

Senator TYDINGS. And is still there.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. All right. He has been in the State Department, perhaps—I do not know who he is—since Senator McCarthy made his charges on the floor of the Senate. If he is going to do any dirty work, he has had all the time since 1947, and especially since Senator McCarthy made his formal statement on the floor of the Senate; he has had all that time to do whatever dirty work he might potentially do, and I do not see that another day will add to his potential danger very much over what he may have done in the past, if he is guilty.

Therefore, I think Senator McCarthy ought to be able to proceed in his own way.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute. I was very hopeful that we could get answers to these two questions. You could say "I don't know the name of the man" or "I do know the name of the man," because you have said that you had photostatic copies of the files, as I recall your testimony. And if you said you knew the man, we weren't going to ask you to give us that name this morning. But we just wanted to get at that the very first thing and have that man, if he is in the State Department now, relieved of his duties pending this investigation. We don't want to be charged with having let him roam around the State Department where he can keep on with doctoring the records, if he has access to them.

The first thing I asked you—the other proposition was the second—was, Was he to be made one of the case numbers? That is, was he to be a man against whom you were going to bring charges?

Now certainly it is very hard for the chairman to believe that a charge of this kind would not be a case number and if it is to be a case number, all right; say so. We will forget it. If it is not to be a case number, then we had better look into it right away.

Senator MCCARTHY. May I have the chairman's copy of the resolution?

Senator LODGE. It seems to me that the time to try to get this particular individual was after Senator McCarthy mentioned him on the floor of the Senate, rather than to wait for two whole weeks and bring it up now this morning.

Senator TYDINGS. How could I get him when I don't know his name?

Senator LODGE. At this Roman holiday we are having here this morning it looks to me as though all of a sudden we have gotten interested in this man, when 14 days have gone by within which Senator McCarthy could have been asked the same question, if there was such a terrible urgency about it. I just don't see why we can't have proceedings go along in a normal way. If Senator McCarthy is allowed to make a statement without interruption he will probably reach this case today sometime.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not so certain. He said it was No. 57. He also said he could take up only a certain number of cases today, and we do not know when we are going to meet again. But the point is this: I have asked two simple questions; one, Is this man to be made a case number? Do you know the name of the man? If there is anything of an inquisitorial nature about getting an answer to those two questions before we proceed, I do not know what it is. The answer is very simple, and it seems to me that we could get the answers and dispose of it and go on with something else.

Senator MCCARTHY. May I answer the chairman, and that is, that I will be unable to give him detailed information on case No. 57 this morning. In order to get the complete picture of that case, he will need the files.

Senator TYDINGS. You have the files.

Senator MCCARTHY. Just a minute. I say in order to get the detailed information necessary for the committee to act it will be necessary that you subpoena the files. Let's make this clear when we speak of files. If the committee wants to be sure they have the complete files, it will be necessary to subpoena a number of things.

No. 1, you will have to subpoena the loyalty files, both categories, the part that you will normally be handed plus the sub rosa section.

No. 2, you will have to subpoena the personnel files, and by that I don't mean merely the subsection of the personnel files.

No. 3, in order to check that, it will be necessary for you gentlemen to subpoena the Civil Service Commission files. I understand that the State Department has a loose-leaf file. The Civil Service Commission has a copy of those files, a little more intricate filing system. The FBI also has a copy of that section of the files, which was compiled by the FBI.

Let me say this: Every case that I am giving you gentlemen today, every case that you will hear about, will have in the files derogatory information developed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Merely the top half of the State Department's loyalty file will be meaningless. I assure you of that.

Now this case No. 57, as I have told you three times, Senator, I cannot give you information on that now. If you had called me and told me you wanted that case developed this morning, it would have been developed. The only contact that I have had with the committee was the day the chairman met me on the floor and said, "Come over to the committee at 10:30 Wednesday morning and present whatever you have to us."

I am here ready to do that, Mr. Chairman. As I say, I am not prepared this morning in case No. 57. I am not prepared because the Chair did not indicate he wanted me prepared. I am not prepared, No. 2, because I do not think that is the all-important case. I do think that is a very important case. All of the names—all of the names—will be found in those files that I have suggested you subpoena, so you can get to that very easily.

Now, if the chairman wants case No. 57, I assume he is meeting tomorrow. If he meets tomorrow, if he wants that case developed, it will be developed before the committee. If the committee wants to meet this afternoon, if he wants to come to my office I will try and get him all the information he desires on that case. But this morning I cannot give the chairman the information on case No. 57; period!

Senator TYDINGS. Now let me ask you this: If we were to take a recess for 10 minutes so the Senator could go to his office and refresh his memory on file 57, if that is the file, could he not then come back here and answer the question, to wit, (1), Is this individual against whom these grave charges are made to be the subject of a particular case for investigation, or is he left out of the matter? (2), Does the Senator know his name?

If the Senator will come back and answer those two simple questions, we can go ahead with the procedures. It would only take him 5 or 10 minutes to do it.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, let me say the Chair asks whether I will make him the subject for investigation. I didn't know that I was running this committee. I don't think I am by a long stretch. I intend to submit to the committee information bearing upon the disloyalty, the bad security risks, in the State Department. Then it is up to the committee to investigate those particular cases. The committee has been allowed, I believe, $25,000 or $50,000 to do that. I do not have the investigative staff, I do not have access to the files, to make any complete investigation and make any formal charges. All I intend to do, Mr. Chairman, is to submit to the committee the evidence which I have gathered over painstaking months of work, and I hope that the Chair will allow me to give that tomorrow, and I assure that chairman that there will be no names, nothing kept secret from this committee. He can be sure of that.

I say, if the Chair had informed me that he was particularly interested in case No. 57, that case would have been developed this morning. As it is, it will not be developed this morning because I am not prepared to do so, and after a 10-minute recess I would not be prepared to do so. I have some facts which I hope the committee will allow me to present to them this morning.

Senator TYDINGS. If the Senator will allow me to read just one sentence from case 14, he says, "In his case a CSA"—what is a "CSA"?

Senator MCCARTHY. That is the investigative agency, as I understand it.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't know.

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, when you ask a question, let me finish, please.

I don't understand this lettering system too well. "CSA" I believe is—they change the names of the organizations over there so much I can't keep track of them. It is the investigative agency, or something along that line.

Senator TYDINGS (reading):

In this case a CSA report of September 22, 1947, is replete with information covering the attempt of a high State Department official to induce several individuals who had signed affidavits reflecting adversely upon the employee to repudiate their affidavits. The file shows that that high State Department employee went out and personally contacted the individuals who signed the affidavits and asked them "Won't you repudiate them?"

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, let me say this. I have quoted from the files in 81 cases. The President of the United States has answered merely by saying that McCarthy is lying; it is not true. This committee can very easily determine where the truth lies by saying "We shall get those files." When you get those files, then you will know whether or not every word I have spoken here is true.

Now, when I get to case No. 57 I will give you all of the information which I can on it. That will not be complete. You will have to get four separate files to make sure you have the complete case.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, so far as one member of this committee is concerned, speaking for myself, I do not understand what kind of a game is being played here, and I cannot do my work as a member of this committee if we are going to do this picking and choosing and jumping around all over the place. If we are going to depart from the usual procedure of having him make his charges, then he makes his charges and we investigate the charges, I want to know that. But I do not understand at all what is sought to be achieved by this business of picking first one case and then another case and asking the witness about that before he has even had a chance to make a single connected statement.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge, as I will try to tell you once more—I thought I had made it plain—I have no disposition to interfere with the witness going ahead with any statement he has before him. I put in the record all of the proceedings, and one of the proceedings put in the record was the one to which I have just drawn attention, and in that particular case I found this statement. I simply asked the witness, to make the record complete, whether or not this was one of the 81 cases which he wanted investigated, to wit, that a high State Department official had tried to cook or alter or doctor the evidence, and if he had said "Yes" or "No," that would have been one thing.

Then I asked him if he knew the name of this man, thinking it would be very desirable for the committee to get that man out of this investigation and all contact with the papers at the earliest possible moment.

It seems to me that if those two questions had been answered, and I can see no reason why they could not be answered, either that they are going to be made a case or they are not going to be made a case, and that "I do know the name and will give it to the committee in due time" or "I don't know the name and cannot give it to the committee"—if there is anything captious or inquisitorial or bad about just asking those two questions, to me they are the simplest kind of thing, and they make the record which we have already made complete as to whether this man is one of the 81 cases or whether he is not, and that "I know his name and in due time I will give it to the committee" or "I don't know the name and I can't give it to the committee."

Senator LODGE. If there was such an awful hurry about getting this man, it seems to me the time to have done it would have been immediately after Senator McCarthy raised the point on the floor of the Senate. It is just a question here of orderly procedure.

Senator TRIDING. You do not see things on the floor of the Senate you see when you read them over, Senator Lodge.

Senator LODGE. We can all read the Congressional Record, and, if the thing is there, it is perfectly possible to go to work on it then, instead of waiting for two whole weeks until we have this hearing. It seems to me this is a perfectly extraordinary procedure. I have never seen anything like it, and I have been here since 1937. You have been here longer than I have. But I have been here since 1937, and it is a perfectly amazing procedure to pick No. 57 and then to pick No. 14, and I suppose after you are through playing with that you will pick 23. In the meantime the witness sits here. He has a prepared statement and he isn't given the common, ordinary courtesy of telling his story in his own words. I think it is perfectly amazing. I don't know what the purpose of it is, because I haven't been told.

Senator TRIDING. There is nobody knows what the purpose is except myself, because on my word of honor I have never discussed it with any of my Democratic colleagues or Republican Colleagues. It simply occurred to me that this was about the most serious thing I had run across and I wanted simply to know whether a special case was to be made out against this individual and whether the Senator had his name, and if he had answered those questions "Yes" or "No" he would have been probably a third through with his written statement. If there is any reason why they should not be answered I do not know why the Senator does not say it, or say "Yes, they will be a special case. They ought to be a special case, and in due time I will give the committee his name." I can see no reason why that could not be done. If there is a reason, I have not heard it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in reading over the Congressional Record when these cases and charges were made by Senator McCarthy that there are quite a number of charges of very serious importance in this whole set-up. I would not necessarily pick this case as the most serious, just from reading the record. I think there are others that probably will come in for just as serious consideration. Therefore I see no justification in picking out this particular case for special interrogation at the moment.

And then, another thing, it seems to me that this committee will make the cases, not necessarily Senator McCarthy. Senator McCarthy gives his evidence and gives his conclusions, and furnishes this committee with what he believes to be facts or the sources of the facts for investigation, and then it is up to this committee to differentiate and to examine and to make the cases.

I strongly urge that a perfectly normal, sound procedure is to let Senator McCarthy, who has originated these charges, go ahead and make his charges and canvass his situation, and then let's question him about the individual cases if we want to.

Senator TYDINGS. The Chair will try to comply with the requests of the two Republican members of the committee and he will simply finish this phase of the matter by asking Senator McCarthy, the next time he comes before the committee, to be in a position to answer two questions: First, is the "high State Department official" who allegedly attempted to doctor the loyalty records in the State Department to be made the subject of a special case in the information and charges that he will bring before us? Secondly, does he know the name of this individual, and will he give it to the committee in executive session?

So, with those two things in the Senator's mind, if he will furnish them at the next meeting, I will be glad to have him go ahead with his statement. I am sorry we could not get them this morning.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a question that I would like to suggest to Senator McCarthy at this time which I may ask him later—I don't know—along this same line. I may see fit to ask Senator McCarthy if he believes, based upon what knowledge and investigation he has had, that the high State Department official which has been referred to here might well be, upon the evidence developed, the subject for investigation and further inquiry by this committee. I say I may ask the Senator that question at a later date, when he is prepared to canvass the particular case that involves this allegedly high State Department official.

Senator TYDINGS. I will ask the Senator if he will be good enough to try to bring the answers to those two questions of the committee at the next meeting of the committee. I think I have conformed to his wish to postpone and give him time. I would rather have had them this morning. I think they are very important. I think it is the most important thing in the whole investigation, and I am sorry that, it being so important, he hasn't that evidence available.

Now, Senator, we will be glad to hear your statement.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH R. McCARTHY, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator McCARTHY. I thank the chairman, and so there is no doubt in the committee's mind let me say this: I think this is so important that I do want to stick to the cases as I document them and develop them so there can be no question about the absolute truth of everything presented.

Let me say this also: I hope that every witness' testimony, including mine, is gone through with a fine-tooth comb. There are some very important witnesses down here, and I am very happy the chairman swore them all. We have found, you recall, back in the case of the famous racketeers of Capone that the Government could not get them for their crimes, but they finally discovered a way of getting them. They got them for income tax evasion.

We find where Communists are concerned they are too clever. They work underground too much. It is hard to get them for their criminal activities in connection with espionage, but a way has been found. We are getting them for perjury and putting some of the worst of them away. For that reason I hope every witness who comes here is put under oath and his testimony is gone over with a fine-tooth comb, and if we cannot convict some of them for their disloyal activities, perhaps we can convict them for perjury.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you going to relate to cases in the same order before the Senate, so I can follow them here?

Senator McCARTHY. I intend to give the committee additional cases.

Senator TYDINGS. If you refer to case 1 or case 2, that will be case 1 or case 2 as you referred to it in the Senate?

Senator McCARTHY. When I refer to a case, I will also identify it by the case number if it was referred to in the Senate.

Now, the chairman made a statement that I think he would like to retract, because he said: "McCarthy will be subject to the most thorough investigation in the history of this Republic." I think he meant that the disloyal people in the State Department will be subject to such investigation.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not say "McCarthy." I said this. I said: "This, Senator McCarthy, will be one of the most thorough investigations * * *." I did not make it personal.

Senator McCARTHY. Some people in the room got the impression he said that.

Senator TYDINGS. If they got that impression they got something I did not intend.

Senator McCARTHY. I did not think he did.

Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the committee for its invitation to appear here today, and make available information which has come to me from a variety of sources bearing on the security of our Nation.

Certainly we are all in accord on the premise that every possible precaution should be taken to protect the national welfare and time and experience has shown us that subversive and un-American actions cannot stand the light of day.

To that end, I shall make available to this committee the names and background of persons who are, or have been, in the service of the Government who, by virtue of their background and activities, do not deserve the confidence and trust placed in them.

The fair security risk does not exist. Every man or woman in the employ of the United States Government is a bad or good security risk.

We have had, through our courts, our governmental investigating bodies, our public press and radio, a shocking and frightening series of reports on men and women in high and low places in our Government who transferred their allegiance to a foreign and dangerous ideology.

It is obviously impossible for me, without investigative personnel, funds, and authority and without full and free access to the voluminous and comprehensive files of numerous Government agencies, to give you gentlemen an adequate picture of this distressing situation.

I hope that this distinguished committee, charged by its colleagues in the Senate with a difficult and exhaustive duty, will be able to find a solution to a hitherto insoluble problem.

After the information I have received is collated and examined, it will be turned over to this committee. I shall withhold nothing and shall make available to the committee the information which has been made available to me.

I have carefully studied the standards of loyalty, as set forth by Secretary of State Acheson.

I agree with them wholeheartedly.

I have come to the conclusion, however, that these standards of loyalty are meaningless unless they are applied to all Government employees without exception.

It is the exception that I wish to bring to the attention of the committee.

I am convinced that in a sizable number of cases these standards have not been applied properly.

Mr. Chairman, one bad risk is too many, and a very few of these bad risks might well be disastrous to our national security.

At the outset I think it is important that the committee know that the statement I shall make here today regarding various persons in the employ of the United States Government is based on documented evidence and these documents I will submit to the committee as I go along.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, is it your intention to name individuals against whom you are making charges?

Senator McCARTHY. I intend to name names of those that are thoroughly documented and important, yes. The ones that are not thoroughly documented I intend to give to the committee and have the committee, with its own investigative staff, do the documenting.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, as I understand it, this is the first of a series of cases in which you are going to name names.

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. And you are going to give to the public and to us the digests of the files as you have had them given to you?

Senator McCARTHY. In this first case I am going to give nothing from any files. I am going to present documents.

Senator McMAHON. What documents?

Senator McCARTHY. I am going to give them to you as I go along.

Senator McMAHON. I mean, are they abstracts of the State Department files?

Senator McCARTHY. I will give you the documents, Senator, as I go along. They are photostats, and I can't give you a preview. I have to go through them.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I don't like to be tedious about this, but I do hope—

Senator McMahan. Senator, if you do not mind, I have not yielded.

There is a very important point involved here, Senator, whether you realize it or not, and this is the point where this committee is going to have to consider it, as to whether or not we are going to adopt a procedure whereby charges are made about citizens for all the world to see, based upon material that has been taken from files without an opportunity for the committee to have a full preview of that file.

Now, what I have in mind is the Coplon case and what took place down in the district court. I have no fixed opinion on this at the moment, Senator, but I just want the committee to understand that apparently we are going to open up the files for public inspection. Is that the Senator's idea?

Senator McCarthy. No, no. I have no intention—even if I had the files I would have no intention—of presenting any of the State Department files. I say “even if I had them.” It is not my decision to conduct the hearing in this fashion. The committee has asked for information. I have the documents. The names appear on the documents very clearly. If the committee wants to go into executive session and take this testimony, that is entirely up to the committee. Otherwise I shall have to proceed, and it is impossible to develop this and say “Mr. X,” “Mr. Y,” “Mr. Z.” Do you follow me, Senator?

If the committee wants to go into executive session and hear these cases, let me tell you without mentioning her name that the first case will involve a person in a high State Department position getting about $12,000 a year who belongs to 28 organizations that have been listed by the Attorney General and by various senatorial and House committees as subversive or disloyal—28 different organizations. I have the documents to show that she has belonged to those 28 subversive organizations—not organizations that I say are subversive, but organizations that the Attorney General has said are subversive, plus senatorial and House committees.

In presenting these documents, I think it is impossible to dismiss or hide this individual's name. I think this is very important. We will want to ask, for example, Mr. Acheson why he keeps in a high position, a $12,000-a-year position, someone who belongs to 28 subversive organizations. She may, you understand, belong to 10 or 12 others. I have the documents to show the membership in 28.

I have no desire whatsoever to make this name public, but the committee has called me here. They say, “Give us information,” and I can't give this information by referring to X, Y, and Z.

Senator Tamm. I think, Senator McMahan, your question is a proper one, but I believe the better way to handle it would be when we get to a document to ask for a description of it, et cetera, rather than to try to make a blanket ruling here where we might have to amend it over and over again. Do you agree with that, Senator? In other words, postponing the time until the Senator gets to the document, and then we can ascertain whether or not it is a State Department matter or loyalty file or FBI file, or what the matter may be.

I don't think we want to get in the position of denying the witness any proper testimony that he might deliver.

Senator McMAHON. It is a very difficult question, and I would defer to you as chairman of this committee on this matter of procedure. The only thing that disturbs me is this: Let us assume that the Senator charges this specific person what is true and is determined to be true. Then there is certainly no reason why the public should not be advised of the fact that she is what he says she is.

Contrariwise, let us assume, hypothetically, that it turns out on an investigation that she is completely innocent of the charges that are made. Senator, you and I know that that verdict will be on page 27 or 47, if there are 47 pages, but the charges will be on page 1.

Senator McCARTHY. I must say I heartily agree with you.

Senator McMAHON. And we must be careful, it seems to me, that in our desire to do a thorough job of investigation here and bring to book—and they should be brought to book—any persons who do not belong in the Government of the United States, not, in the process of doing that, to do a great injustice to decent American citizens.

Senator McCARTHY. May I say that I heartily agree with the Senator. On the Senate floor I said that I would not divulge any names. I said I hoped any names that were divulged would be developed in executive session. Mr. Lucas, who is the leader of the majority party, demanded time after time on the Senate floor and publicly that I divulge names. I am now before the committee. In order to present the case I must give the names, otherwise I cannot intelligibly present it. If the committee desires to go into executive session, that is a decision that the committee and not I can make, but if I am to testify, I say it is impossible to do it without divulging names.

Senator LONGE. Mr. Chairman, may I get recognized now? This committee unanimously voted to hold public hearings. That was our decision. Senator McCarthy now has the opportunity to name names. That is his decision. If he wants to give this information in private, then we have to decide whether we will hear them or not. Those issues were all settled when we had our meeting last week. I do not understand why Senator McCarthy cannot have the opportunity to present his statement and not be compelled to act as though he were in some sort of a kangaroo court—"Answer 'Yes' or 'No'" and that sort of thing. It almost looks as though there was an attempt to rattle him. We ought to let him make his statement, and then, if he has facts with him, we will investigate the facts. It seems to me just as simple as that.

Senator TRYNGAS. Gentlemen of the committee, so far as the Chair is concerned about this, I think we ought to leave pretty well the manner of presenting the evidence up to Senator McCarthy. Senator, at any time that you feel you want to go into executive session with part of this testimony, if you will indicate that I will call the committee right here together and we will see what the situation is. If any member of the committee at any time thinks that the matter that is being made public should be heard in executive session, he will indicate that to me. We will go into a huddle and come out with a decision on that. In the meantime, proceed.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me make my position clear. I personally do not favor presenting names, no matter how conclusive the evidence is. The committee has called me this morning, and in order to intelligibly present this information I must give the names. I think this should be in executive session. I think it would be better. However, I am here. The committee has voted to hold open sessions, so I shall proceed.

Let us take the case of Dor——

Senator TYDINGS. I told you when I invited you to testify that you could testify in any manner you saw fit. If it is your preference to give these names in executive session we will be very glad to have your wishes acceded to. If it is your desire to give them in open session, that is your responsibility. Now, if you will indicate how you want to proceed, the committee will take it under advisement and give you an answer in 2 minutes.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say this first case has been handed to the press already. I think we will have to proceed with this one in open session. When we get to the next case, let us consider it.

Let us take the case of Dorothy Kenyon.

Senator TYDINGS. Is that one of the cases your brought up on the Senate floor?

Senator McCARTHY. This is not.

Senator TYDINGS. I see. Go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. This lady, according to the latest issue of the official registry of the United States Government, is on the Commission on the Status of Women, United States Member on the Commissions of the Economic and Social Council, United States Mission to the United Nations, Department of State. Her salary is $12,000 per year.

And I now present to the chairman of the committee the documentation of that part of my testimony.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you hold that a minute until I find whether it is listed here in the Register or not.

Senator McCARTHY. This lady has been affiliated with at least 28 Communist-front organizations, all of which have been declared subversive by an official Government agency. Nine of the 28 have been cited as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States, and I might say that her record of belonging to these subversive organizations dates back 10 or 15 years. It is not something new.

On February 21, 1940, Miss Kenyon signed a protest under the auspices of the Veterans of Abraham Lincoln Brigade condemning the war hysteria "being whipped up by the Roosevelt administration."

Exhibit marked "1" I now hand the committee. This organization has been cited as subversive by the congressional House Committee on Un-American Activities, the California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General of the United States.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you let us read that a minute. Is her name marked?

Senator McCARTHY. I think you will find her name marked.

Senator TYDINGS. I have it. It isn't marked. We will mark it.

Let me read, Senator, for the record, the caption:

The following outstanding Americans, writers, poets, playwrights, educators, judges, critics, and public officials signed the letter to President Roosevelt and Attorney General Jackson protesting the attacks upon the Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade and condemning the war hysteria now being whipped up by the Roosevelt administration.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I might say that this is the only photostat that I have, and I do not like to have it out of my possession.

If the committee wants these documents, I wish they would arrange with me to have them photostated so they may have a photostatic copy of the document.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, we will have to file all of the exhibits in the record that you give publicly, and I will instruct the stenographer to guard these exhibits, and when the committee finishes its deliberations to return them to you. Is that all right?

Senator MCCARTHY. May I ask one other thing, Mr. Chairman. This is my only copy. I wonder if the Chairman would not instruct the clerk to have photostats made so that my file may be complete.

Senator McMAHON. Could I ask a question on that?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, this is a clip from the Daily Worker, February 21, 1940, and it is entitled "Signers of Protest."

Senator MCCARTHY. That's right.

Senator McMAHON. Of course, the list is a very lengthy one. As to some of the people on this list, I see one or two that I know casually myself. The description of the petition that was signed is the Daily Worker's description, and it does not appear to be a copy of the petition that these people signed. Is the Senator aware of that?

Senator MCCARTHY. I think the Senator has stated it correctly.

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

Well, knowing the Daily Worker and its genius, from the copies that I have seen, for misrepresentation, I am curious as to just what the petition said. You haven't got that with you, have you?

Senator MCCARTHY. I am sure when the Senator sees the 28 documents he will no longer be skeptical.

Senator McMAHON. It is not a question of that. I am curious as to what they did sign. It may be that in this instance the Daily Worker is telling the truth as to what they signed, do you see? But the Senator has not got the actual petition that they signed?

Senator MCCARTHY. That is correct. That is a copy of the petition run in the Daily Worker as a paid ad, and advertised as having been run by these people.

Senator TYDINGS. Does the Senator know where we could get the original, so we could see what the petition purported to advocate?

Senator MCCARTHY. I think the committee must hire a competent staff to run anything down they care to run down.

Senator TYDINGS. I say, does the Senator have any idea of where we might search for this particular item, so we can save time in finding it?

Senator MCCARTHY. There are many places the Senator could search. I do not know where he could find it.

Senator TYDINGS. The question that the Senator does not answer, apparently, is that the Senator has no information. I am simply trying to find out where we could get it in the quickest possible time.

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not have the original petition. I do not know where it is.

Senator McMAHON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we should, as quickly as possible, get this petition, for this reason, that there are in this list about 100 names, and some of them bear good reputations. Now, to characterize them in a record of the Senate of the United States just on the basis of a clip from the Daily Worker is something that perhaps they are not entitled to either, so I do hope that we can get what they really signed.

Senator McCARTHY. I hope I have made it clear that I also hope that the committee proceeds to develop the situation.

Senator TYDINGS. Before the Senator proceeds, without any reflection on the press, newspaper accounts are not always the best evidence. The petition itself, as the Senator, who has been an eminent judge, would know, would be the best evidence, but we have a pretty wide latitude in these committees and we can look that phase of the matter over afterward.

Senator McCARTHY. Thank you.

In signing this statement Miss Kenyon collaborated with such well-known Communists as Paul Robeson, Bernard J. Stern, Albert Maltz, Anna Louise Strong, William Gropper, Langston Hughes, and Harry F. Ward.

Miss Kenyon is presently the sponsor of the National Council of American Soviet Friendship. This organization has been declared subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee, the California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General.

Understand, when I say "presently," some of this information may be 6 months old. It is the best information, and I have no information that it has been withdrawn.

On November 16, 1948, Miss Kenyon as a member of the board of sponsors of this officially declared subversive organization welcomed the Red Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, at a rally in Madison Square Garden in the city of New York. Only a few days ago the State Department refused to permit the Dean of Canterbury to enter the United States because of his Communist record.

For the guidance of the committee I hand you herewith exhibit 2, which fully documents Miss Kenyon's affiliation with the National Council of American Soviet Friendship.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, that National Council of American Soviet Friendship had quite a vogue when we were cobelligerents back during the war days. I may be in error, but I think that there were a couple of Senators of the United States who are still members of this body who were members of that organization at the time. Are you aware of that?

Senator McCARTHY. The Senator is talking about war days. This document is dated late 1948, November 16, 1948. And, Senator, I may say this, that I have not declared these organizations subversive. I tell you in each instance which official bodies have. In this case it was declared subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee, the California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General.

I assume when they declared this organization subversive they did it upon very excellent and competent proof, so when I refer to these subversive organizations I am not saying that I myself have determined whether or not they are subversive.

Senator McMAHON. I did not assert that you did. I just asked you whether or not it is not a fact that a couple of the Senators had been members of the National Council of American Soviet Friendship. I would doubt, of course, that it was as late, though, as November 16, 1948, and you do point out that she was a member of the Board on that date.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, going back to the first exhibit that you introduced, I see some names on here that I think it only fair ought to be associated with the evidence you have given. I see such names as Ernest Hemingway, Dr. Harold Urey, the man who was in the forefront of development of the atomic bomb for the United States, and several others I recognize by reputation, some of them holding public office. I believe here is one man, the Honorable Stanley Isaacs; my recollection is that he holds an office in New York State of some kind. So that there is rather a large mixture of names that are pretty prominent.

Senator McCARTHY. This is exhibit 2, Mr. Chairman. It is a letter on the letterhead of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, and has a list of the sponsors, Kenyon's name being one of the list of sponsors. The letter reads as follows—or would the chairman rather see it before I read it?

Senator TYDINGS. This is 2?

Senator McCARTHY (reading):

On Monday evening, December 13, the Very Reverend Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, and foremost leader in the democratic movement for world peace, speaks at Madison Square Garden. This eminent churchman, who will climax a month's tour of the United States with this rally, will present his impressions of the American peace movement as it relates to the peace forces of England and the continent. He will also report on his recent observations of conditions in eastern Europe and his personal conversations with the leaders of the new democracies.

We feel it is a rare privilege, indeed, for us to be able to present the dean in the first significant rally to follow the elections. We know you will appreciate the importance of forcefully demonstrating, particularly before the new congressional session, the people's will for peace through cooperation and friendship with the Soviet Union.

The Ambassador from the Soviet Union, His Excellency Mr. Alexander S. Panyushkin, will address the meeting. The meeting will also feature Paul Robeson, other well-known speakers, and a program of entertainment.

As you may recollect, thousands were turned away from the Garden on the occasion of the dean's last visit here in 1945. Thus, to insure you proper accommodations, we are enclosing an advance ticket order blank.

Senator TYDINGS. What was the date of that?

Senator McCARTHY. This is November 16, 1948. —

Won't you plan to attend this rally for peace and reserve seats for yourself and your friends?

I point out that Miss Kenyon was not merely a member of this organization but one of the sponsors, and I hand the Chair the exhibit labeled "2."

Senator TYDINGS. Will you pause a moment there, Senator, until we look at the document?

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, while the balance of the committee are looking at the document, may I inquire as to how long the committee intends to remain in session today?

Senator TYDINGS. How long would you like us to remain?

Senator McCARTHY. I frankly had hoped to develop three or four cases. However, I do want to be on the floor today, and my thought is that we should certainly develop more than we have now, but I would not like to stay away more than an hour.

Senator TYDINGS. I have conferred with the members of the committee, and most of them seem to be of the opinion that we could continue for another half hour. Their engagements are such that at that time they won't be able to remain.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I might suggest that Senator McCarthy probably can get through with his presentation and the presentation of his exhibits which he alleges support his position if we just let him go.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes; but Senator, we want to get all the evidence that is pertinent as we go along. We do not want to get it lopsided. We want to make sure that everything is weighed properly and proper connotations are put on it.

Senator McCARTHY. May I ask the Chair, so I may make preparations, is it planned that we will have daily hearings?

Senator TYDINGS. We will meet tomorrow morning at 10:30, and the only possible change I can see to that would be that the Senate would agree to some unanimous-consent agreement during the day to vote prior to 12 o'clock. We will certainly run from 10:30 to 12, and maybe longer, if we are not confronted with a vote in the Senate.

Tomorrow I hope you will have the answers to those two questions, Senator McCarthy.

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure the Chair will be satisfied with the information he gets.

Senator GREEN. With regard to this exhibit that has been put in as evidence, I would like to draw attention to some of the names on these sponsors of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., which is considered such a Communist group. Here are the Honorable Arthur Capper—

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Capper?

Senator GREEN. Yes. The Honorable Claude Pepper; the Honorable Elbert D. Thomas; the Honorable Joseph E. Davies, and a great many other similar names.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There are a great many others that the Senator could read too, off that list.

Senator GREEN. If there are, I would like for you to read them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not want to take the time. That is an exhibit the Senator has put in to substantiate the fact that the person he alleges was a sponsor of an organization, and it seems to me we are wasting time.

Senator GREEN. And the names on it are significant.

Senator TYDINGS. No exhibit can be given in part under any rules of evidence that I have ever heard of, either before a Senate committee or anything else. You have to put it all in or keep it all out.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is what he has offered.

Senator TYDINGS. The Senator has read a letter and he has read one name. I am going to take the liberty of reading all the names:

Louis Adamic, a candidate for the Senate in Illinois; George F. Addes; Maxwell Anderson, playwright; John Taylor Arms; Max Bedecht; Mrs. Alice S. Beleston; Dr. Henry Lambert Bibby; Mrs. Louis Bloch; Mrs. Anita Block; Simon Breines; Prof. E. W. Burgess; Hon. Arthur Capper. Was he a United States Senator at the time this was held? Charles Chaplin; Hon. John M. Coffee; Dr. Henry S. Coffin; Aaron Copland; Norman Corwin; Jo Davidson; Hon. Joseph E. Davies; Dr. Herbert John Davis; Hon. Hugh DeLacy, Member of Congress; Dr. Stephen Duggan; Prof. Albert Einstein; Max Epstein; Dr. Mildred Fairchild; Dr. Robert D. Feild; Lion Feuchtwanger; the Reverend Joseph F. Fletcher; Homer Folks; Dr. W.

Horsley Gantt; Dr. Caleb F. Gates, Jr.; Dean Christian Gauss; Ben Gold; Dr. Mortimer Graves; Dr. Harry Grundfest.

Also Dr. Alice Hamilton; Lillian Hellman; Mrs. Thomas N. Hepburn; Dr. Leslie Pinckney Hill; Prof. William Ernest Hocking; Dr. Walter M. Horton; Langston Hughes; Dr. Walter Hullihen; Hon. Stanley M. Isaacs; Dr. Millard H. Jencks; Prof. Howard Mumford Jones; Helen Keller; Rockwell Kent; Dorothy Kenyon; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, leader of one of the great orchestras, I believe; Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont; William W. Lancaster; Dr. Emil Lengyel; John F. Lewis, Jr.; Prof. Robert S. Lynd; Clifford T. McAvoy; Judge Lois Mary McBride; Maurice Maeterlinck; Fritz Mahler; Dr. Thomas Mann; Frank X. Martel; Dr. Kirtley F. Mather; Lewis Merrill; Dr. George R. Minot; Mrs. Lucy Sprague Mitchell; Dr. Wesley C. Mitchell; Charles Michael Mitzell; Pierre Monteux; Mme. Pierre Monteux; Bishop Arthur W. Moulton; Hon. James E. Murray, United States Senator; Dr. Philip C. Nash; Dr. Robert Hastings Nichols; Eugene O'Neill; Dr. Marion Edwards Park; Dr. Frederick Douglas Patterson; Bishop Malcom E. Peabody; Hon. Claude Pepper, United States Senator; Prof. Ralph Barton Perry; Dr. E. C. Peters; Dr. John P. Peters; Henry W. Pope; Michael Quill; Carl Randau.

Also Anton Refregier; Elmer Rice; Wallingford Riegger; Paul Robeson; Col. Raymond Robins; Earl Robinson; Reid Robinson; Harold J. Rome; Joseph A. Rosen; Joseph A. Salerno; Miles M. Sherover; Raymond P. Sloan; Dr. P. A. Sorokin; Maxwell S. Stewart; Leopold Stokowski, leader of an orchestra; Raymond Swing, radio commentator; Genevieve Tabouis; Hon. Elbert D. Thomas; R. J. Thomas; Dr. Max Thorek; S. A. Trone; Philip H. Van Gelder; R. E. Van Horn; Professor George Vernadsky; Bishop W. J. Walls; Dr. Harry F. Ward; Leroy Waterman; Max Weber; Dr. Henry N. Wieman; Dr. C. C. Williams; Hon. James H. Wolfe; Dr. Max Yergan; Dean Mary Yost; Dr. J. J. Zmrhal; Leane Zugsmith.

I think that they all ought to be in there, so that we can judge from the association the full purport of the letter and the inference.

Senator LODGE. Before you go on, Mr. Chairman, I want to say once again that I am for having questions and I am for having the statements with the proper connotations and proper evaluation, but I think to interrupt the witness every single time and break up his continuity and destroy the flow of his argument, the way we are doing, is not the right procedure.

Senator TYDINGS. Just let me say something here in answer to that, Senator Lodge. I have never in my life been connected with any senatorial, legal, or other inquiry where an exhibit could be placed in evidence and only parts of it read. It is not only fair, it is incumbent upon this committee that the whole exhibit be placed before the press of the country if this is an open hearing, and not just the parts of it that may serve some ulterior motive.

Senator LODGE. Of course if we read the list on every single letter-head of every single thing that is put in here, we will be here until Christmas. I am not objecting to putting in the complete documents in the record; of course I am not objecting to that. I am objecting to this constant interruption of the witness so that he never gets a fair shake, that's all.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is the only proper thing for us to do to interrupt. Here the witness has introduced a document, and he ended up his introduction by introducing the document as evidence of the Communist affiliations of Miss Kenyon. He ends up by saying, "other well-known Communists sponsoring the event were Howard Fast, Saul Mills, Ella Winter, John Howard Lawson, and Langston Hughes," and I wanted to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks it is fair to pick out those names and omit the other names that were read.

Senator LODGE. I think the time to do that is after Senator McCarthy has made his statement. Then we can each one go at him. That is the way it has been done here ever since I have been here. I think the immemorial practice is to let the witness make a statement and then the chairman asks the senior man to ask questions, and then the senior man on the other side, and then he finally comes down to the low man on the totem pole and everybody has his chance to ask questions. That is the way it has always been done. For some reason that has not been made clear to me, whether it is to rattle or whether it is to confuse or something, I do not know, we have an entirely different procedure today.

Senator GREEN. What the witness is attempting to do is to give the impression of a certain instrument—I do not mean to say it is intentional, but the result of the names that he has selected gives a very false impression of the instrument.

Senator LODGE. And the Senator from Rhode Island is perfectly capable of clearing that point up. He is a very eloquent man. He is not a Philadelphia lawyer, he is a Providence lawyer, and when his time comes to question he can clear all those points up, and that is the orderly way to do it from the standpoint of the committee, from the standpoint of the presentation in the press, and from the standpoint of fairness to the witness.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge, if I may say this, if this were a hearing in executive session, that would be one thing, but these charges are going out all over the country in the press and they ought to go out with all of the evidence available, and not just selected parts of it. If it does not go out in that status before the people of the country, then the people cannot draw the full conclusion that the evidence presented warrants, and I think it has to go that way or it should not go at all, if we are going to have open hearings.

Senator GREEN. We are not attempting to introduce other evidence to contradict the witness or to supplement it. All we want is the full statement, and not extracts.

Senator LODGE. All the evidence is not available. I quite agree with the chairman and with Senator Green that it would be most unfortunate if reputations of innocent persons were in any way besmirched, but we cannot in any possible way clear up the wrong that has been done on the spur of the moment. The time to do that is after the Senator has made his charges. Then we investigate the charges. That is the way to proceed.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, as was brought out in the introductory discussion of this matter, this is a public meeting and charges go out and are spread all over the country in the newspapers, and if at the time a mistaken summary of a document is given, the correct summary won't catch up with it at all. The matter will be ancient history and newspapers won't print it. The eloquent Senator from Massachusetts knows as a newspaperman that that is the fact, so it is important to have that false impression removed at the time the list of these people is given out to the press.

Senator LODGE. I also know that there are none of us here in this committee who have the information at hand to correct any misstatements that the witness may make.

Senator GREEN. The witness has given it to us to be given to the public.

Senator TYDINGS. Now that the Chair is overruled, all documents that are submitted will be read in full hereafter so that the people of the country may get all the evidence at the time.

Senator LODGE. That is perfectly all right with me. I have no objection to the documents that the witness puts in being read in full. What I object to is this constant interruption and hacking away at him all the time so he does not get a chance to make his argument.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just to clear up a statement of the chairman, the Senator from Wisconsin just submitted the Official Register of the United States, 1949, containing on page 490 the name of Dorothy Kenyon, Commission on the Status of Women, New York; salary and compensation, $12,000 a year. Does the chairman intend to read the entire Official Register of the United States every time the Senator from Wisconsin wants to produce a name or something to prove a specific point?

Senator TYDINGS. I will read into the record the names of all the people on this Commission. I do not see any need to go and put all the consuls from Shanghai to Singapore on the one hand, and Iceland to some other place, in the record.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But, Mr. Chairman, the witness only introduced that to indicate a position of employment of a particular individual.

Senator TYDINGS. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The other names are not involved one way or another, other than the allegation that she was employed by the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. And there is no allegation here that this is a Communist-front organization, but there was an allegation in the other case that that was a Communist-front organization, and therefore we ought to see who is in it, which is an entirely different matter.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I just want to know whether the chairman is going to read the entire Register.

Senator TYDINGS. I would also draw the observation that the gentlemen on the right of me are now consuming more time than are the gentlemen on the left.

Senator LODGE. I deny that. I would like to have my comments drawn up against those of the chairman, and we will find out.

Senator TYDINGS. You should not complain and then adopt the very thing you are complaining about.

Senator LODGE. I am not doing that. No, I am not doing that.

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I think as I give the documents showing the Communist-front organizations that this individual has belonged to, you will find in almost rather a sizable number the names of some fine individuals. I think that it is possible that you yourself may be duped into joining, or having your name used on some Communist-front organization. The reason I submit the vast number is that it is impossible for any normal individual, of normal intelligence, to be so deceived that they can act as sponsors for 28 different Communist-front organizations. I might say that I personally would not be caught dead belonging to any one of the 28.

Senator TYDINGS. That is opinion, Senator. We would like to have the evidence and the facts, and we can judge more from them than we can from opinions. We will have to form the opinions.

Senator LODGE. Surely the Senator can express opinions.

✓ Senator TYDINGS. If we are going to condemn people on opinion evidence, there won't be many people left in the end.

Senator LODGE. If we are going to prevent the Senator from expressing opinions, the character of this whole body is going to change.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thank the Senator.

I might say that one of the grounds for dismissal of an employee who has top-secret clearance is his associations. As the Senator knows, if he is a banker and he is looking for a cashier and he finds that Mr. Smith chums with safecrackers, bookies, gamblers, cheats, and rogues, he won't hire Mr. Smith as a cashier, and that is the theory that I assume our State Department goes upon. If they find these individuals with unusual connections, a long trend, they can assume that they are unsafe risks. The Secretary has so stated, I believe.

In sponsoring the Red Dean of Canterbury's appearance in the United States a year and a half ago Miss Kenyon collaborated with such pro-Communists as Ben Gold, the avowed Communist leader of the Fur Workers Union, and Paul Robeson.

Here we have the singular situation of the Department of State refusing to admit one of the world's most prominent radical Communist churchmen and on the other hand one of the Department's prominent officials welcoming and sponsoring him to this country.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, as though perhaps the State Department's left hand does not know what the other hand is doing; or perhaps put it the other way around. The right hand does not know what the left hand is doing.

I should now like to hand the committee exhibit 3. This is a cordial invitation to attend a dinner and presentation of the first annual award of the American Russian Institute to President Franklin Roosevelt for "Furthering American-Soviet Relations."

The event occurred on May 7, 1946, at 6:30 o'clock in the evening in the grand ball room of the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York City. The dinner cost $7.50 a plate.

The American Russian Institute has been cited as subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee, California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General.

Senator McMAHON. On what date, Senator?

Senator MCCARTHY. What date were they cited?

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not have the dates of the citation. I think the Senator will recall as well as I do the date the Attorney General put out his list.

Senator TYDINGS. Was this before or after the Attorney General put out his list?

Senator McMAHON. That is quite material. You see Senator Lodge, this is a perfect illustration of the value of a question at the proper time to clear up a statement of fact. Here is a dinner which is held under date of May 7, 1946, in New York City. The Senator proceeds to say that the organization that sponsored it was cited as subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee, the California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General. Now, it is quite conceivable that a person would have been a sponsor on May 7, 1946, and have refused to have been a sponsor a year or a year and a half later, after the American Russian Institute had been denominated as being subversive. There is a perfect illustration of the value of questioning any witness, whether he be a Senator or anybody else, in order to try to convey what the truth of the matter is.

I think it is regrettable, Senator, that you have not that information with you at the present time. I shall secure it and put it in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin sees the wisdom of what the Senator from Connecticut has so pertinently brought out—the great difference that there might be in a case like this, of an innocent person joining what he thought was a worth-while organization or movement or occasion or ceremony on the one hand, thinking there was nothing subversive about it, and who learns later that it is denominated as a subversive organization.

Now, certainly, don't we owe it to these people whose names we are throwing about the country, on the radio and in the press and in magazines and in the newspapers, to at least give them, those who have acted in good faith and with purely patriotic motives, the right to have the testimony surrounded by facts before it is given, so that we do not do infinite harm to people who, I am sure the Senator himself in some cases would say, are not Communists?

Senator LODGE. Before the witness answer that, my able friend from Connecticut addressed me. I do not agree with him at all that this is an example of why it is a good thing to interrupt the witness. It is perfectly possible to make a note of the fact that he did not mention the date and later on bring it out. In fact, I think that is a more effective way to do it. These questions of dates, I noted that myself and I made a note of it to ask the Senator from Wisconsin later, when my turn came to ask questions.

All I want to do is not to break the continuity of the argument. Then let him make the argument, and those who want to try to tear the argument down will have a chance to do it.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me say I thought I was speaking for every member of the committee when I said that I hoped we could conduct this investigation so that it would not be labeled either a witch hunt or a whitewash. In order to do that, if we are going to live up to that formula, it seems to me, if we allow a lot of statements to go in the record that are subject to instantaneous false impressions and conclusions, that we may not have intended to conduct a witch hunt but we are getting pretty close over on the other barrier.

I have no desire to shut off any testimony that the Senator from Wisconsin has, but I would caution him that when he makes a statement he ought to be able to supply the dates so that false impressions and false conclusions cannot be drawn from his testimony, which, even though we corrected it later, might not reach the press and the radio, and I simply say that that is just justice, nothing more than simple justice.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I can say right now that the proceedings as far as they have gone this morning, if the proceedings as patterned this morning are to continue throughout this investigation, it is heading for a label of some kind, and I may have to name it.

Senator TYDINGS. I agree with you thoroughly, and I could name it too.

Senator MCCARTHY. The Chair just stated that he thought those names should not be all bandied about the country. I have pointed out to the Chair, and I believe this was pointed out by the Attorney General, that in almost any one of these organizations labeled subversive you will find from time to time competent people's names listed. You will not find one individual belonging to 25 or 30.

Senator TYDINGS. That is drawing a conclusion, Senator.

Senator MCCARTHY. When the Senator says we shall not put all these names out to the country, it is the Senator who is reading them. I am merely reading the name of this individual who belongs to 28 organizations that have been listed as subversive by the Attorney General, by the House committee, and other official bodies. Let us make it clear that you are referring to all of these names going out. I am not putting those names out; that is the chairman.

Along with the lady sponsoring this dinner appeared Lee Pressman, who has been named as a member of the Communist underground cell in the Government by Whitaker Chambers. Other well-known Communists sponsoring the event were Howard Fast, Saul Mills, Ella Winter, John Howard Lawson, and Langston Hughes.

Senator GREEN. There, I think that is a selected list that you have made up, is it not?

Senator MCCARTHY. The present executive director of this subversive organization is Henry H. Collins, late of the State Department, who has been named by Whitaker Chambers as a member of the Communist spy ring operating in the Federal Government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Didn't you skip a paragraph?

Senator MCCARTHY. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have another paragraph, following the list of names the Senator read in. I don't know whether the Senator intended to leave the paragraph out or not, or whether I have an accurate copy.

Senator MCCARTHY. I beg your pardon. The Senator from Rhode Island interrupted, and I lost my place.

Other well-known Communists sponsoring the event were Howard Fast, Saul Mills, Ella Winter, John Howard Lawson, and Langston Hughes.

Although I shall discuss the unusual affinity of Mr. Phillip C. Jessup, of the State Department, for Communist causes later in this inquiry, I think it pertinent to note that this gentleman now formulating top-flight policy in the Far East affecting half the civilized world was also a sponsor of the American Russian Institute.

The present executive director of this subversive organization is Henry H. Collins, late of the State Department, who has been named by Whitaker Chambers as a member of the Communist spy ring operating in the Federal Government. It was in the home of Mr. Collins, according to Chambers, that some of the microfilms of secret State Department documents were made. Collins was also one of those who refused to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee as to whether or not he was a Communist Party member.

The Conference on Pan American Democracy has been declared to be a subversive Communist organization by the Attorney General of the United States, the House Un-American Activities Committee, and the California Un-American Activities Committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, would you put in the dates there, if you have them?

Senator McCARTHY. I think much of the material the Chair wants will have to be developed by the committee. I just cannot afford to hire the investigators to present a court case to the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. I thought you might have it and it would save us work; that is all.

Senator McCARTHY. I would rather the committee saved me some work.

Senator TYDINGS. You are making charges—

Senator McCARTHY. I am not making charges. I am giving the committee information of individuals who appear to all the rules of common sense as being very bad security risks. I am giving the committee information which I think they are bound to follow under the Senate mandate.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me follow you there.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me finish, Mr. Chairman. Let's have an agreement. When you ask a question, let me finish my answer, will you?

The Senate unanimously gave this committee a mandate. I think that mandate is to develop any information which on its face makes it appear that the individual concerned is a bad security risk. And I frankly do not—let's make this clear—have the stuff to take each of the cases and develop it to the point of making a court case. You understand that.

Senator TYDINGS. You have left the committee in a rather embarrassing position, because the resolution which brings us here and which brings you here reads as follows:

In the conduct of this study and investigation, the committee is directed to procure by subpoena and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of all Government employees in the Department of State and other such agencies against whom charges have been heard.

Without somebody makes a charge, or you call it a charge, what do we do then? How do we get the records? We are only authorized to get them, by the Senate language, if you or somebody makes a charge. You say you are not making any charge. We are in a pretty small position to issue a subpoena.

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, let me say this. If there is anything you want me to do to make it possible for you to get those subpoenas, I will do it. I am not in a position to file any formal charges. What you mean by a charge I do not know. If you want me to charge that from the evidence it appears that this woman is an extremely bad security risk, that she should not be in the State Department 1 hour, I will be glad to say that. If you tell me what you mean by a charge, what you want me to do so that you will under this mandate be entitled to say to the President, "We want those files, all of them," you may be sure I will do that.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, let me say to you that I think all that you have said up to now are charges, and you have given information that you have to support those charges as you see it. I would call them charges. Certainly we are not going to have an investigation without some charges being made, and the Senate itself put the language in. Fortunately I was not there the night the resolution was adopted. I only inherited it, and I have read it over six or eight times. I think that we are perfectly at liberty to get these files by any proper method that we can devise, because of what you are testifying. But I would label them charges, because I am sure you are charging these people with being either Communists or allied with Communists. You called it a Communist spy ring in the State Department, and I think all those things are charges, and I think it is our duty to investigate it. I think they are charges.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I take it the witness is actually charging that the people to whom he refers in these outlines of information are bad security risks. I take it the Senator is making that charge.

Senator MCCARTHY. I am convinced of that. I think any normal man would be convinced of that. If I must do something in addition to that to make it possible for you to get the files, you can be sure I will do it.

Senator TYDINGS. I will consider that what you said are charges.

Senator MCCARTHY. I will say before handing you this next document that it is difficult for me to understand the apparent perplexity of my Democratic colleagues on the committee with reference to the names that appear on these documents. I know the Senators are all aware of the fact that if the Communists did not enlist well-meaning and prominent persons in every phase of American life it would not be a front organization. When the FBI turned over the results of its probe of these front organizations to the Attorney General, it was well known that the names of prominent and reputable citizens were intermingled with the Communists and pro-Communists. Despite this knowledge he proceeded to declare without equivocation these organizations that I have specified as Communist front and as subversive and therefore dangerous to our national security; and I might say that the significance of these documents, Mr. Chairman, is not that this woman belongs to one organization that the Attorney General has said is subversive, but her long chain of activity starting from, I believe the first document is 1935, right up to date.

Senator TYDINGS. To reassure you, I do not know of anything you have said so far that we should not investigate.

Senator MCCARTHY. Thank you.

Senator McMAHON. I gather, then, from what you have just said, that just because a person's name is on the list of sponsors of an organization which has been declared as—what is the language, "subversive"?

Senator MCCARTHY. The Attorney General declares them subversive. Different committees have given them a different label.

Senator McMAHON. That that per se does not make a citizen suspect.

Senator MCCARTHY. No. I think this, though, Senator. If you find someone in the State Department who is a member of a Communist front organization, then you should check the amount of activity he has had in that organization, his association with people who are known Communists. No, definitely not. There are some fine people who have been tricked into having their names placed on these. For example, I would not be surprised, Senator, if some of the members sitting at the table, who are certainly all loyal Americans, might have at some time or another received a letter from an organization, "Will you sponsor a dinner we are throwing for So-and-so?", and you might write back and say "All right."

I do think, however, when you get to people who are on loyalty boards, who are getting top secret clearance, then if you find they even belong to one Communist front organization we should go further. I think when you find that you have a long chain such as we have here, of 28, you have an extremely bad situation.

Senator McMAHON. The point you are making is that it is cumulative. One case might well be just casual and accidental, but your opinion is that it is cumulative, and if there are—how many has she been a member of?

Senator McCARTHY. Twenty-eight I have now. Most likely that is not the entire list.

Senator McMAHON. That is a great number and it is something to be looked into, and it would be very helpful, Senator, and of course I understand that you say you can't do it, but it would be very helpful to me in evaluating it to find how many she joined after the Attorney General went into them, and how many before.

This is said with no reference to this Kenyon woman, whom I never heard of before in my life, but there are some naive people in the country, too, that will join any old thing that comes along.

Senator McCARTHY. Someone so naive is a bad security risk, so naive that they would sponsor 28.

Senator McMAHON. I am not arguing that. I am just pointing out that it would be interesting to find out the dates this woman joined the organizations and when they were declared subversive.

Senator McCARTHY. That is one of the reasons I hope very quickly the committee hires a staff so that these matters can be checked into.

I give the committee exhibit 4, a letterhead of this organization dated November 16, 1938, going back 12 years. The members will note that over 11 years ago Dorothy Kenyon was a sponsor of this organization which held a conference in Washington on December 10 of the same year.

Her Communist associates in this enterprise included Langston Hughes, Rockwell Kent, Lewis Merrill, Mervyn Rathborne, and Dirk J. Struick.

Senator TYDINGS. Put in all the names, Mr. Recorder, in addition to those the Senator has named.

Senator McCARTHY. The Senator will note this, that you have the names of the same men who have been publicly labeled as Communists on practically each one of these Communist-front organizations as a sponsor or one of the top officers. You will note also that the respectable names that you will find on one or two of these do not permeate the whole file.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Senator. Conclude that page, and then we will try to quit; before you get to the next exhibit.

Senator McCARTHY. It might be of interest to the committee to know that Mervyn Rathborne, a consponsor with Miss Kenyon, has just testified for the Government at the trial of Harry Bridges, stating under oath that he was a member of the Communist Party at the time of this conference and that he was frequently a visitor at the White House.

I think it is important that the committee know that the Communist activities of Miss Kenyon are not only deep-rooted but extend back through the years. Her sponsorship of the doctrines and philosophy of this ruthless and Godless organization is not new.

It is inconceivable that this woman could collaborate with a score of organizations dedicated to the overthrow of our form of government by force and violence, participate in their activities, lend her name to their nefarious purposes and be ignorant of the whole sordid and un-American aspect of their work.

Senator TYDINGS. That finishes exhibit 4. The committee will stand in recess until 10:30 tomorrow morning, in this place.

Senator McCARTHY. May I ask the Chair before you adjourn how long you plan on proceeding tomorrow?

Senator TYDINGS. I would imagine we would go for probably an hour and a half for certain, and maybe 2 hours.

Senator McCARTHY. In other words, to 12:30 or 1 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 12:40 p. m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10:30 a. m. of the following day, Thursday, March 9, 1950.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:30 a. m. in room 318 Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee), McCarthy, Lucas, and Knowland.

TESTIMONY OF HON. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN—Resumed

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, at the opening of yesterday's hearing I asked you, or sometime during the hearing I asked you, if you could be in position this morning to give up the name of the individual that caused so much controversy yesterday. Would you care to respond to that request now?

Senator MCCARTHY. I am very happy to do so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I understand you would like me to answer the following questions in case No. 14. We are referring yesterday to case No. 57. I learned afterward you meant case No. 14.

Senator TYDINGS. I said No. 14, but I did not know what connotation you had.

Senator MCCARTHY. Question No. 1: "Will you give the name of this individual?" The answer is yes. I now hand you that name, with a copy for each of the individuals on the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment, Senator.

Senator MCCARTHY. Let me finish the statement. Can I give you the name of the State Department official mentioned in the secret files in that case, and am I making any charge against that official?

The answer is no.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you repeat what you said, Senator? I was busy looking here and did not hear what you said. You handed in the name of the individual.

Senator MCCARTHY. Let me read you both of them. I understand the chairman wants me to answer two questions this morning. No. 1: "Will you give the name of the individual in case No. 14?" The answer to that is yes, and I have now handed him the name, with a copy for each member of the committee.

No. 2, can I give him the name of the State Department official mentioned in the secret files in that case, and am I making any charge against that official? The answer is no. The committee can make such charge against this or any other individual in this case or any other case as it sees fit. That is the task delegated to the committee by the Senate. Only those whom I name am I charging as bad security risks. However, the committee undoubtedly will find many whom it desires to charge in like manner.

If the chairman, now that he has the name of case No. 14, desires the name of the particular State Department official whom he referred to yesterday, I can tell him how to obtain it in a very simple and easy manner. That is by subpoenaing the files. However, to get the complete story in this case, it undoubtedly will be necessary to get not merely the State Department's—and this is important, Mr. Chairman—loose-leaf loyalty and personnel files, the two files of the State Department, but also the files of the Civil Service Commission and the FBI.

If the chairman considers this morals case more important than the other cases, I have no objection whatsoever to recessing the hearings until the committee obtains the files.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, might I ask you whether the name of this individual is in your files?

Senator McCARTHY. No.

Senator TYDINGS. It is not?

Senator McCARTHY. No.

Senator TYDINGS. It is not in the file in case No. 14?

Senator McCARTHY. I have given the chairman all of the information in case No. 14 on the Senate floor. There are a great number of names in the secret files, in the FBI files, and the Civil Service Commission files. He will find those names by, as I say, subpoenaing and getting the files.

Senator TYDINGS. When you testified in this case—and I just want to clear it up—you said:

that is case No. 14—

a CSA report of September 2, 1947, is replete with information concerning the attempt of a high State Department official—and so forth.

Now I assume that the information which is so replete did not contain the name of this high State Department official.

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure the chairman will find all the names he is interested in in that file. I tell the chairman those are the secret files to which I have not access. I have the information. I am sure the chairman will find that every word, every single word, that I have stated on the Senate floor in regard to this case is true. If the chairman wants the name, he can get the name. I can't. I do not have subpoena powers. If the chairman is interested in this case, he can now test the authority of the committee and, as I say, if the chairman thinks this particular morals case—this is principally a morals case, understand—is of sufficient import, I have no objection whatever to recessing—not that my objection would be controlling, understand—letting the chairman subpoena the files; and, if upon examination of those files he finds that he wants to investigate some individual other than those I have named, obviously that is completely up to the chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say, Senator McCarthy, we will in due time, I am sure, attempt, and I believe obtain, access to all these files. What I was trying to ascertain this morning was whether or not your photostatic copies, which you said you had, of a great many of these cases—I assumed all of them—had the name of this person in your own files, and I understand that you say it is not there.

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not have the name of the individual. Undoubtedly his name will show up from time to time in my files, but I as of now cannot identify the individual to whom you refer. But there is nothing mysterious about any of these names, Mr. Chairman. If the Chair is so anxious to get that name, he can recess this very minute and go over and say to the Secretary of State, "Let me see the file in case No. 14. I want the names." Then, if the Secretary of State says you cannot see them, that that is a secret from you, the Chair has the power to subpoena. Mr. Chairman, don't expect me to give you all the minute details of these files.

Senator GREEN. Apparently Senator Tydings has not made clear the point. It isn't that we want to know the names, but we wanted to know whether you knew the names.

Senator MCCARTHY. I have told you that I cannot give you the name. I do not know it at this time. I can try and get it for you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I may say that the point certainly has not been made clear to me as yet. I don't know what the purpose of this persistent inquiry on a matter which this committee can readily find out if we just subpoena the files and get hold of the information is. I think the Senator has made clear that he does not have all the minute details, and I take it that it is a part of the duty of this committee to get hold of those files and to get hold of the intimate and detailed information. So, I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the point probably hasn't been made clear.

Senator MCCARTHY. I might say I have a very strong suspicion as to the name of the individual. I will not give the Chair any suspicions. I understand that certain other—in fact, one of the members of one of the investigating committees called me and told me he thought he knew the name of the individual. He might be able to help you. I can give you that. But it is much simpler to get the name definitely and certainly by calling and getting the FBI file in this case.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, Senator. We will endeavor to get the names of all people who are involved in this case from all of the files that are pertinent to this case. But I don't want to pursue the matter unduly. I simply wanted to ascertain whether or not the name of this man was in file 14 of your own records, and I understand from your statement that the answer is "No."

Am I correct or wrong?

Senator MCCARTHY. The name of the individual is not in my file No. 14, period; at least, not that I know of. When you ask do I know his name, I have a strong suspicion as to what his name is, but the Chair can find out definitely.

I am very curious, incidentally—

Senator TYDINGS. I want to get on with the testimony, but I would like to tell you that the reason I have asked you this question again was this: You say, "In this case a CSA report of September 2, 1947, is replete—is replete—with information covering the attempt of a high State Department official to induce several individuals who had signed affidavits reflecting adversely upon the employees to repudiate their affidavits," and it occurred to me that if you could make that statement, obviously, the name of the individual would be in your files, and I thought we could get it very quickly that way and act on it very quickly in accordance therewith.

But now that you have testified that the name of this individual is not in case 14, although you say it is replete with information, there is nothing else for us to do but look elsewhere for the name, as you obviously do not have it.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that necessarily follows. The witness has several times limited his reply to saying, when asked about the source of his statement that you have read, that he did not have the name in file 14. I would like to ask him whether he has it in any other files.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me put it this way, so there is no doubt in your mind: I think I know the name of the individual. I have naturally written that name down. It is in my files. I have seen no original, no document, upon which I can definitely state the name is John Jones or Pete Smith. That is available to you, gentlemen. I do have papers, any number of them. I have information from individuals indicating various names. I do not have any documentary proof of that, and I am sticking to that. Do you understand me now, Senator?

I have a very strong suspicion. I think I know the name, but it is too easy for you gentlemen to find it out for me to start giving my suspicions, to give you hearsay of what John Jones or Pete Smith has told me. When I say I do not have the name, I have seen no original document stating what his name was. I have not seen the original file giving his name. I have not seen a photostatic copy of that file giving his name.

You, gentlemen, apparently know his name also. I think I know the name. If you know the name, which I assume you do, you can proceed to make any charge you care to against this individual.

The Senator has referred to this as a "mystery" case. I don't think there is anything mysterious about the case to the Senator. I am slightly mystified as to the importance of this particular individual. I think that case is important, you understand, or I would never have mentioned it on the Senate floor. I think it is important. But let me repeat that, while I feel I am reasonably certain I know his name, I think the Senator who is now addressing me knows it just as well as and better than I do.

I have no documentary proof, no original file, upon which I can say definitely "The name is John Jones" or "Pete Smith." I have given you the name of the individual in case No. 14. In his file you will find documented everything which I said on the Senate floor, everything I have said about this man, and I intend to stick to facts that are completely documented. I hope that is clear, Senator.

Senator GREEN. I don't think your answer is responsive to my question. You mistake the purpose of it. The purpose is not to find the name of the individual; it is to find out how accurate the foundation is for your charges.

Senator McCARTHY. That you can find out by obtaining the files.

Senator TYDINGS. Let the Senator finish his question.

Senator GREEN. The question is not of the fact, but whether your charges are based on facts. This is an illustration that I would like to follow up.

I do not yet understand from your answer whether or not this charge, where you say the files are replete with references to this individual and yet you cannot say whether you have his name or not. And I want to know whether there is, not in file 14 alone but in any other file on which your charges are based, the name of this individual.

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, if you want to know whether or not my charges are true or false, the best way in the world to find out is to get the file. I have told you what is in the files. That file can be subpoenaed by you. You understand that, Senator. And that is the best way in the world that you can determine whether every word I have spoken here is true or false. We have given you the subpoena power. The entire Senate said to this committee, "We want this committee to go into those files and find out whether or not what McCarthy said is true," and the easiest way to do that is to get those files. If I am saying a single word that is not true, I know that many in the administration will enjoy proving it. The best way they can prove it is to bring down all those files.

Now let me make this clear: I and the public will not be satisfied with a loose-leaf State Department file in which you can shove in and take out material. Unless you get all the files, so you are sure you have them, and I will tell you how to do that without any difficulty, when you do that, then you will find that every word, every word, that I have given you as to what those files contain is, so far as I know, absolutely true.

Now, the simplest and easiest way to find that out is to get those files.

Senator GREEN. As I have stated to you several times, the object of this question is not to find out whether it is true or false; it is to find out how far you relied on facts in your possession for making the charges.

You have said that your files are replete with references on which you based an accusation against a high official of the State Department.

Senator McCARTHY. Not my files. I said the State Department files. I didn't say copies of files in my possession. If the Senator will read that statement, he will see that I said "the files"—referring to the State Department files, the FBI files, the Civil Service Commission files—"are replete with that information." I repeat it now. I repeat it, Senator, that every word that I have given you, every piece of evidence as to what those files contain, you will find is there if you will get the files.

Senator GREEN. I am going to be persistent, and I am going to get an answer out of this or else get your refusal to answer. My question is whether there is in your files the name of this individual.

Senator McCARTHY. I think I know the name of the individual.

Senator GREEN. That isn't what I asked.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me finish, Senator, please. I am reasonably certain I know his name.

Senator GREEN. That isn't what I asked.

Senator McCARTHY. You be quiet until I finish.

Senator TYDINGS. Let the witness answer in his own way.

Senator McCARTHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I am reasonably certain I know his name. I have nothing in my files upon which I can base a definite, documented answer. Therefore, I am not going to guess for you, Senator. I have told you this, and let me make it clear. Unless I have seen the document showing the name of that individual, I will not try and give it to you. Is that clear?

Senator GREEN. The question is perfectly clear, but the answer is not. The question is: Is there in your files the name of this individual?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, I don't know, because I don't know definitely what his name is. There are many names in my file. Undoubtedly his name is in some of those files; but, unless I know definitely that he is this particular State Department official, I can't answer that.

Now the Senator can get that. He can find it out very simply. He can get it in half an hour by calling Secretary Acheson.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, you can proceed in a moment, but, without wishing to be captious about it, I don't think the witness is testifying to the accusation here by telling us over and over and over again what we can do. I think the witness ought to be more responsive to the direct question. I say this in the best of temper and with no desire to cut him off, but I do think he ought to say "I have it" or "I haven't it" and not how we can get it.

Senator McCARTHY. I have made it very clear, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the chairman is not dull. No one has ever accused him of that. The chairman understands exactly what the situation is. He knows the names in that file. I think I know them. I haven't seen the original. I haven't seen a photostatic copy of the original so I cannot tell this committee whether the name is John Jones or Pete Smith, and until I can give them that information I will not attempt to guess at it. This is not going to be any guessing contest so far as I am concerned, gentlemen.

Senator GREEN. That is just what we want to avoid—a guessing contest.

Here is an individual, a high official in the State Department, against whom there is an accusation. I am not asking what his name is; I am asking whether in your files his name is.

Senator McCARTHY. I have just gotten through telling you that I do not know definitely what his name is, period.

Senator GREEN. That is not the answer to the question.

Senator McCARTHY. That is the answer you will get.

Senator GREEN. I am not asking you what the name is. I am asking you whether you know the name is there—whether you know it or not.

Senator McCARTHY. If I do not know definitely what his name is, how can I know whether it is there? Your name is in my files, perhaps; I don't know. Not as a Communist, you understand.

Senator GREEN. I would not be surprised, in view of the long list of very prominent people and people of highest position in the world. I should judge it an honor to be on some of those lists you have put in.

Senator McCARTHY. Just a minute. If you think it is an honor to be on any of the lists that I am giving you—strike that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I might suggest that these organizations have been declared subversive by the Attorney General, who is a member of the Senator's own party, and it is an official determination of the Federal Government bodies that these are subversive organizations. If the Senator can take comfort out of that—

Senator GREEN. The list seemed to be bipartisan so far as I can distinguish.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But the organizations have been declared to be subversive.

Senator GREEN. As I have said several times, and I am going to stick to it, I haven't yet an answer to my question. Do you know whether the name of the individual to whom you have referred, appearing in your files, not only once but the files are replete with his name, do you know whether his name is there or not?

Senator McCARRHY. Let's first answer the first part of your question. We will go right through it. You will get all the answers you want. It may not be the one you want. Can we have an agreement that when you are talking I will be quiet, and when I am talking you will be quiet?

Senator TYDINGS. The witness will proceed until he has completed his answer, without interruption.

Senator McCARRHY. Can we have that understanding?

Senator GREEN. I think that is an understanding.

Senator McCARRHY. You are speaking about honorable people, honorable organizations. Here is what Secretary Acheson said about the organizations that I have cited to you. He said this 4 days ago. Referring to the security files, he said:

Participation in one or more of the parties or movements referred to above, or in organizations which are fronts for, or are controlled by, any such party or movement, either by membership therein, taking part in its executive direction or control, contribution of funds thereto, attendance at meetings, employment thereby, registration to vote as a member of such party, or signature on petition to elect a member of such party to political office or to accomplish any other purpose supported by such a party, or by written evidences or oral expressions by speeches or otherwise, or political or economic or social views—

he lists those people as bad security risks. I am giving you the names of organizations that come within the purview of that. If you think these are honorable organizations you are entitled to that opinion.

Now you asked the next question. Now you say, "Is there in your file the name of the State Department official referred to in the secret files of case No. 14?" I have told you that I have a strong suspicion as to who the individual is. I have no way of definitely knowing. There is in my file the names of individuals whom I suspect of being mentioned in that particular file, but not being able to say definitely it is John Jones or Pete Smith, I cannot tell you whether he is in the file or not.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to interject for a moment. Inasmuch as a charge has been made by a witness now on the stand that attempts have been made to doctor the record in the State Department, I would like to serve notice on the witness now that we may subpoena or ask him to deliver his own files, so that we can check as to whether the information that he has obtained in his photostatic copies ties in with the loyalty and other files that we will, I hope, in the course of time examine, and I will ask the Senator now to keep those files intact, with all the papers in them, so that we may make the comparison at the proper time to see whether or not the State Department files and the photostats which he allegedly had of them contain the name.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, yesterday you notified Senator McCarthy that this case was to be the subject of discussion today.

Senator TYDINGS. That's right.

Senator McMAHON. I take it, Senator, that you have prepared yourself and brought with you everything that you have on case 14?

Senator McCARTHY. Everything of any moment that I have on case 14 has been read into the Congressional Record.

Senator McMAHON. Will you show me what you have on case 14?

Senator McCARTHY. Just read the Congressional Record.

Senator McMAHON. Will you produce for my inspection what you have on case 14?

Senator McCARTHY. I am telling you what I have is in the Congressional Record.

Senator McMAHON. Or do I have to get a subpoena for it, Senator?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, I have gotten through telling just now that what I have in case 14 is in the Congressional Record.

Senator McMAHON. Just a minute, Senator, if you please.

Senator McCARTHY. May I finish?

Senator TYDINGS. Quiet, first.

Senator McCARTHY. May I finish the answer?

Senator McMAHON. I have a question pending, and I insist upon an answer to it.

Senator TYDINGS. Will the reporter read the pending questions?

The REPORTER (reading): "Will you produce for my inspection what you have on case 14?"

Senator McCARTHY. If somebody will hand me the Congressional Record I will produce for you all I have on case 14. It is a very complete case in the Congressional Record. That is what I have on case 14.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, you have brought with you your file on case 14 and all related papers, according to your own statement, of any consequence. Will you or will you not produce them for my inspection right now?

Senator McCARTHY. I will produce for your inspection everything I have in case 14. It is all in the Congressional Record. That Congressional Record refers to secret State Department files. The information with regard to what is in those files is in the Congressional Record. If the Senator questions the accuracy of what I have put into the record, the only way he can determine—the only way he can determine—whether that is accurate or not is by getting the State Department, the FBI, and the Civil Service Commission files.

So there is no question in your mind, all of the information, all of the information, which I have on case No. 14 is in the Congressional Record. If the Senators wants that produced, I will have to ask him to ask one of his clerks to get me a copy of the Record, turn to page 2050 and 2051, and he will find everything.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I again direct a simple question to the Senator from Wisconsin, and I ask the Senator whether or not he will produce for my inspection and the committee's inspection everything that he has on case No. 14 in his possession. I am not interested in looking at the Congressional Record; I am interested in what information the Senator has in his possession, and I would like to see it. I would like to see it now. If he won't give it to me, that is his privilege.

Senator McCARTHY. I am glad to give it to you, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. Let me have it, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me finish, please.

Senator TYDINGS. Let the witness answer.

Senator McCARTHY. I will be glad to give it to you. I gave the Senator all of the information I had on case No. 14. That is the extent of the file. It is all in the Congressional Record. Now, if the Senator questions the truthfulness of that, the only way he can determine it so far as I know is by subpoenaing the files. All the information is in the Congressional Record.

Senator TYDINGS. Maybe I can, by being an observer to the colloquy that is going on, help to clear it up by asking one question. Have you in your possession evidence, papers, photostatic copies, or other matters which will support what you put in the Congressional Record?

Senator McCARTHY. Have I in my possession evidence, papers, photostatic copies, on everything that is in the Congressional Record?

Senator TYDINGS. I didn't ask you that.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me answer, will you, Senator?

Senator TYDINGS. Let me state the question again, Senator. Have you in your possession any paper, memorandum, photostatic copies, affidavits, other materials, which will support the charges in whole or in part that you put in the Congressional Record in case 14, to wit, that a high official in the State Department has attempted to doctor the records of the loyalty committee passing on applicants for office and those who held office?

Senator McCARTHY. Everything in the Congressional Record, insofar as I know, is absolutely true. There is no doubt about that. If the Senator questions that he can determine it very easily. As to slips of paper, notes, and such like, there are none that I can give the Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. I didn't ask you that. I didn't ask you whether there were any you could give me. In order to end the controversy, I asked you if you had in your possession any material, memoranda, affidavits, photostats, or other papers or evidence, to support any or all of the charges made by you in case 14. The answer is you either have them or you don't have.

Senator McCARTHY. All of the supporting evidence, all of it and plenty of it, documents, affidavits, what have you, all of that evidence, is in the files and not in my office. By the files I mean a combination of the four files, State Department loyalty files; personnel files, the Civil Service Commission files, and the FBI files. That is where all of the supporting documents are. They are not in my office.

Senator TYDINGS. I didn't ask you that, but I will go back to Senator McMahon, and I ask his pardon for interrupting. I thought maybe that one question might bring it to a head.

Senator, I apologize.

Senator McMAHON. That's all right, Senator.

I am left with the unfortunate opinion that the Senator has material in his possession on this case which he refuses to turn over to the committee. He again and again has stated that we can go to other places to get it. He again says that everything he has he has put in the Record. But I think if I were in the Senator's place, what I would do is say, "Yes, here is what I have on case 14" and turn it over to us. I am very much disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that the Senator takes the attitude that he does, and won't give the committee the matters that are in his possession which bear upon this very serious case. I regret very much that the Senator takes that attitude.

Senator McCARTHY. May I answer that, Mr. Chairman?

And I regret very much, Senator, that this committee seems so vitally interested in find out whether they can get the names of anyone in the State Department, good, loyal Americans, who may have given me information. You are not fooling me, Senator. I know what you want. I know what the State Department wants. They want to find out who is giving out information on these disloyal people so their heads will fall, and so far as I am concerned, gentlemen, no heads of any loyal people in the State Department will fall, none of those heads will fall, because of their having possibly imparted information to me.

You are not fooling me, Senator. You know the information—let me finish. You know the information is in the file. You know you can get it. You know that if you want any of those names you can get them.

I know—I have been informed and I am sure of it—that the State Department is very curious to know whether or not someone in that Department is telling me who has communistic activities, who belong to these Commie-front organizations. I know they want those names.

I am very surprised and disappointed, Senator, that this committee would become the tool of the State Department, Senator, not to get at the names, the information, of those who are bad security risks, but to find out for the Department who may have given me information so those people can be kicked out of their jobs tomorrow.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not going to ask a question. I just want to say that the chairman of this committee, and I am sure with the support of all members of the committee, is going to get every scrap of evidence in any files, any place, that have to do with any charges brought before this committee. I said this investigation is going to be thorough, and I don't mean maybe. So far as that is concerned, the investigation will go to the nth degree on every scrap of evidence that is available.

But that has nothing to do with the immediate matter before the committee.

Senator McMAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am profoundly shocked by the irresponsible speech that has just been made by the Senator from Wisconsin. His imputation of me, of the members of this committee, of any such motive in asking that question, is something I repudiate and denounce. It is unworthy of any Senator of the United States.

We are engaged in responsible business. If there is to be this kind of irresponsible talk, it won't be in the best interests of the United States. I say to you, Senator, when you start making charges of that kind against me you had better reflect on it more than once.

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, you can be sure that everything I say has been very carefully reflected upon.

Senator McMAHON. I doubt it.

Senator McCARTHY. And I think that that attempt—I know—is going to continue through this hearing, the very clear-cut, obvious attempt, not to get at the facts, not to find out what is in the files. You know you can find it out. But this obvious attempt to try and find the name of some State Department official, some loyal person who has come down to a Senator and said, "Now here are facts. Here are things that should be brought to the attention of the Senate"—to try to get their names so their heads will fall I think is shameful. I think it is.

Senator TYDINGS. The questions which I directed to you, and I assume that the questions which other members of the committee have directed to you, are not calculated by any stretch of the imagination to ask you where you got this matter and I had no thought of that in the question. My question simply was, Did you have the matter and would you be willing to tell the committee what that matter is? I don't want to know who gave it to you. I don't want to know how you got it. But I would like to know what it is so that we can have evidence here upon which to proceed.

Now, the question that I asked was simply this: Have you in your possession any memorandum, any affidavit, any papers, any photostats or other material, which would tell us who this individual is—not where you got it, not how you got it, not who gave it to you, but, have you the material?

Senator McCARTHY. Let me answer the first half of your question first. You say it isn't your intention, it is not your desire to find out where I have gotten this information. The Senator from Connecticut, Mr. McMahon, has just ordered me to produce my file and give the entire file to him so he can check and see who did give me this information.

Now, No. 2, you have asked whether I have in my possession photostats, affidavits, and such like. I again tell you that all of the affidavits, all of the photostats—

Senator TYDINGS. Why don't you say you haven't got it or you have got it?

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say all the photostats are easily accessible to you. You can get them without any trouble at all. They are all in those files.

Senator TYDINGS. If we subpoena those records, which I hope we will never do, we would get the names of the people who gave the information to you, if that is in your file. I am not after that at all. I am after the memoranda and the photostats of the State Department and other loyalty agency files that might be in your records, not who gave them to you. Do you or do you not have that information in your possession?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, if you are after the material in the State Department files don't come to my office. Go to the State Department. You will get it there, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that there has been reference to legal procedure here in the past. There is such a rule, of course, which is well known to all members of this committee, as best evidence, and the courts without exception recognize that hearsay or copied documents are not available when the best evidence, which is the original and fountainhead of information, is available. I suggest that the files are available which the Senator says will substantiate his charges, and the best evidence is the files which are the property of the United States Government. I think all he is suggesting is that we get the files, which is the fountainhead of information, and I hope we do get them.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what my distinguished colleague has just said and to remind him, these cases, in spite of the obvious attempt of the witness, are not being answered on the basis which he assumes. We are not asking for the best evidence as to what has happened. We are seeking to know the basis that he had for his charges on the floor of the Senate.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is exactly what disturbs me.

Senator GREEN. I would like to finish my statement, if I may. May I proceed?

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator GREEN. The point is, what basis has the Senator for his charges on the floor of the Senate? Or was it simply guesswork in the hopes that it might start a general investigation of the State Department files? He did not limit himself to a simple general statement that he suspected the State Department of having certain papers and doing certain things. He made specific charges, and my questions were directed to finding out what was the basis that he had for making the charges, or whether he had any. He has made the charges, and he says now, as I understand it, if my understanding is correct—perhaps my mind doesn't follow his; perhaps he doesn't wish to give it—but however, he has not answered the question, which was to find out whether he had or had not a basis for the charges.

He says, "Go elsewhere and prove if my charges are false or true." That isn't the point. The point isn't getting the best evidence of the facts of whether there has been disloyalty or not. The point is whether the Senator had any basis for his charges which he has made, and which he said he was ready to prove before this committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, I want to repeat again—

Senator MCCARTHY. May I first answer the Senator's question?

Senator TYDINGS. There is no answer. He was making an observation to Senator Hickenlooper's proposition. He didn't ask you a question.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thought it was a question.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say again and again and again and again and again that this committee will exhaust every avenue, investigate, request, and I feel sure obtain, all the files that are in question.

Senator McMAHON. Except his.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment.

That we will do. The pertinency of this particular question grows out of your own testimony, where you say:

In this case a CSA report of September 2, 1947, is replete with information covering the attempts of a high State Department official to induce several individuals who had signed affidavits reflecting adversely upon the employees to repudiate their affidavits.

Now, inasmuch as the charge is here made that there have been attempts to alter these records which we will in due course examine, it is important for us to know when we do examine them whether they are all there, whether the things that you have asserted we will find are all there, without any alteration, and if you have photostats that were made prior to this hearing and prior to the time you made your testimony on the floor, it is important for us to know that the same record is still there, and the only way we can be sure of that is to compare your photostats that were taken before you spoke on the floor of the Senate on February 20 with what we shall find in those files, otherwise we shall never know whether they have been tampered with, which you yourself, in your own testimony, say was the result of an attempt, at least, to alter them.

So therefore you can see, as a good lawyer and judge yourself, the pertinency of making sure that the best evidence is all there. It is right. The Senator from Iowa is perfectly right. We must have the best evidence to draw our conclusions upon. But we must proceed so that we know that when we get to the best evidence the best evidence has not been altered or changed during the course of the controversy.

So, therefore, I would like you to see the pertinency of this matter and tell us whether or not you have in your possession photostats or other material that will substantiate the charge made in case 14.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me answer that, Senator—and we are not fooling each other in this case, you understand.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not fooling anybody. I am out in the open and aboveboard.

Senator McCARTHY. You say it is important to know what photostats I have, if any. I know there is nothing that the State Department would like better than to know what photostats I have. You have and I have heard rumors that the State Department is rifling the files. We know that that is the kind of rumor that would be current; we do not know whether this is true or false. We know also that if the State Department desired to rifle any of these files it would be very important to them to know what photostats, if any, I had, so they won't be caught short.

I might say this: If I have any photostats, then the committee should be interested in keeping the particular photostats which I have absolutely secret—

Senator TYDINGS. You're right.

Senator McCARTHY. Until they have seen the State Department files. I think when we get through with those files, Senator, then the general public should know definitely whether or not they have seen all the files, and if I have any photostats in my possession they would become extremely valuable to the committee if those photostats only became valuable after the State Department files have been opened. Those photostats, if I have any, would be extremely important today to any State Department official who was desirous of rifling a file.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, you are right.

Senator McCARTHY. You can be sure of this, Senator: That I will give this committee every bit of help I possibly can, to help them get at the truth; and, I will resist any attempt which, in my opinion, is aimed toward giving the State Department officials information which they are not entitled to at this time, and any attempt to aid them in the way of a whitewash of any individual.

You can be sure of that help from me, Senator

Senator TYDINGS. Waving aside the imputation that the committee, which I do not think you meant, is going down to help the State Department, in the event any papers are missing, or any other imputation that might be there—as chairman of the subcommittee, and speaking for all the members of the committee, I would consider it a matter of extreme secrecy, and pledge on our part that we keep your files away from everybody so that when we did investigate the State Department files, they would have no knowledge of what was in your files at all. We would simply use them for comparison, to see whether or not the allegation that tampering has been attempted, had actually taken place; and, under no circumstances would the files that you have be commended to the State Department so that they, if they had people of this kind down there, could alter them.

I see your point and I agree with it, and it was not our intention to get these files to turn over to the State Department so they would have any knowledge of it.

The point in getting it was to make sure that the allegation which you have made in this particular case has not been carried into practice in this, or any other case, to wit, tampering with these files.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me assure the chairman that—

Senator TYDINGS. I agree with you.

Senator McCARTHY. In my opinion, if the committee employs a competent staff, in my opinion we will have no difficulty whatsoever in determining whether or not the complete files are turned over to the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. We do not want to detain your testimony. I am going to summarize it here in the record, just as I understand it:

That you, this morning, will not give us the name of this individual; that you are not saying that you do or do not have the name of this individual—

Senator McCARTHY. That is incorrect.

Senator TYDINGS. In this file.

Senator McCARTHY. That is incorrect.

Senator TYDINGS. Then, you do have the name of this individual in the files.

Senator McCARTHY. I have told you about 10 times, over and over—I have told you before that I have a strong suspicion, I have great reason to believe I know his name. I have seen no original document, no photostat of an original document which proves to me conclusively that I have his name; and until I can give you the definite information as to what his name is, I do not feel I should give you any name; and I have stated also that you can get the name by going to the files—

Senator TYDINGS. I understand that; but then, do I understand you to say that you do not know whether you have the name or not?

Senator McCARTHY. No.

Senator TYDINGS. What do I understand then?

Senator McCARTHY. Exactly what I said, Senator. I do not know what you understand, but the record is clear. I have told you that I have no way of definitely knowing the name of this particular individual.

Senator TYDINGS. You have no way of knowing it?

Senator McCARTHY. Definitely knowing it. I think I know his name. His name will be found in the files, in the secret files. The Senator can get those files, so if the Senator actually wants any names, he can get them without holding up this hearing for 2 hours this morning.

Senator GREEN. How do you know his name is in the secret files?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, if you question that, you can get the files and look at them.

Senator GREEN. I am not asking you that. I want to know how you know.

Senator TYDINGS. Answer the question.

Senator GREEN. The question is: You say you know the name was in the secret files—how do you know the name is in the secret files?

Senator McCARTHY. If the Senator will get the files and look at the files, he will find the name. He will find that everything I have told him is in that file.

Senator GREEN. I am not asking whether the name is there or not. I want to know how you know it. I cannot examine your mind. You will have to tell us how you do know the name is in the secret files.

Senator McCARTHY. I have said before that I know; and I am very disappointed in this—this committee has spent now a great deal of time trying to find out whether I will give them the name of some loyal employee in the State Department who told me what was in the file, who has given me the information—I am very much disappointed in that, Senator. I think that is entirely improper. You and I know that if I give the name of anyone I have gotten information from, anyone over there, if his name were made known, his job would not be worth a snap of the fingers.

Let me make it clear, if the Senator wants the name, he can get the files and he will see the name.

Senator GREEN. I cannot avoid the conclusion that you are trying to evade the question.

Senator McCARTHY. You think so?

Senator GREEN. I did not ask you for the name. You stated that the name was in the secret files of the State Department. I asked you how you knew that it was in the secret files of the State Department, unless you have, for instance, a photostatic copy. If you say that, that will be the answer; if that is not the answer, what is the answer? How do you know?

Senator McCARTHY. I think the Senator should be more concerned with finding out whether the information I have given is true or not, than trying to find out my source of information, if any. He can find out whether the information is true by getting the file.

Senator GREEN. You refuse to answer my question?

Senator McCARTHY. No; I don't refuse to answer your question.

Senator GREEN. Please answer it—

Senator TYDINGS. Turn back and read the question of the Senator from Rhode Island.

(The record was read by the reporter.)

Senator McCARTHY. Again we find the thing that the chairman has just condemned, an attempt to find out what photostats if any I may have.

Now, Senator, let me say this: If you want to perform a service, rather than to try to make this public information as to what if any photostats I have, so that if this rumor is true, the rumor we hear about riffling the files—if instead of doing that, you will try to get the secret files—after you have gotten the files, I will give you all the aid in the world to help determine whether or not you have the complete file.

You understand that?

Senator GREEN. That does not answer the question, and you know it does not answer the question. The question wasn't that.

The question was, I am not asking you to produce the photostatic copy, I am simply asking you how you come to that conclusion in your mind, that you said you knew it was in the secret files, in the State Department.

Senator MCCARTHY. I came to that conclusion by all the information that was available to me.

Senator GREEN. Well then, you have that information in your files, I suppose. Is that a correct conclusion?

Senator MCCARTHY. I have what information in my files?

Senator GREEN. That they had the name in the secret file of the State Department.

Senator MCCARTHY. I have given you all the pertinent information I have, or all I know about the case in the Congressional Record, if you will read that. It is a rather important case, I think. You will find out the information in the files, you won't find it in my files. You will find it in the State Department files.

Senator TYDINGS. Gentlemen, it is perfectly apparent to me, unless the members of the committee wish to pursue this further, that the witness does not want to disclose the information about which all the interrogations are directed.

The question is: Shall we pursue this course further by asking the questions again and again and again, or, shall we go on and let him testify? What is the committee's pleasure?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the committee go on with the business for which the committee was set up, and listen to the various allegations that the Senator has to make; and then, to do what it is my belief the committee should do—go after the original sources of the information, instead of following this obvious attempt to require the witness to disclose all his investigative procedures and ramified sources from which he may have gotten the information.

His information is either true or it is not true. It can either be proved or disproved by the files, and I was of the opinion that this subcommittee was after the facts, and not after any procedure which might become a harassment of the witness, to the avoidance of the real purpose of this investigation.

Senator TYDINGS. What is your thought, Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. Well, I think it is futile to continue to ask the same questions when the witness insists on evading them and makes a speech, instead of answering the questions. I don't know what the chairman would suggest.

Senator TYDINGS. What do you suggest, Senator McMahon?

Senator MCMAHON. I won't put it in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, go ahead with your testimony; but, the chairman, on behalf of the committee, would caution you not to lose any of these files, because we may want to, in case No. 14, to have you verify or have verified, one or the other, the difference in these files, between your photostats and the original copies if any, inasmuch as charges of tampering have been brought by you, before the Senate in this case, and in order that we may see that there has been no tampering, we may want to see if your photostats accord with what we find in the files in question.

Go ahead with your testimony. Please bear that in mind however—to keep those files safe and untouched, as far as papers are concerned, until we get a chance to come back to this.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just to clear that point up, Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the witness, because it is not my recollection that the witness has specifically and formally charged that the files of the State Department have in fact been tampered with, if he has, I want to be clear in my own mind. I don't know what the situation is.

Senator TYDINGS. Let us leave that—

Senator McCARTHY. Let us make it clear, it is all a part of the record.

The only reference I have made to the files, this does not refer to tampering with the files, but it referred to information in the files in regard to attempts to get certain witnesses in this morals case to alter their affidavits. That was not a case of tampering with the files, but an attempt by one of the men in the State Department to get witnesses to alter their affidavits. That information is all in the files.

As to any tampering with the files, that is, as the Chairman knows as I know—once you start talking about getting files, whether it is rumor, or true or not, the natural rumor is that the files are being rifled and we have all heard those rumors.

The Chairman need not caution me to save anything that will be of assistance to this committee in determining whether or not there in any rifling of the files.

Senator TYDINGS. You can well see that this committee is on the spot. You can well see that if we look into this file and unanimously say that the charges are true, that is one thing. If we say, after looking in this file, unanimously, that the charges are not sustained, that is another thing. The inference would immediately be drawn, however, from the testimony you have made on the Senate floor, that the files that we investigated did not contain all the papers that you allegedly say we will find in this file.

Now, in order to make this investigation airtight, it ought to be cleared up as to whether the file in this particular case is an accurate, exact, and complete file in every particular; and whether these attempts to fix it have succeeded or have not succeeded. If we do not cover that point and would find these charges unsustained, the inference could be drawn, very properly, that the file was not the same file of which you may have a photostat.

So, that is the reason I am asking you, in this and all other files, to make sure that any photostates and other memorandum which you have, that might be in these files, are not in any way allowed to fall into places where they would not be cared for, or changed in any way whatsoever.

Senator McCARTHY. I sincerely hope that when the files are finally made available, the committee will have a competent staff looking over the files and be able to tell the committee and the public whether the files are complete or not.

Senator TYDINGS. Your hopes will be fully gratified.

Senator McCARTHY. That can be done, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. Your hopes will be fully gratified, and I hope we get all the files and all the evidence when we go over it and make a complete report without leaving anything out that comes within the ken of this investigation.

Senator McCARTHY. Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I referred to an individual by the name of Kenyon, who, according to the Federal Register of 1950, was employed in the State Department, and commenced producing the documentary proof of her connection with 28 organizations that had been listed either as Communist-front or subversive. Last night the State Department announced that this individual was no longer with the Department, having severed her connections on January 1 of this year, or December 31.

Even though this individual may no longer be with the Department, the case, in my opinion, is still extremely important in that it will shed considerable light on the workings of our loyalty program.

In the past when the loyalty of any Government employee has been questioned, the case has been shrugged off with the statement, "Oh, he has been cleared by the Loyalty Board." I assume that during these hearings, the same will be repeated often. In fact, the Secretary of State's office attempted to clear one of the cases I mentioned a short time ago with that identical statement—"He has been cleared by the Loyalty Board." Therefore, it is extremely important to know just what "being cleared by the State Department's Loyalty Board" means.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, if I may interrupt, when you are referring to the "Loyalty Board," is that the Loyalty Board of the State Department, or which one are you referring to? There are five or six of these agencies.

Senator McCARTHY. That is a good point. I think it should be agreed, and should be clear that each agency has its own Loyalty Board.

Senator GREEN. Which one is that?

Senator McCARTHY. I am referring to the State Department's Loyalty Board, obviously, because Kenyon's case was considered by the State Department Loyalty Board. She was cleared by that State Department Loyalty Board.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me make this clear, also: That there is an Appeals Board, a Civil Service Commission Appeals Board. I think it should be clear, at least as far as I can determine, that the Civil Service Appeals Board, or Civil Service Loyalty Board gets no jurisdiction over a case in which the agency board has cleared the individual. If, however, the individual has been discharged because of disloyalty, or being a bad security risk, he can appeal to the Civil Service Commission Appeals Board—

Senator TYDINGS. May I interrupt again?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will get a list of each one of these investigative agencies, and each one of these Boards, and each one of these agencies that have to do with the clearing of an individual.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say I have that complete list here, Mr. Chairman. Whenever you want to introduce it in the record, I will be glad to do it.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's have it now, if you have it handy; and, we will have it put in the record at this point; but, I simply wanted to ask the Senator, in the future—when he refers to any particular Board, it would be of help to the committee in its investigations if he could identify the Board he has in mind, so that we would not have to hunt around and find out which one it is.

Senator McCARTHY. I am glad to know the chairman and I agree on something.

Senator TYDINGS. We agree on a lot of things, but not on our questions and answers this morning.

Senator McCARTHY. I think it is an excellent idea to keep these different Boards well identified, because some of them have been doing a rather good job.

Let me make this clear, if I may: The Civil Service Commission Loyalty Board, even though it has no jurisdiction over a case that has been approved by the State Department Loyalty Board, can pick up that case and conduct what is known, I believe, as a post audit on that. In their post audit, however, they have no right to take action and say that that man is disloyal, and they can be overruled by the Secretary of State. You will find, and I will give you cases as we go along, a number of cases in which the State Department Loyalty Board has given an individual a completely clean bill of health. The Civil Service Commission Loyalty Board picked that case up in a post audit—

Senator TYDINGS. If you will allow me to interrupt you?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. What we will have to do, Senator McCarthy, in order to make this investigation complete, is, if it is a subject of investigation, to immediately set up cross references, and follow case A, the name of case A through all the other Boards to see what is in the file, pro and con, all the way through, by a series not only of direct examinations of the record in question, but by cross checks on the other records, and that is what you want, and that is what we will do.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say, sir, we will have the question of the jurisdiction of the various boards clear if you take, for example, case No. 1, which I referred to on the Senate floor. In that case, the State Department's Loyalty Board gave this individual a clean bill of health. The Civil Service Commission picked that up on their own—you understand it was not appealed, but picked it up on their own—and audited that and sent it back indicating their dissatisfaction with the Loyalty Board's findings. However, the State Department's Loyalty Board can, if they care to, close out the case, unless the Secretary then says, "I will depend upon the Civil Service Commission's Loyalty Board and discharge this man."

As far as I know, he has not done that in any case.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, we will examine the whole record; we will check, double-check, up and down and diagonally check to make sure everything is checked all the way through.

Senator McCARTHY. I want to commend the committee's attention especially to those cases that have been picked up by the Appeals Board and checked and sent back, because they felt that the Loyalty Board did not do its job.

Therefore, it is extremely important to know just what being "cleared by the State Department Loyalty Board" means.

We have here documents to indicate that this individual belonged to at least 28 different Communist-front organizations. I understand that the FBI gave the State Department a detailed report on this individual showing that she belonged not merely to 28 but to considerably over 28 Communist-front organizations.

I urge that the committee immediately subpoena the records. What is of utmost importance in this case is to determine why the Loyalty Board passed this individual with that type of report from the FBI in its files.

Senator TYDINGS. The FBI—

Senator McCARTHY. I stated, I think, to get the complete record you must subpoena the State Department records, the Civil Service Commission records, the FBI records—

Senator TYDINGS. I did not understand whether you said the record or records.

Senator McCARTHY. Records.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean plural?

Senator McCARTHY. Plural.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say, in my opinion, there is not even any remote possibility of any FBI record being tampered with. So, when you get the FBI record—

Senator TYDINGS. We are satisfied that is so.

Senator McCARTHY. That is why I insist, in all these cases, in order to have the complete record, we get all four records.

I urge the committee immediately to subpoena these records which are of the utmost importance in this case to determine why the Loyalty Board passed this individual with that type of report from the FBI in its files.

This is doubly important in view of Secretary Acheson's statement the other day. He says:

Participation in one or more of the parties or movements referred to above, or in organizations which are fronts for, or are controlled by, any such party or movement, either by membership therein, taking part in its executive direction or control, contribution of funds thereto, attendance at meetings, employment thereby, registration to vote as a member of such a party, or signature of petition to elect a member of such a party to political office or to accomplish any other purpose supported by such a party; or by written evidences or oral expressions by speeches or otherwise, or political, economic, or social views.

Now, in answer to Senator Bridges' question, "Would you say that a person who is known to associate with members of Communist-front organizations would be a security risk?" That isn't merely referring to the members of the front, but is referring to people who associate closely with them, and Secretary Acheson made the following reply:

That is one of the matters that must be taken into consideration under the regulations which I have just read to you.

In this connection, I think the committee will find, when they subpoena these records, that the Department Loyalty Board—I do not like to use the words "Loyalty Board" in this case—but the State Department Loyalty Board, even though they had the complete file—on the Communist-front organizations of this individual, did not call her down to ask her a single question, or any explanation of this long list of subversive activities.

I commend to the attention of the Appropriations Committee this and other cases which I shall present showing just exactly the type of individuals this Board calls loyal.

The next case which I shall present to the committee is infinitely worse than this one, but the Loyalty Board still placed its stamp of approval on him.

Senator GREEN. May I interrupt?

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, have you completed now what you want to tell us about case No. 1? Am I correct in that?

Senator MCCARTHY. I have about 21 documents which have not been—

Senator TYDINGS. That is what I was going to ask you about.

Is it your intention to put these other documents in the record now, so as to have them in connection with case No. 1?

Senator MCCARTHY. I think that is very important.

Senator TYDINGS. Put them in now, if you will.

Senator MCCARTHY. I will, if the Chair has no objection.

Senator TYDINGS. I have no objection. I think the documents supporting each case, if placed in the record while that case is before us, would help us to further consider it, rather than having them put in at a later date.

Senator MCCARTHY. I agree fully.

Senator TYDINGS. Have you the documents now?

Senator MCCARTHY. May I finish my reading here?

Senator TYDINGS. I thought you were on case No. 2 now.

Senator MCCARTHY. No; talking about the Loyalty Board. The Senator interrupted, and wanted to ask a question.

Senator GREEN. If I may ask a question here—you referred to the Loyalty Board of the State Department, made several references to it.

Senator MCCARTHY. That is correct.

Senator GREEN. About its actions and the way it acted. Do you know who the head of the Board is??

Senator MCCARTHY. There is a panel of about nine, Senator. They are pulled in, two or three at a time, so you never who the head of any particular Loyalty Board is.

The head of the Board as a whole is a Mr. Snow, but—

Senator TYDINGS. Give us his full name.

Senator MCCARTHY. I cannot give you his full name.

Senator GREEN. Gen. Conrad Snow.

Senator MCCARTHY. That is right; but, you understand, he may or may not be on 10 consecutive panels. You see, if a particular case is being considered, Snow may be on this; he may not be. You have, I think, nine individuals. I think you raise a good point. I think it is very important. Take, for example, in this case and the next case I cite, that we find what specific individuals were on that panel or were sitting as the Loyalty Board. Undoubtedly, there are some fine individuals in that panel of nine, but there is something radically wrong with the individuals who will take a case where there are 28—or more than that, according to the FBI file, in that case—28 Communist-front connections and passed like that, without even calling upon the individual for an explanation.

I doubt very much that Mr. Snow was on that. I do not know.

I might say that I do not know him personally; I know very little about him. I am doing this, however—at the appropriate time I will give the committee some very interesting information about some of the members of the Loyalty Board.

Senator GREEN. I may help you explain that temporary lack in your information.

General Snow's father was formerly president of the New Hampshire State Senate, and New Hampshire State Supreme Court, and he is now the head and therefore the responsible head of the Loyalty Board.

You referred to the Appropriations Committee, and to Senator Bridges. I happened to be on it and was there when Senator Bridges was being asked about General Snow, and you have not given what he said about him. I thought you might like to know it.

My colleague, Senator McMahon, asked Senator Bridges what Conrad Snow's reputation was, and Senator Bridges replied "Excellent."

I will not go any further, because if I do you will accuse me of bringing politics into that, but—

Senator McCARTHY. I would not accuse you of that.

Senator GREEN. I asked him about that, and he seems to be of the same politics as Senator Bridges.

Senator McCARTHY. I would not accuse you of playing politics.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That would contribute to the proof that he was a man of excellent ability.

Senator GREEN. I came to the defense of the Loyalty Board and, I will not say accusation, but information that everything was not right.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not think Senator McCarthy said that the loyalty board was unpatriotic or disloyal or Communist-ridden. He has not made any charge like that so far.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say this, Mr. Chairman: That, if the very able Senator sat on a case such as this, or especially the next case, and gave this man a clean bill of health, I would say that he was incompetent from then on to sit on a Loyalty Board. I can only judge by the results that come from the Board. As I say, I do not know whether your Mr. Snow sat on the board in this case or not.

Senator GREEN. Again, my point is—

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say this, if Mr. Snow—

Senator TYDINGS. General Snow.

Senator McCARTHY (continuing). Was one of the men who gave a clean bill of health to the next case, then I would say that Snow, or anyone else on that Board is incompetent to sit further.

Senator GREEN. Let me comment that he is not "my" Mr. Snow; and, furthermore, I do not think he has done anything yet to be reduced in rank from "General" to "Mr."

Senator McCARTHY. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chairman, I have here information which I think the committee may want.

We have first, if I may label it "Exhibit No. 1"—

Senator TYDINGS. What did you put in yesterday? You had better go on from there.

Senator McCARTHY. Well now, how many did we have in yesterday; do you remember?

Senator TYDINGS. Start from the back of the alphabet.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me hand those to the chairman, and mark it as you like.

The first exhibit is a list of all the Department loyalty boards. The second is a memorandum which I will give the Chair, and which is a list of all the regional boards.

Senator TYDINGS. Will the Senator desist just a moment until we get a chance to look at these?

Senator GREEN. I think it ought to be put in testimony.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean, it ought to be read?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. What is your wish on this? To put it all in testimony with or without reading?

Senator McCARTHY. That was gotten from the Civil Service Commission. You might want to know the source before you decide that; it was gotten from the Civil Service Commission. I called the Civil Service Commission. I believe it is a Mr. Malloy or something like that, and he sent it over. So, I cannot vouch for its accuracy, but assume the Commission can.

Senator GREEN. I think we should have somebody who can vouch for its accuracy.

Senator TYDINGS. The question before us now is: The Senator from Wisconsin has offered this; does the committee want it read?

Senator McMAHON. What is it?

Senator TYDINGS. It is a list of the different, I suppose, investigating—

Senator McCARTHY. Let me withdraw it, if you are going to read that long document.

Senator GREEN. Tell us how many there are.

Senator McCARTHY. I would say there are about 50 pages there.

Senator GREEN. I mean, how many loyalty boards are there through which individuals are screened—how many?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, every agency has one. I can go over this and count them.

Senator GREEN. The State Department—

Senator McCARTHY. One loyalty board is in the State Department.

Senator GREEN. There are screenings below, lower than the Loyalty Boards; are there not?

Senator McCARTHY. There is one loyalty board in the State Department.

Senator GREEN. Yes, but are there not screenings below that level?

Senator McCARTHY. By "screenings," I am not sure if I know what you mean.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What they have been burning the last 3 months—

Senator GREEN. Examinations of the record and character of individuals, whether they are good security risks.

Senator McCARTHY. I believe a man's superior would have the right to examine his record.

Senator GREEN. The FBI has one, and the Civil Service Commission has one.

Senator McCARTHY. Let's get clear on the FBI.

Senator GREEN. That shows how justified my question is.

Senator McCARTHY. Let's get clear on the FBI. The FBI does no screening. The FBI has taken the sixteen thousand-odd names, and they run them through what is known as a name check; and if a man has been previously investigated, if there is something in the record on him, then his name comes out; and then, if the State Department wants an investigation of that man, they get it.

The FBI then sends the information over the State Department. The FBI makes no recommendations. They do not say, "Discharge this man," or "Do not discharge him."

They give all the information, and that is the last power they have over this individual. So, these people will say that the FBI is responsible and that is entirely wrong.

You see, take in the Kenyon case, the FBI conducted an excellent examination. Apparently the Loyalty Board just disregarded it. I think we should make it clear that the FBI is in no way responsible for security risks in the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, one of the papers I hold in my hand is "United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C." and it is signed by Seth W. Richardson, Chairman of the Loyalty Review Board. My question is: Is it your information that all the employees of the State Department, in one way or another, have to go by this loyalty board?

Senator McCARTHY. No; that is incorrect.

Senator TYDINGS. They do not?

Senator McCARTHY. No; they do not.

Senator TYDINGS. Which ones do?

Senator McCARTHY. They go by this Board. Shall I read their names here?

Senator TYDINGS. Does this Board at any place pass on any of the qualifications of the people who work in the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. When you say "this Board," that is a list of regional boards, plus—

Senator TYDINGS. You did not get—

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure I know what you mean.

Plus the Civil Service Commission's Loyalty Board, headed by Seth W. Richardson.

Senator TYDINGS. I am asking you whether the head board of the United States Civil Service Commission, headed by Seth W. Richardson, Chairman, Loyalty Review Board, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, under President Hoover I think it was, is the head board and do the employees of the State Department—does their fitness come under this Board in whole or in part for review?

Senator McCARTHY. I will answer that: No. 1 here is the Appeals Board; No. 2, the only time a case comes officially before that Board, speaking of the State Department, is when the State Department's Board says this man is unfit, and they discharge him. Then he can appeal to the Richardson Board. That Board then has the right to either affirm or overrule the State Department's Loyalty Board.

If, on the other hand, the State Department's Loyalty Board gives a man a clean bill of health, then it never officially gets to the Richardson Loyalty Board. However, that Board does, on occasion, pick up a man's name in what is known as a postaudit, and takes a look-see and if they are dissatisfied, to the best of my information, if they are dissatisfied, then the extent of their authority, as I understand it, is to send the name back to the State Department Loyalty Board, indicating that they feel the State Department Loyalty Board made a mistake and that they let by a bad security risk.

There are a number of those cases, you understand. Then, the State Department Board, if they want to close the file on that individual—

Senator TYDINGS. Do you know whether or not the case that you have just finished reading, and the cases that you read about on the floor of the Senate, have been passed on, in whole or in part, by the Loyalty Board of which Mr. Seth W. Richardson, former Assistant Attorney General, was the Chairman?

Senator McCARTHY. I have just gotten through telling you, Senator, that until a man has gotten an adverse ruling from the State Department Loyalty Board, it never gets to Mr. Richardson's Board officially. Mr. Richardson's Board has no jurisdiction. They do not pass through that Board.

I will, however, give you the names of some individuals who were picked up, I do not know, by the Richardson Review Board which took a look at them and sent the names back and said, "You made a mistake in this man's case."

One of those cases is my case No. 1. The State Department's Loyalty Board merely closed its file, however, and he is still there, even though the Richardson Board said this man should not be in the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. I again ask the question: Do you or do you not know whether the cases that you read on the floor of the United States Senate, or any of the cases you are about to bring before us, other than the one you have just finished, have been passed on, in whole or in part, by the Loyalty Board headed by Mr. Seth W. Richardson, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, I am trying to tell you that only in those cases in which the State Department's Loyalty Board has failed to give clearance, do they go to the Richardson Board; and, I think in almost each of the cases the State Department's Loyalty Board has given clearance, the first No. 1, the case of Judge Kenyon—the State Department Loyalty Board I understand gave her a completely clear bill of health so that naturally she would not appeal to the Richardson Board.

Do you follow me on that?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes. Leave her out. Take up the others.

Senator McCARTHY. The same is true of these cases as I will go through them, my cases, so that unless the State Department Loyalty Board said they are out, they do not come before Seth Richardson. I do not think, that is, as far as I know, I do not know of any case in which Richardson's Board reversed a decision of the Loyalty Board in which they said John Jones is disloyal and should go out.

That is the only time they have authority.

Senator TYDINGS. I understand when they have authority and when they do not have authority.

Senator McCARTHY. So that then the only cases that will get before, or go before the Richardson Board, will be those cases that the State Department says are disloyal, as far as I know, according to what's-his-name's testimony, Mr. Peurifoy the other day, who said they only discharged one man since 1947, and under the loyalty program, he said 200 resigned, so that there would be occasion for only one review, if we take his testimony.

Senator TYDINGS. I will ask you once more to try to make it plainer: Do you, yourself, know of your own information—

Senator McCARTHY. I do not think any of these cases were appealed to Richardson's Loyalty Board. I do not think any cases that I gave on the Senate floor were, because if they had been, they would not have been in the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. Were they passed on, as far as you know, whether they were appealed, or not appealed, by the Board headed by Seth W. Richardson?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, I—

Senator TYDINGS. I say, in event they were not appealed.

Senator McCARTHY. I told you, as far as I know, the Richardson Board has no jurisdiction over a case that has not been declared disloyal by the Loyalty Board.

Senator TYDINGS. Did not you say, in addition to the cases not appealed, that they occasionally picked up a case and examined that?

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Then, I am asking you, in addition to the appeals, whether or not any of these cases were passed on, so far as you know, by the Richardson Loyalty Appeals Board.

Senator McCARTHY. I have give you cases, I cannot give you the numbers now, I will give you cases in which the Appeals Board in a postaudit, suggested that the Loyalty Board job.

I just got through telling you the only one I could give you definitely was case No. 1. As we go through, I will give you cases—

Senator TYDINGS. You are not certain at this moment that any of the cases—

Senator McCARTHY. Yes; I am. I told you I know some were post-audited and sent back with unfavorable comments. I tell you I know that. I tell you that the only case I can give you definitely now, is case No. 1; but as I go through the cases, where I know, I will give you the information. I do not have all that information, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to ask you then, at your earliest convenience, if you will give to this committee—

Senator McCARTHY. You know I will, Senator. You know I am—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment. If you will give to this committee the names of any witnesses against whom information, or charges of disloyalty have been brought by you, either on the Senate floor or before this committee—in what number, or part of the cases you have recited has the Richardson Loyalty Board made an adverse or a favorable or any other kind of a recommendation or finding? Will you do that when you have an opportunity?

Senator McCARTHY. First, let's you and I understand each other. I do not claim to know—I do not claim to have any access to the files and know specifically what—

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green would like to ask you a question.

Senator McCARTHY. Wait until I finish my answer to this question, please.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, go ahead.

Did you want to ask a question?

Senator McCARTHY. Let me answer the chairman's question.

Senator GREEN. Certainly, I thought you had finished.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me make this clear, Mr. Chairman: I would give you the information on any of those that I have. I do not have access, do not have information as to the action taken on a great number of these cases. Some cases, I definitely know that on a postaudit there was an adverse recommendation, I cannot call it report, but adverse information, and they were turned back to the State Department and obviously, as I get to the cases, I will give them to you.

Senator TYDINGS. Do the best you can.

Senator GREEN, what is your question?

Senator GREEN. My question is, to get on the record the method of screening these individuals in the State Department. Several references have been made to that, and in the first place I do not know whether you call it screening, or what your definition is, but the FBI makes an examination and a record of the man, and what all they can find about him—

Senator McCARTHY. Not in all cases, Senator.

Senator GREEN. This is the ordinary process.

Senator McCARTHY. That is not the ordinary process.

Senator GREEN. Then, let us get it straight what it is.

Senator McCARTHY. The vast number of cases are never touched by the FBI.

Senator GREEN. Where they are, the FBI is first, when they are.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me give you the picture.

The State Department, as I understand, has its own investigator.

Senator GREEN. Then, after that, there is the head of the State Department Investigation Branch, that comes after the FBI, in a case where the FBI does any investigating.

Senator McCARTHY. Is that a question or a statement?

Senator GREEN. I am asking you whether you agree.

Senator McCARTHY. I do not know the sequence of the investigations. Let me make it clear—

Senator GREEN. Then, in that case—

Senator McCARTHY. The 16,000 names were sent over to the FBI, I understand, when the President's so-called loyalty program was commenced. Those names were run through what is known as a name check. Whether that is done by card index or how, I do not know. If there had been a previous investigation of any of those 16,000, then his name would be pulled out, and in those cases, there was an investigation by the FBI, at least some of them.

If this name check disclosed no previous bad record, then as far as I know the FBI would make no investigation unless the State Department sent word over that they wanted a particular individual investigated.

So that this is clear, no matter how bad a man's record was, unless there had been a previous investigation or information in the file of the FBI, the FBI on its own would not commence an investigation. Is that clear?

Senator GREEN. We agree entirely on that, and after this preliminary investigation by the FBI, then the first investigation by the State Department itself is by their Investigation Branch, of which Mr. Fletcher, formerly special agent of the Department of Justice, is the head. Is that right?

Senator McCARTHY. You are asking for the sequence of investigations?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Senator McCARTHY. I cannot give it to you, Senator.

Let me say, the reason I have not gone into that, I have been perfectly satisfied that the investigative work was well done. That is not where the difficulty started. It was the use made of the information.

Senator GREEN. I think this is correct, and if I am incorrect in my statement, I wish you would correct me—

Senator McCARTHY. I am not sure I can correct you.

Senator GREEN. If you do know that I am wrong—

Senator McCARTHY. I will be glad to correct you, if I do.

Senator GREEN. Then, after the FBI, then comes the investigation by the Investigating Branch of the State Department, and Mr. Fletcher, I think, has charge of it, and he was formerly special assistant of the Department of Justice; then, after that it goes up to the Division of Security and that is under Donald L. Nicholson, formerly an FBI man, and then, after that it goes to the State Department's office, the Evaluation Personnel; and after that, it goes to the Department's Loyalty and Security Board—that is what you have made reference to—and after that, it may, in certain cases, go to the Loyalty Review Board under Mr. Richardson, and the loyalty of the—

Senator McCARTHY. May I interrupt you there, Senator?

Again, I think I should make it clear, it only goes to the Loyalty Review Board if the State Department Board adversely finds.

Senator GREEN. That is what I said, in certain cases; but in other cases, in addition to the FBI, there are five different departments that it goes through—in this screening?

Senator McCARTHY. As I said, the investigative process is excellent. I think they develop plenty of information. That is why the files are so good. It is not the investigative agency that is to be criticized. It is what is done with the information after it is received.

As I stated on the first case I have given you, yesterday and today, in that case they have turned up more information than I have, considerably more. They have the names of more subversive activities in the files than I have.

Senator GREEN. I am glad to get your O. K. of the Department's Investigating Department in all its grades. That is what I wanted to get on the record.

Senator McMAHON. May I ask a question, Senator?

Senator TYDINGS. You may, Senator McMahon.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, have you the names of the members of the Loyalty Committee that passed on this, what is her name, the Kenyon case?

Senator McCARTHY. No; I do not, Senator. I do not know which of them—I think it is a panel, I believe it is a panel of nine.

Senator TYDINGS. Is this it [exhibiting document]?

Senator McCARTHY. No; I believe it is the other one.

Senator TYDINGS. You took one of them back with you.

Senator McCARTHY. Yes; here it is. Here is the panel, Senator, and I can give you the entire panel, if you like.

Senator McMAHON. I would like to have each—

Senator McCARTHY. Conrad E. Snow, assistant legal adviser; the members are named Bertram Barnes, career minister; Daniel St. Clair, legislative assistant; David A. Robertson, special assistant, Office of Near Eastern Affairs; Theodore Achilles—I am reading what I read after the names, indicating what the individual is doing in the State Department—Theodore Achilles, Chief of the Division of Western European Affairs; Arthur G. Stevens, special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Economic Affairs; William F. Baker, Chief of the Division of Central America and Panama Affairs; John D. Bell, Associate Divisional Chief for European Affairs; John W. Sykes, Legislative Service Division, Congressional Legislation; and the contact is listed as Mr. Snow, room 4013, Department of State, extension 3873.

Senator McMAHON. It was three of these gentlemen, presumably, Senator, that sat on the Kenyon case?

Senator McCARTHY. Undoubtedly, I would say.

Senator McMAHON. All of these cases that you have brought to the attention of the Senate, some 81 of them were heard, as far as you know, by a committee of three chosen from this panel of nine?

Senator McCARTHY. I think that can be safely assumed.

Senator McMAHON. I believe you made mention of the fact that you would give us some further information on the members of this panel?

Senator McCARTHY. I said I would give you further information upon the members of the loyalty program.

Senator McMAHON. Meaning these nine gentlemen?

Senator McCARTHY. I do not know what information I will give on this particular nine.

Senator McMAHON. These, however, are the nine that do hear, in the State Department—

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. And it is your contention, Senator, as I understand it, that they have not done their duty in assessing these investigating reports?

Senator McCARTHY. I think when they pass a woman like case No. 1, and give her a clear bill of health without calling her down to ask her about any of these agencies, obviously they have not done their duty—obviously no.

When you find a case like case No. 2, a phenomenal case, and find a member of this panel passed this man and said he can have top-secret clearance, then there is something radically wrong with either their judgment or the individual.

Senator McMAHON. Can you tell us—can you identify the hearing panel in the other cases that you are going to take up?

Senator McCARTHY. The answer is "No"; I cannot.

Senator McMAHON. That is what I wanted to know.

Senator McCARTHY. Only except by rumor. When I get curious about some of these phenomenal cases, I try to find out; and, by hearsay, you hear that John Jones or Pete Smith, head of that particular Board—but, I cannot give you any definite information.

Senator McMAHON. Have you had occasion to investigate any of these gentlemen on this hearing board?

Senator McCARTHY. I am compiling information now which I will present to the committee on the membership of the various loyalty boards. I frankly do not know—I do not know what information, if any, I have on these. The information on these that I have before me now merely consists in their activities on these various cases, and as I say, I do not care whether it is the Governor of your State, or the President of the United States who is on this Board, if you find that he passes and gives a clean bill of health to some of these cases that I give you, then you will know that there is something wrong with his handling of the case.

Let me make this clear. I am not saying that any of these individuals on that panel are disloyal or anything like that. I just know there is something radically wrong with the results that come from the State Department Loyalty Board, and I am judging this solely by the results.

Senator McMAHON. You are not charging them with being disloyal, but being incompetent and stupid. I think that is a fair statement—

Senator McCARTHY. I would say the Loyalty Board that passed No. 1 and No. 2—it is putting it very generously when you say they are merely incompetent and stupid.

Senator McMAHON. You say they are not disloyal, so I took the alternative that they were dumb.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this would indicate a rather quick review by the committee of these gentlemen who have been named, and who the Senator says, and in whose opinion have passed on these cases—obviously, who they are and what their background is, is quite material to this investigation.

I happen to know two of them rather well, and the rest I do not know, and I would like to get their background, because the American people should realize as quickly as possible, not only what the procedure is that has been adopted, but the kind of men who have been put in by the Secretary of State to operate that procedure.

This man Conrad E. Snow, I would certainly take Senator Bridges' testimony on his behalf, which he gave to me in the Appropriations Committee meeting the other day, as a very outstanding citizen.

Mr. Achilles, Theodore C. Achilles, is a gentleman I know quite well, he is my next-door neighbor. He is on this panel of nine. I think it would be very helpful if we could get this as quickly as possible.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon, have you any suggestion as to how this data should be assembled? Is it your idea that we should get a biography of each one of the men, and read it into the record? Is it your idea that we should bring them before us? Is it your idea that we should proceed in some other fashion?

I agree with what you said, because the witness here, as I understand it, has said that the investigative set-ups, on the whole, are pretty good.

Senator McCARTHY. That is my opinion.

Senator TYDINGS. In his opinion, he called them pretty good, he paid them a pretty good compliment, as I recall; he said that the trouble was at the top, where the final decision was reached, and that obviously would be this Board in this particular Department. So, therefore, I think it is very pertinent that if these men had been the means of letting people hold jobs in the State Department, who are allegedly disloyal, the public ought to know the caliber of these men, as you suggest.

What is your thought about it?

Senator McMAHON. My thought was that I would have them up here en masse, and line them up here, one by one, and I would take a look at them and I would examine them, each one, as to how long he had served in the Department, whether his educational background and competency was sufficient to sit as a judge on these matters.

I think it would be very helpful, Mr. Chairman. I hope we do it just as quickly as we can.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, would that be satisfactory to you, if we were to do that?

Senator McCAHRY. That method, Mr. Chairman, would be completely ridiculous. You can bring the men up and look at them and find out how long they have served, and have witnesses come in who would testify that they had been kind to their wives and families, that they are well respected.

But, that is not the point. The only way you can determine whether or not that Board is competent to sit, whether or not we are wasting the money we are paying on the loyalty program, is to take the file, let us say in case No. 1 first, bring the file in, and in that file you will find a vast number of subversive organizations to which this individual has belonged. Then, you should say, "Gentlemen, who sat on that Board? Who was the Chairman of that Board?" And the next thing you will want to ask them is, "Why did not you call this individual in and have her explain these connections?"

You will say to them—and let me finish, if I may—you will say to them, "Here is what Dean Acheson himself said, he said that anyone connected with these organizations, even remotely, may be a bad security risk."

You say to them, "Here are more than 28, on which you have an FBI report. What made you think you could pass upon that case and give a clean bill of health without even bringing the individual in, without writing a letter on the matter? How do you explain this?"

There is the documentation.

Then, you go to case No. 2, and say, "Here is a phenomenal individual. Who passed on that case? Who said this man, who is one of the top"—

Wait until we get to the case, strike that part of it.

I have the cases, which I think you should take, one by one, and bring in the Board who sat on each particular case, don't find out whether the men are kind to their wives and families, whether the neighbors think they are fine people, but examine them to see whether or not they are competent for this particular job, because, you see, all through this Government we have a vast number of individuals who are great golf companions, great individuals, but who are doing a very, very bad job.

This idea of bringing them up here and lining them up, and bringing in their neighbors to testify that they are fine fellows and are not disloyal is a waste of time, and is ridiculous.

Senator McMAHON. I move that the committee who passed on this matter, these nine gentlemen, be brought before this committee to tell us what their procedures have been. We will talk with them later on any cases that might come into question by reason of the Senator's testimony, but I formally move that these nine members be brought here for testimony bearing upon the procedure that they have adopted.

This is a timely point in the proceedings for that to be done.

Senator TYDINGS. Any comment, Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. No comment.

Senator TYDINGS. Any comment, Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I move to amend the motion by making a requirement that we get the files, all of them, in case No. 1, so that we will be able to interrogate these men who sat on the panel, in the light of the decision on file No. 1, and the information contained in file No. 1; and in that way really be able to explore their processes of clearance or nonclearance of individuals.

Senator McCARTHY. Not as a witness, but as a Senator, might I ask the committee if they will consider allowing me to sit in at that time? I think I can be helpful to the committee, I can find out who was chairman of the various boards, find out why the results that have come from the Board have been so unusual. I would like to find out, for example, when Richardson's Board considered a post audit and said that it was bad for this, that, and the other reason, and sent it back to them, what they have done, further, and what action they have taken.

That is the only way you can determine whether or not that is a competent board. Otherwise, this will just be window dressing.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I—

Senator McCARTHY. I do not mean to say, and I hope I am not understood as saying that I would be the only one to delve into that and determine those facts, but I would like to sit with you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, in order to amplify my statement, the procedures have been well outlined, the Secretary of State outlined the procedures and laid out the pattern of alleged procedures, I am not so concerned about the form of the procedure which has already been laid out, and we understand that, at least I think I do, but simply the actions taken by any board under the procedures that have already been prescribed, and I think it is very important, if you are going to interrogate these people, that we be in possession of all the facts.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. If there is any objection to the procedure requested, I would prefer to do it with Senator Lodge present, anyway. I would be glad, if the Senator from Wisconsin objects to having these men brought up, to have the request deferred until a later time. That is quite all right with me.

It seems to me that it would be of interest both to him and to us, to take a look at the kind of men and get the background of the men who are accused of having done an incompetent job in this respect.

I do not press it.

Senator TYDINGS. If the motion is not pressed, the Chair will tell the witness to proceed.

I think where we were, at the time we got off on this idea, was that the Senator was about to offer in evidence the supporting material to sustain the statements he made yesterday, as far as I can recall.

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, the Senator from Connecticut just said if the Senator from Wisconsin objects to having them, having the men brought up, so let's make it clear: I think they should be brought up, brought before you, but in such a fashion that some purpose will be served. I objected, not to their being brought up, I think they should be brought here, I objected to the procedure you outlined, bringing the men up and saying "We will look at them and find out whether they are nice-looking people."

Senator TYDINGS. We will take that up later and bring the witnesses up at an appropriate time. I do not think we need any further explanation. I think we have to get on with the evidence, or we will be here after the next election.

I might say some of us are hopeful that that will be a prophecy.

Senator McCARTHY. Where was I, Mr. Reporter?

(The record was read by the reporter.)

Senator McCARTHY. I objected to bringing the men up and saying that they are nice-looking people, and finding out whether—

Senator TYDINGS. You have said that before.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me finish, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. It takes you so long, you make so many speeches in the course of giving the testimony, the chairman does not want to cut you off, but we have had so many speeches rather than evidence, that we are getting along at a snail's pace.

Senator McCARTHY. I hope the Chair is not intimating that this is being delayed by the witness.

Senator TYDINGS. I think the witness will have to share at least part of the blame.

Senator GREEN. If the witness could learn there were two words in the English language, "yes" and "no," he might use them more frequently and it would be very helpful.

Senator McCARTHY. As I started to say, so that we may know whether or not it means anything when it is said that a certain individual "has been cleared by the loyalty board," I do think they should be brought up at the earliest moment, but only when the files in the specific cases are available.

Senator TYDINGS. That is in the record three times now.

We will go on with the testimony.

Senator McCARTHY. With the Chair's permission, I shall proceed in my own fashion, as best I can.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. I believe, before the committee started the discussion, I had said the next case which I shall present to the committee is infinitely worse than this one, but the loyalty board still placed its stamp of approval on him.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment, please.

Did I understand that you were going to put the supporting testimony in on case No. 1 before you took up case No. 2; and, did not you say that would be a good thing to do?

Senator McCARTHY. I have told that to the chairman several times.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean, you do not have it now but you will put it in later?

Senator McCARTHY. I am putting it in, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. I thought you were on case No. 2.

Senator McCARTHY. Wait a minute, will you?

Senator TYDINGS. Let me get it straight.

Senator McCARTHY. I did not—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute; are you on case No. 1 or case No. 2 now?

Senator McCARTHY. I intend to put in the documents on case No. 1 before we touch case No. 2, and put them in on case No. 2 before we go to case No. 3.

May I finish my statement?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator McCARTHY. I think this very day the President has a responsibility to call this loyalty board before him and find out why the individual I named yesterday was declared loyal. It is his duty to find out why this loyalty board declared her loyal—without even questioning her—when they had a report from the FBI showing that she belonged to considerably more than 28 Communist-front organizations.

Senator TYDINGS. That is not testimony in this case at all, it is nothing but an opinion of what the President of the United States ought to do. Let's get on with the evidence. I am tired of having these speeches of what the President ought to do. Let us see what we ought to do, which is get into this evidence.

Senator McCARTHY. The Chair has the right to order stricken any testimony I give, and I am making a statement I think is important. It is difficult, with the constant repeated interruptions and heckling by the Chair—

Senator TYDINGS. We are here to hear evidence of disloyalty of employees in the State Department. We are not here to hear what the President of the United States ought to do. That is something we can debate in another place, and I would thank the witness to confine himself to the matter under investigation.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I believe I was up to page 4, yesterday, and, I think, to exhibit 5.

Let us now consider exhibit 5. The committee will note that on January 18, 1935, over 15 years ago, Judge Kenyon was a sponsor of the Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee.

This outfit had its headquarters in room 1200, at 154 Nassau Street, in New York.

The Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee was a subsidiary of the International Labor Defense, which has been cited as subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee, the California Un-American Activities Committee, and the Attorney General.

This exhibit, which I now hand to the chairman, employing the well-known jargon of the Communist Party—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment. The matter will be inserted in the record in full.

Senator McCARTHY (continuing). Sets forth the noble purpose of a common bail fund for those arrested in the struggle of the working class, for the rights of oppressed minorities, in the fight against war and fascism.

The Chairman of the Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee was Paul P. Crosbie, the recently deceased leader of the Communist Party in Queens County, New York.

Recently in the Federal court in New York, 11 men were convicted of conspiracy to overthrow our Government. Among them was Benjamin J. Davis, Jr. Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., was one of the trustees of the committee under discussion.

Other "great" Americans on this melancholy and malodorous aggregation were Corliss Lamont, Carol Weiss King, and Charles Krumbein, who was the late treasurer of the Communist Party of the United States.

Again we find the lady in familiar company.

Now, if I may, I would like to discuss exhibit 6, which I now hand to the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, of course all the names will be printed into the record, and the names are very numerous. You always read, as I recall, a few of the names.

It would be very helpful, I am sure, to the press, if we could find the medium of letting the press have all the names on these exhibits, rather than just a few of them.

Senator MCCARTHY. I would suggest we make all of the exhibits available to the press.

Senator TYDINGS. I will state to the press now, that it is going to take a long while to number them and go through a list like that, if you want to see it, because there is probably on this list two or three hundred names, and I want to accommodate the press but I am a little at odds as to how we can give you all these names, unless the time is taken to read them. It will take quite a little while.

I think the fair way to do it would be to present the evidence, if you allow me to suggest it, I have no desire to alter your testimony, but present the thing without comment in part of names, unless you put all the names in so that the document may have the full connotation before the people of the country.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thank the Chair for its suggestion. May I say this—

Senator TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will comply with it. I think it is in the interest of fairness and would not detract from anything he has to say.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thank the Chair for his suggestion, and it is entirely possible the Chair might present the evidence in a different fashion than I do, perhaps in a better fashion, I don't know. I think it is important to show the well-known Communist names that appear quite all the way through this case. There are individuals who—may I say that the purpose of a front organization—

Senator TYDINGS. Rather than argue, proceed in your own way.

Senator MCCARTHY. That is what I am doing now, Mr. Chairman.

There are individuals who are fine Americans who have been induced to put their names on a few of these documents, but I think it is important to show the company these individuals have kept all the way, and particularly the company this individual has kept all the way through the picture.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to tell the press that the date of the last exhibit, or the next to the last exhibit—what was that?

Senator MCCARTHY. It was January 8, 1935. I read it.

Senator TYDINGS. And the date of the present exhibit, is—New York Times of October 9, 1944.

Senator McCARTHY. The Chair will note that these exhibits are dated all the way from 1935 up to the present date.

It will be noted that exhibit 6 is a paid political advertisement inserted in the New York Times of October 9, 1944, on page 12.

Morris U. Schappes is a man who was convicted in the State court of New York for perjury. This is the organization which was formed to defend him, this organization called the Schappes Defense Committee, with headquarters at 12 Astor Place. I was sponsored by Judge Kenyon.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean she was one of the sponsors, do you not?

Senator McCARTHY. One of the sponsors.

Senator TYDINGS. You do not want to leave the impression that she was the motivating influence.

Senator McCARTHY. I do not know who the motivating influence was, Senator.

Judge Kenyon was a sponsor of this organization. But lest there be any doubt of the Communist character of this group, let me quote from a report of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which said on page 1555, of appendix 9:

Morris U. Schappes admitted in sworn testimony before the Rapp-Coudert committee that he joined the Communist Party in the summer of 1934. He further admitted that he was a member of the Communist Party's educational commission. He told the Rapp-Coudert committee that he used the name Alan Horton in the Communist Party, and that under that alias he had delivered the report of the educational commission at the tenth convention of the Communist Party in 1938.

Schappes was on the teaching staff of the College of the City of New York for a period of 13 years. In 1930 his superior on the college faculty refused to recommend him for reappointment. This action led to prolonged agitation by the Communist Party and its front organizations on behalf of Schappes. The following organizations participated in this agitation: The Communist Party, the Young Communist League, the American Student Union, the League of American Writers, the American League Against War and Fascism, and the International Workers Order.

In 1937 the borough president of the New York County in the city of New York, Mr. Stanley M. Isaacs, appointed as an assistant on his staff a reporter for the Communist Daily Worker named Simon W. Gerson.

Almost immediately, the patriotic citizens of New York, led by the American Legion and other equally reputable organizations, entered a vigorous protest on the naming of an avowed Communist to a responsible city position.

The Daily Worker wrote a letter, ranting and screaming against this "witch-hunting campaign" and "injustice," and launched a violent and intemperate tirade against any and all who felt that the city might better be served by a 100 percent American.

They sought the aid of fellow Communists, fellow travelers, suckers, and just plain dopes. The latter two categories are found frequently in the Communist manifestos, but they do not remain long.

The test of a real Red, Fascist, or fellow traveler is a constant adherence to the rapidly shifting Communist Party line over a long period of years. Here again we have this prominent State Department official, Judge Kenyon, crying aloud in her anguish for a fellow red, and I call anyone who gets $12,000 a year of the people's money, very prominent.

Senator GREEN. May I ask a question? That $12,000 a year is a little misleading. Did she get $12,000 a year?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator, the information I gave the committee is from the Federal Register. That, I believe, shows she received $12,000 a year. I understand the State Department said last night that this woman was not receiving payment for the full year, that she only received payment for the time she worked, at the rate of $12,000 a year. I believe they announced that she only worked officially at the job a number of weeks.

Senator GREEN. Thank you. That was the rate at which she was paid?

Senator McCARTHY. That is right. That is a fairly important person, who gets paid at the rate of $12,000 a year and, I assume, expenses.

But this exhibit 7 is equally interesting in that Miss Kenyon is named as representing the Consumers' Union.

Consumers' Union is an admittedly, out-and-out Communist-dominated and owned organization. It has fronted for the party since its inception in 1935 and is headed by Arthur Kallet, whose Communist Party alias is Arthur Adams.

Mr. Chairman, I have the document but it is a bad job of photostating, so I have gotten the complete page of the Daily Worker which contains this particular document, and I will give you both as exhibit 7, the document and the much more readable Daily Worker photostat.

Senator TYDINGS. If the Senator will hesitate in his testimony a moment, we can look over this.

Which part is it? May I ask the Senator which part it is?

Senator McCARTHY. It starts down—

Senator TYDINGS. I see, down at the bottom, is that it?

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. For the purpose of identification, these are allegedly, and I suppose accurately, photostats of two pages of the Daily Worker, in which appears a news article of February 10, 1938—it appears to be a news article under the heading "Leading citizens laud Isaacs' stand on Gerson," and it is continued over to page 4 of the same paper under the heading of "47 leading citizens denounce witch hunt on Gerson's appointment."

This is a newspaper article in the Daily Worker.

Senator McCARTHY, might I ask you how much longer it would take you to put in the exhibits you have to support the statements you made?

Senator McCARTHY. It all depends, Mr. Chairman, on how much time the committee takes in examining the exhibits. I might say, if I am not interrupted at all, it would take about 10 minutes to put them in.

Senator TYDINGS. I will ask the committee not to interrupt. Let him now proceed.

I will ask the Senator if he won't try to conclude in 10 minutes. I have a very important matter to lay before the committee, and the Senate, immediately.

Senator McCARTHY. Good—very good.

Here again we have Miss Kenyon associated with such well-known Communists as Harry F. Ward, Louis Weinstock and Irving Potash, who is 1 of the 11 convicted Communist conspirators.

One of the most notorious Communist-front organizations is the League of Women Shoppers. Two months ago, the League of Women Shoppers merged with the Congress of American Women.

The Congress of American Women has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States, the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the California Committee on Un-American Activities. There is no question whatsoever of its Communist domination, background, and purposes.

I submit to the committee exhibit 8 which lists the directors and sponsors of this organization, and it will be noted that we again have Miss Dorothy Kenyon in the company of such well-known pro-Communists as Helen Seldes and Josephine Herbst, who was fired from the OSS by Gen. William Donovan because of her Communist connections.

Senator TYDINGS. Give the date of this exhibit. It is not on here that I can find. If you gave it, it's all right, but I thought you might have it.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have given you the date or not.

Senator TYDINGS. Where does it come from? There is no identification.

Senator McCARTHY. It is on the letterhead of the League of Women Shoppers, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, and it contains a list of directors and sponsors. That is what this is, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. The message in this particular document has been blacked out.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator GREEN. May I ask about that?

Senator McCARTHY. I won't be able to conclude in 10 minutes, if you interrupt.

Senator GREEN. I notice the date is blacked out. Have you the original?

Senator McCARTHY. I have not.

Senator GREEN. You have not?

Senator McCARTHY. I have not.

Senator GREEN. Can you get it so that you can insert the date?

Senator McCARTHY. If I cannot, I am sure the staff can get a letterhead from the League of Women Shoppers.

Senator GREEN. That is not the job of the Committee—

Senator McCARTHY. May I proceed to try to finish, Mr. Chairman, in the requested 10 minutes?

As an indication of the far-reaching power and influence of this Communist-front organization, the committee might be concerned to know that Mrs. Dean Acheson, the wife of the Secretary of State, is listed on page 1023 of appendix 9 of the records of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as a sponsor of its Washington branch. There is no length to which these purveyors of treason will not go to bring into their fold the names of unsuspecting and misguided men and women who are influenced by a glib story of social or economic improvement and thus lend prestige to a sordid and dissolute cause.

Mrs. Acheson appears once on the roster of these subversive organizations and Miss Kenyon more than a score of times.

Mr. Chairman, this indicates that it is easy to get some fine individual's name connected with isolated Communist-front organizations, but that circumstance is not the same when you find the same names through a group of 28.

I have now given the committee a partial report on the activities of this official of the State Department. We find Judge Kenyon as sponsor of the American Committee for Anti-Nazi Literature in March 1939 on exhibit 9. Governmental agencies have cited this organization as a Communist front.

Exhibit 9, and let me make it clear that when I cite Mrs. Acheson, I do that to show how successful they have been in their attempts to get fine people on their lists.

Senator TYDINGS. You said that before.

Senator McCARTHY. Again in January of 1940 we find Miss Kenyon as a signer of a petition under the auspices of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, an organization cited as subversive by the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the California Committee on Un-American Activities. I hand you exhibit 10.

Senator GREEN. Have you the date of that previous exhibit?

Senator McCARTHY. I said in January of 1940.

Senator GREEN. The date they were declared subversive?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, we have complete dates compiled by the House Un-American Activities Committee. I will be glad to give that to the committee.

I might say that the date they were declared subversive, in my opinion, is not significant where we are dealing with a person who belongs to 25 or 30 of them.

Senator TYDINGS. But, you will put them in the record?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, I will put them in the record.

I think that is significant, when we find the same people connected with them, and that information will be available, I will state that to you, Mr. Chairman, later on.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you.

Senator McCARTHY. Exhibit 11 again shows Judge Kenyon on the Advisory Committee of the Citizens Committee to Aid Striking Seamen, which has been cited as subversive by Government agencies.

Exhibit 12 again shows Miss Kenyon as a member of the advisory board of Film Audiences for Democracy, an organization which has been cited as subversive by governmental agencies.

Exhibit 13 lists the officers and advisory board of Films for Democracy, an organization cited as subversive by the governmental agencies. Again we have Dorothy Kenyon as a member of the advisory board.

The next exhibit 14, shows Miss Kenyon as a sponsor of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights, an organization cited as subversive by governmental agencies.

I will hand the entire list to the Chair.

Senator TYDINGS. What is this list a part of, this 13?

Senator McCARTHY. May I hand the Chair the entire list so he can follow me.

Senator TYDINGS. So that we won't get the papers mixed.

Senator McCARTHY. I was referring to exhibit 14 now.

Senator TYDINGS. Would it be agreeable to you to put the testimony that you are about to read in conclusion—

Senator McCARTHY. Just one paragraph and I will be through.

In the New York Times of Tuesday, January 31, 1939, appeared an advertisement under the auspices of the Washington Committee to Lift the Spanish Embargo. The committee will note that this exhibit 15 names Miss Dorothy Kenyon as an "eminent American" who ardently supported the Communist cause in Spain.

Exhibit 16 shows Miss Kenyon as a sponsor of the Lawyers Committee on American Relations with Spain, another organization listed as subversive by governmental agencies.

I could continue to give this type of evidence for some time, but it appears to me that the pro-Communist background of this official of the State Department has been abundantly and conclusively established.

Exhibit 17 which lists Miss Kenyon as a member of the advisory board of the Milk Consumers Protective Committee is merely another Communist front, cited by a governmental agency as subversive.

I suggest to the committee in concluding my remarks on Miss Kenyon, that by the findings of the Attorney General of the United States and other responsible governmental agencies, she does not conform by any stretch of the imagination to the yardstick of loyalty set forth by Secretary of State Acheson.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, Senator McCarthy; and, I would like to read the committee now a telegram that I have just received, and ask the committee's advice on what we should do about it:

I will welcome an opportunity to appear before the committee at its earliest convenience to attack Senator McCarthy's outrageous and maliciously false charges against me. Judge Kenyon.

What does the committee desire to do about this?

Senator GREEN. I think the committee should meet in executive session.

Senator TYDINGS. Without objection, the hearing will be recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.

This may be tomorrow morning, it may be Monday. I cannot tell you accurately, but will let you know later today.

Please clear the room promptly as some of the Senators have engagements, and I am anxious to dispose of this matter.

(Whereupon, at 12:50 p. m., the subcommittee stood in recess, subject to call of the Chair.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

MONDAY, MARCH 13, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 9, 1950, at 10:30 a. m. in room 318, Senate Office Building. Senator Millard E. Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings, Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee), and McCarthy.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will come to order.

The witness will proceed with his testimony.

TESTIMONY OF HON. JOSEPH P. MCCARTHY, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN—Resumed

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I brought along with me a book put out by the Committee on Un-American Activities. This contains the listing which the Chair asked for the other day.

Senator TYDINGS. Good.

Senator MCCARTHY. It indicates the date the various front organizations have been declared subversive, or fronts.

Now, I cannot give this to the chairman, but I will loan it to him. I will need it every night when I prepare for the next day.

Senator TYDINGS. Let us look at it for a moment.

Senator MCCARTHY. You may use it during the day.

Senator TYDINGS. Go right ahead, Senator.

Senator MCCARTHY. I might say, in giving that to the Chair, that I do not think that the indication that certain front organizations have been declared subversive is important insofar as some of the more intelligent people belonging to them are concerned. I think it is more important when we speak of the naive people, or the dupes who may be fooled.

The next case is that of one Haldore Hanson.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you spell that, please?

Senator MCCARTHY. H-a-l-d-o-r-e H-a-n-s-o-n.

I will have a copy of this for the press in about 3 minutes, and for the members of the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Go right ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. This man, Mr. Chairman, occupies one of the most strategically important offices in the entire State Department.

The indications are that he joined the Department of State in February 1942, and is recognized in the Department as a specialist and expert on Chinese affairs.

Hanson, now executive director of the Secretariat of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation, will head up a technical cooperation projects staff of the new point 4 program for aid to underdeveloped areas, which will have charge of the expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars of our taxpayers' money over all the world.

For the source of this, Mr. Chairman, this is from the as-yet-unpublished Department of State departmental announcement 41, dated February 21, 1950; and, if the Chair will just wait, I will be using this myself later, and I will hand it to him.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. The pro-Communist proclivities of Mr. Hanson go back to September 1938, that is, insofar as I have records of them.

Hanson was a contributor to Pacific Affairs, the official publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations, whose staff was headed by millionaire Frederick Vanderbilt Field, an admitted Communist. Incidentally, the Institute of Pacific Relations was listed as a Communist-front organization by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, and the date will be shown in the book I have handed to the Chair.

However, I do not think these dates are important, insofar as this man is concerned. This is not a dupe. Here is one of the cleverest, one of the smoothest men we have in the State Department.

This man Field has devoted his entire fortune to the Communist cause.

It is important to keep in mind that Mr. Hanson also wrote for the magazine Amerasia, of which Philip Jacob Jaffe was managing editor.

Jaffe was arrested, indicted, and found guilty of having been in illegal possession of several hundred secret documents from the State, Navy, War, and other Government department files.

Mr. Chairman, I now have before me a document entitled "Department of State Departmental Announcement 41." I believe I have already given the date as February 21, 1950. The heading is "Establishment of the Interim Office for Technical Cooperation and Development." Then, in parenthesis, by way of explanation of this rather high-sounding name, we find "Point 4 Program."

The first paragraph of the order reads as follows:

One. Effective immediately there is established under the direction of the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs of the Interim Office for Technical Cooperation and Development (TCD).

\ The initials of that will be "TCD" according to this announcement.

Turning over to page 4, Mr. Chairman, we have listed as the Chief of this technical cooperations project staff, this man Haldore Hanson. His phone extension is 3011, and 5012, in the State Department.

Paragraph 2 on page 1 sets forth the following responsibilities of Mr. Hanson's division. I will read this. I think it is important to the committee, as you hear the balance of the evidence in regard to this man:

The Interim Office is assigned general responsibility within the Department for (a) securing effective administration of programs involving technical assistance to economically undeveloped areas and (b) directing the planning in preparation for the technical cooperation and economic development (point 4) program. In carrying out its responsibilities the Interim Office will rely upon the regional bureaus, Bureau of United Nations Affairs, and other components of Economic Affairs area for participation in the technical assistance programs as specified below, and upon the central administrative offices of the administrative area for the performance of service functions.

Mr. Chairman, before this is handed out to the press, I would like to ask that the entire document be considered as accepted in evidence.

Senator TYDINGS. Mark it as an exhibit, Senator.

This is a new case, and you might give the initials of the subject of it, and then put after it, a letter in sequence, so we can have them in order.

In this case it will be "18."

Senator McCARTHY. Very good, sir; and also "19," the departmental announcement No. 41.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. I will hand that to you in just a moment.

Senator TYDINGS. Keep it as long as you want it, but when you have finished it, pass it to us, so we can see it.

Senator McCARTHY. Thank you very much.

From this it would appear that his division will have a tremendous amount of power and control over the hundreds of millions or billions of dollars which the President proposed to spend under his point 4 program, or what he has referred to as the "bold new plan."

Hanson's appointment is not made by the President, but by the State Department, and is not subject to any Senate confirmation. Therefore, it would seem rather important to examine the background and philosophy of this young man.

The State Department Biographical Register gives what would, on its face, seem to be a chronological story of an increasingly successful young man. It shows, for example, that he graduated from college in 1934 at the age of 22; that he was a teacher in Chinese colleges from 1934 to 1937; and then a press correspondent in China from 1936 to 1939; a staff writer from 1938 to 1942; then in 1942, he got a job in the State Department at $4,600 a year; that in 1944, he was listed as a specialist in Chinese affairs at $5,600—and I ask the committee to keep in mind that this young man got his listing as a specialist in Chinese affairs in 1944; that in 1945 he was made executive assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State at $6,500; that in May of 1948 he was made Assistant Chief of the Area Division No. 3; that on June 28, 1948, he was made Acting Chief for the Far Eastern Area, Public Affairs Overseas Program Staff—another date I ask the committee to keep in mind; and that on November 14, 1948, he was made executive director of the Secretariat of the Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Relations. There is certainly nothing unusual about this biography. Nothing is there to indicate that this man might be dangerous in the State Department as Chief for the Far Eastern Area Public Affairs, Overseas Program Staff, during a time when the Communists were taking over China.

However, much is left out of this biography. It does not show, for example, that this young man was running a Communist magazine in Peiping when the Japanese-Chinese war broke out.

May I repeat, it does not show that this young man was running the Communist magazine in Peiping when the Japanese-Chinese war broke out. It does not show, for example, that he spent several years with the Communist armies in China, writing stories and taking pictures which the Chinese Communists helped him smuggle out of the country. I will show later where the Chinese generals did the smuggling for him. Nor does this biography show that this man, after his return from China, wrote a book—a book which sets forth his pro-Communist answer to the problems of Asia as clearly as Hitler's Mein Kampf set forth his solutions for the problems of Europe.

Nothing that he has said or done since would indicate that he repudiates a single line of that book.

Incidentally, in connection with that, I would like to point out that this is not a secret to the State Department. As early as 1947, Congressman Busbey read some very brief excerpts from that book on the House floor. That was called to Mr. Hanson's attention at that time and he did not repudiate any statement I shall read to you from that book.

This man clearly believes that the Communists in China stand for everything that is great and good. His is not the picture of a mercenary trying to sell his country out for 30 pieces of silver. In reading his book, you are impressed with the fact that he firmly believes the Communist leaders in China are great and good men, and that all of Asia would benefit by being communized.

In other words, we are not dealing here, Mr. Chairman, with the usual cheap Communist who is selling out for a price. Here is a man who, apparently from his book, is completely sincere that communism is the answer.

Take, for example, what he has to say about Mao Tse-tung, the head of the Communist Party at that time, and now the Communist ruler of China, and Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Communist Army, and according to Life magazine of January 23, 1950, No. 2 man in prestige to Mao Tse-tung.

In chapter 23, entitled "Political Utopia on Mt. Wut'AI," in describing a meeting with an American Major Carlson, here is what he had to say:

We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet. Mao Tse-tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as "the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living 50 years ahead of his time." And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Army, was the "prince of generals,"—listen to this, if you will—"a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee."

As we go on in the book, we find that after Mr. Hanson spent some time with these generals, his hero worship was even greater.

Mr. Chairman, for a man slated as Chief of the Bureau which may have the job of spending hundreds of millions of dollars throughout the world, this indicates, to say the least, a disturbing amount of hero worship for the No. 1 and No. 2 Communist leaders in the Far East today.

Listen to this. These are Hanson's own words, and no one else's. Here is what Hanson says on page 349 of his book. He condemns the right-wing groups in the Chinese Government for "fighting against the democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tze-tung and the Communists."

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, are these his own words, or are they quoted from somebody else?

Senator McCARTHY. The quotes are from his own book. Everything in here, I will make clear, is from his own book.

I would like the Chair's permission to present the entire book and have that made a part of the record. I know that there is some expense involved in having this printed, but I think, in view of the fact that this man will be dealing with hundreds of millions or billions of dollars, the several hundred dollars it would cost to have that book reprinted, would be worth while. That is especially important in view of the fact that all of the books have mysteriously disappeared. I had to borrow the publisher's copy of the book in order to get the exact quotes.

I assure you I have taken these directly from the book and not from anyone else's version of it.

Senator TYDINGS. You offer it as an exhibit; we will take it and examine it. I understand it is a lengthy book——

Senator McCARTHY. It is rather lengthy. I would say about 500 pages; but it is extremely important to read the entire book, because I have gone through, hit or miss, and picked out what I thought were some of the sequence of quotes which very clearly express this man's attitude toward communism.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McMahon.

Senator McMAHON. I don't wish to interrupt, but I think we have to point out that this quote that the Senator talked about is quoting this Major Carlson, whoever he may be.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me make it clear, so that there will be no mistake. The first quote, as I say, is from chapter 23, and here is what Carlson said; then I said later on we will show a hero worship even greater.

Then, the next is on page 349: "He," meaning Hanson, "condemns the right-wing groups in the Chinese Government for 'fighting against the democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tze-tung, and the Communists'." And we leave Carlson in chapter 23, and there is no other quote that will be a quote of Carlson——

Senator McMAHON. But it was Carlson that described them or him as "the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer."

Senator McCARTHY. I have made that very clear. If the Senator will read that, that is very, very clear.

Senator TYDINGS. In order to conclude this, the witness said that the first quote he made was the statement by Major Carlson, and then he went on to quote, on page 349, the statement of the writer himself; is that correct?

Senator McCARTHY. Let me read this, so that there can be no question that there was any attempt by way of a misquotation.

In chapter 23, entitled "Political Utopia on Mount Wut'AI", in describing a meeting with an American, Major Carlson, here is what he had to say:

We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet. Mao Tze-tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as "the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living 50 years ahead of his time." And Chu Teh—

still quoting from Hanson, says—

And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Army, was "the prince of generals, a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee."

Senator TYDINGS. All right, pause there.

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. What you have just read in quotes is what Major Carlson told the man who wrote the book, so the press will get it clear; is that correct?

Senator McCARTHY. The press has a copy, and it is very, very clear.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all right, then.

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure it is clear enough.

I might say, I certainly appreciate very much the opportunity to proceed and develop these facts today, the way the chair has been doing.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me make it clear—

Senator TYDINGS. If we do interrupt, it will be only for purposes of identification.

Senator McCARTHY. I understand that, and I certainly have no objection to clarifying questions, and I hope the committee does ask them if necessary—ask such questions as they see fit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this quote on page 349 of the book is very clear as to what this young man feels. There is nothing coy about that statement. That statement has not been retracted, either.

On the same page he points out that anti-Red officials within the Government were making indirect attacks upon the Communists and that, quoting from the book, Hanson's own words, "leaders of the Communist Youth Corps were arrested by military officers at Hankow. I myself was the victim of one of these incidents and found that local officials were the instigators."

Just listen to this. He says, "I myself was the victim of one of these incidents and found that local officials were the investigators."

In other words, here is this man Hanson, in his own book, on the same page, page 349, who says that the anti-Red officials were making attacks on the Communists, and I quote him when he says "leaders of the Communist Youth Corps were arrested by military officers at Hankow." And he says, "I myself was the victim of one of these incidents and found that local officials were the investigators."

So, this young man has a criminal record in China where he was arrested, not by the Communists, but by the anti-Communists.

From Hanson's book it appears, right in the next paragraph, that the Nationalist Government knew of his close collaboration with the Communist Army. For example, on page 350, we find that his passport was seized by the police in Sian when they found that he was traveling from Communist guerrilla territory to the Communist headquarters. He states that the man responsible "for this illegal action was Gov. Ching Ting-wen, one of the most rabid anti-Red officials in China." The Governor's purpose, says Hanson, was merely to suppress news about the Communists.

That should be in quotes: "The Governor's purpose was merely to suppress news about the Communists."

Before quoting further from this book written by Mr. Hanson, it might be well to give a clearer picture of the job which Secretary Acheson has picked out for him. The State Department document lists some of the duties of his bureau as follows:

- A. Developing over-all policies for the program.
- B. Formulating general program plans and issuing planning directives.
- C. Coordinating specific program plans developed by the regional bureaus, working under him, and making necessary adjustments.
- D. Approving projects, determining action agencies, and allocating funds for United States bilateral programs.
- E. Directing negotiations and relationships with intergovernmental agencies and with other United States agencies participating in the coordinated program or otherwise carrying on technical-assistance activities.

Initiating and developing plans for technical-assistance programs for individual countries within their respective regions.

- B. Reviewing program proposals affecting their regions which originate from any other source.

- C. Negotiating and communicating with foreign governments.

- D. Directing State Department personnel assigned abroad to coordinate and give administrative and program support to bilateral programs.

I might say there, Mr. Chairman, section D. which I have just read, "Directing State Department personnel assigned abroad to coordinate and give administrative and program support to bilateral program"—as I develop the facts which I think the committee will consider important enough to proceed further on, you will find that most of these men with the same type of background, his unusual background, attempt to get in positions where they are directing the assignment of personnel. If they can direct the proper personnel in the proper place, it gives them complete control, of course, of the program.

- E. Continuously evaluating programs and projects within regions.

- F. Proposing program changes.

This is all work to be done by the unit to which Hanson has been assigned as chief.

- G. Initiating instructions to the field carrying out their responsibilities and reviewing all other instructions concerned with technical-assistance programs.

This gives you some idea of the tremendous powers of the agency in which Mr. Hanson is the Chief.

Let us go back to Hanson's writings—and incidentally, I direct your attention to Mr. Leslie A. Wheeler, whose telephone extension is 3871; Technical Cooperative Policy Staff Chief will be Samuel P. Hayes, Jr., telephone extension 4571 and 4572; Technical Cooperation Management Staff is Richard R. Brown, extension 2155.

Now, let us go back to Hanson's writings:

All through the book he shows that not only did he have complete confidence in the Communist leaders but that they also had complete confidence in him. On page 256 he refers to how Communist Generals Nio and Lu Chen-tsao acted as his couriers, smuggling packets of films and news stories for him, with the aid of Communist guerrilla spies, into Peiping.

In this connection I might say that he very frankly points out that the Communists do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side. This is what Hanson himself said—they do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side.

Hanson makes it very clear all through the book that he is not only on the Communist side but that he has the attitude of a hero-worshiper for the Chinese Communist leaders.

His respect and liking for the Communist leaders permeates almost every chapter of the book. For example, on page 284 and page 285, he tells about how some ragged waifs whom he had gathered into his sleeping quarters regarded Mao Tse-tung and Chu Teh as "gods." That is his language. He then goes on to tell about their favorite Communist general, Holung, and states that they convinced him that Holung was a very extraordinary man whom they described as "big as a Shantungese, heavy as a restaurant cook, but quick as a cat in battle." He then goes on to describe on page 285 how, when he himself met General Holung, he found him to be much as the hero-worshiping boys had described him. "He is," said Hanson, "a living picture of Rhett Butler from the pages of Gone With the Wind."

This praise of Chinese Communist leaders goes on, page after page. On page 278, he describes Communist General P'eng as the most rigid disciplinarian and "the most persistent student of world affairs."

In chapter 20, he speaks with apparent bated breath of the Brain Trust of Communist leaders who were immortalized by Edgar Snow in his Red Star Over China.

That part should be in quotes—"Communist leaders who were immortalized by Edgar Snow in his Red Star Over China."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, is it Show, as on my copy, or should that be Snow?

Senator McCARTHY. Sorry. The typewriters in my office sometimes make mistakes; that is "Snow."

On page 295, in referring to two other Communist generals, he says:

Should this book ever fall into Communist hands, I must record that those two lonely men made excellent company during my 8 weeks in Yenan.

In reference to the Communist university at Yenan, if you care to make that correction on page 9, after referring to the Communist university in Yenan, after describing in complimentary manner this university and the students, on page 296 he says:

Every cadet divides his time between political and military subjects. On the one hand he listens to lectures on Marxian philosophy, the history of the Chinese Revolution, the technique of leading a mass movement; on the other hand he studies guerrilla tactics, the use of military maps, and the organization of a military labor corps.

On page 297 he points out that no tuition is charged at the academy and that each student is supplied with uniform, books, and food, plus a pocket allowance, and then has this to say—and this should be rather humorous, except that it is a bit tragic:

Some recent visitors to Yen-an have spread a report that the academics are supported by Russian rubles—a thin piece of gossip.

Says Mr. Hanson:

I was told by several Chinese leaders, including Mao Tse-Tung, that the largest contributions came from American sympathizers in New York.

On pages 297 and 298, Hanson relates that in talking to one of the Nationalist warlords, and I will call your attention to this again—in talking to one of the Nationalist warlords:

I suggested that he could learn a good deal from the Communists about discipline and integrity of leadership.

On page 303, Hanson has this to say:

My attitude toward Communist China's leaders was a mixture of respect for their personal integrity and a resentment of their auspiciousness. They impressed me as a group of hardheaded, straight-shooting realists.

Now, that is Hanson's description of Communist China's leaders:

They impressed me as a group of hardheaded, straight-shooting realists.

After an interview with Mao Tse-tung, he states:

I left with the feeling that he was the least pretentious man in Yen-an and the most admired. He is a completely selfless man.

Now, here is a man who is not quoting anyone else except himself.

Following is Hanson's description of how the Reds took over. I quote from page 102:

Whenever a village was occupied for the first time, the Reds arrested the landlords and tax collectors, held a public tribunal, executed a few and intimidated the others, then redistributed the land as fairly as possible.

In chapter 28, in comparing the Communists to Chiang Kai-shek's troops, Hanson had this to say:

I left Yen-an with only one conviction about the Communists: that they were more fighting against the Japanese more wholeheartedly than any other group in China.

He then goes on to condemn, using his language, "Red-baiting" officials in Chungking.

On page 312 of his book, Hanson quotes a Communist editor as stating as follows:

Our relationships to the U. S. S. R.—

and Hanson is now quoting this editor—is no different than that of the American Communist Party. We respect the work of Russia's leaders and profit by their experience wherever we can, but the problems of China are not the same as those of Russia. We plan our program from a Chinese point of view.

Hanson then adds:

The explanation seemed logical enough to me.

In connection with Hanson's position as Chief of the Technical Cooperation Projects staff, in charge of Truman's point-4 program, the following on pages 312 and 313 of his book would seem especially significant. He quotes Mao Tse-tung as follows:

China cannot reconstruct its industry and commerce without the aid of British and American capital.

Can there be much doubt as to whether the Communist or the anti-Communist forces in Asia will receive aid under the point 4 program with Hanson in charge?

Gentlemen, here is a man with a mission—a mission to communize the world—a man whose energy and intelligence, coupled with a burning all-consuming mission, has raised him by his own bootstraps from a penniless operator of a Communist magazine in Peiping in the middle thirties, to one of the architects of our foreign policy in the State Department today—a man who, according to State Department announcement No. 41 will be largely in charge of the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars in such areas of the world and for such purposes as he himself decides.

Gentlemen, if Secretary Acheson gets away with his plan to put this man, to great extent, in charge of the proposed point 4 program, it will, in my opinion, lend tremendous impetus to the tempo at which communism is engulfing the world.

On page 32 of his book, Hanson justifies "The Chinese Communists chopping off the heads of landlords—all of which is true," because of "hungry farmers." That the farmers are still hungry after the landlords' heads have been removed apparently never occurred to him.

On page 31 he explained that it took him some time to appreciate the "appalling problems which the Chinese Communists were attempting to solve."

In chapter 4 of Hanson's book, he presents the stock Communists' arguments for the so-called Stalin-Hitler pact of 1939.

Secretary Acheson is now putting Hanson in the position to help the Communists solve the appalling problems in other areas of the world with hundreds of millions or billions of American dollars.

The obvious area, Mr. Chairman, in which this man will start using American money to help the Communists solve the people's problem will be Indochina and India.

It should be pointed out that this case was brought to the attention of State Department officials as long ago as May 14, 1947. At that time, the Honorable Fred Busbey, on the floor of the House, discussed this man's affinity for the Communist cause in China, and while he did not discuss in detail the quotes from the book, Mr. Busbey did call the State Department's attention to the fact that he had written this book, and that was before he got the promotions which made him, for example, Acting Chief for the Far Eastern Area, Public Affairs, et cetera.

So much for Hanson.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, is there any way the committee could get another copy of this book to which you referred?

Senator McCARTHY. The committee can get a copy, I am sure, from the publishers.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you leave the name of the publisher, and his address, at your convenience?

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure I can borrow another copy long enough to have it reproduced, or for the committee's perusal. There may be a copy available over in the Library of Congress, I am not sure.

Senator McMAHON. What was the date of publication?

Senator McCARTHY. After he came back from China, so I assume that would be in 1939, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. It was published in 1939?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, in 1939; but keep in mind Hitler's Mein Kampf was published 10 years before he started putting each and every paragraph into action.

Senator TYDINGS. All writings you refer to, I take it for granted, were in the book published in 1939?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, except when I referred to Amerasia, and the Institute of Pacific Relations—it is all in the document.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have the book with you, Senator?

Senator McCARTHY. No, I have not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am sure the book will show when it was published.

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure it was published in 1939.

Senator McMAHON. Do you know the name of it, Senator?

Senator McCARTHY. I gave you the name.

Senator McMAHON. Did you? I did not think you did.

Senator TYDINGS. Could you refresh your mind and give us the name of the book, in case it is not in here? I thought you gave it.

Senator McCARTHY. I think it is in here. If it is not, I will have the name for you in just a minute.

Senator McMAHON. It is not in here, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. It may not be in there. Without searching for that, I have sent for it so the Chair will have it later.

Senator TYDINGS. You will furnish that?

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure I can at least borrow a copy for the Chair.

The next case, Mr. Chairman—

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, pardon me just a moment.

I will ask one of the advisers of the Foreign Relations Committee if he will not try to get that book out of the Library before somebody else gets to it; in the event there are not many copies of it the committee will want to have it.

Senator McCARTHY. If you will call my office, they will give you the name of it. I am sorry it is not in the document.

Senator TYDINGS. That must be attended to quickly or the book will be gone.

Senator McCARTHY. I do not think that the copy will remain there very long, if there is a copy in the Library.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that this is my own filing system—

Senator TYDINGS. Take your time.

Senator McCARTHY. And, perhaps not the best one.

The name of the book is Human Endeavor, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. The name of the book is Human Endeavor, by Haldore Hanson, published about 1939, apparently.

Senator McCARTHY. Sorry I have to hold the committee up this way.

Mr. Chairman, I would like next to take up the case of an individual who was assistant to Alger Hiss at the San Francisco Conference.

Senator TYDINGS. Let us have the copy.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce this document, these documents, rather, and they will be marked 20, 21, and 22, and ask that they be received in evidence.

Senator TYDINGS. Call them, as you put them in.

Mr. Clerk, are you getting them, because we are going to leave you with the responsibility of having all these exhibits. Do not lose them. If any exhibits are lost——

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, if any are lost by the reporter, I am sure I can supply the copies.

This is not in my printed document, the fact that this woman, Esther Caukin Brunauer, in the State Department, was the first assistant to Alger Hiss in the San Francisco Conference. This is set forth in her biographical sketch issued by the State Department.

I might say that the case of this woman's husband is extremely important, important not to this committee because of his case, because he is not in the State Department, and there are facts about that case which I cannot discuss in public, but I would like to give the Chair a memorandum on that when he starts his investigation, because the present status of the husband will shed lots more light on this case.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, how you shall give us the information is entirely up to you. We will take what you want to give us in the open, and what you think we ought to have in executive session, we will receive there.

Use your own judgment, because obviously we do not know what the evidence is.

Senator McCARTHY. I should like now to take up the case of Esther Caukin Brunauer, Assistant Director of Policy Liaison, UNESCO Relations Staff, Department of State, at a salary of $9,706 a year according to the current Federal Register. I urgently request that this committee give serious consideration to the details of this case and act immediately to ascertain the facts.

I think this is one case, Mr. Chairman, upon which you should take immediate action and the information I will supply the Chair today, in memorandum form, I believe will convince him of the necessity of immediate action.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me make sure I understand you. You are recommending that this be one of the first cases we investigate?

Senator McCARTHY. I think this definitely should be the very first case.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. Mrs. Brunauer was instrumental in committing this organization to the support of various front enterprises, particularly in the so-called consumer field. One such instance of this activity was reported in the New York Times of April 27, 1943. In the case the American Association of University Women joined with Consumers Union, the League of Women Shoppers, and other completely communist-controlled fronts.

I might say here, again, you do not have a woman who is a dupe. You have an intelligent woman who makes an excellent appearance and excellent impression. She is not mistaken about these organizations. I know there are some joiners who may make the mistake of joining two or three of these Commie organizations before they have been declared so, who may do it without knowing what they are doing. But not this individual, who is an intelligent person.

Senator TYDINGS. Have you any idea what her age is, Senator, now, approximately?

Senator McCARTHY. I frankly haven't. I have never even seen the individual. I believe, maybe, some of the ladies do not give their ages in their biographical sketches.

Exhibit 21 indicates that Mrs. Brunauer presided at a Washington meeting of the American Friends of the Soviet Union. This again was some time ago. This starts back 15 years ago.

Senator TYDINGS. The date of it seems to be June 11, 1936.

Senator McCARTHY. This organization has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States, the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and the California Committee on Un-American Activities. The principal speaker at this meeting was Myra Page, long an avowed leader of the Communist Party and frequent writer for the Daily Worker and other Communist periodicals, so there can be little doubt about the subversiveness of that organization.

Certainly this committee has no doubts as to the domination by the Communist Party of the American Youth Congress. It has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General and other governmental agencies.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you referring now to the Senate cases, Senator?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

This, Mr. Chairman, is case No. 57 in the Congressional Record.

Senator TYDINGS. I take it you mean that case No. 47 as given by you on the Senate floor about February 20, I think it was, is the case of Esther Caukin Brunauer.

Senator McCARTHY. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want to make any reference to your first case in the Congressional Record, or leave that out?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman. I am looking for that.

Here is what I said on the Senate floor, Mr. Chairman. This is what will be found in her file, along with other information:

This individual was employed in March 1944 as Division assistant in the Division of Internal Security. The House Un-American Activities Committee advised on August 8, 1947, that an admitted former Communist Party member was formerly associated with this individual in Communist activities in Washington, D. C. This individual's husband admitted having been a member of the Communist Party. The husband now has a highly confidential position with the Navy Department. The file indicates that this individual has been associated with a group of known Communists—and I can assure the Chair the file does show that, to the best of my knowledge anyway.

Keep in mind, Mr. President, that she was given a job in the Division of Internal Security.

A report dated July 10, 1947, states that in 1941 a Senate investigating committee had found that both this individual and her husband were members of the Communist Party. A report dated September 15, 1947, by a Government investigative agency, advised that a reliable informant reported this individual as a Communist and that she has been recently contacting a member of a Soviet espionage ring. This individual is still in a highly paid job in the State Department.

That is from the Congressional Record, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, before you leave the first case will you, either now or later, if it has any connotation with your remarks on the Senate floor, identify it? If it does not it is not necessary.

Senator McCARTHY. The first case was not mentioned on the Senate floor, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. That accounts for that.

Senator McCARTHY. The principal speaker at this meeting, referring to the meeting that this lady sponsored, was Myra Page, long an avowed leader of the Communist Party and frequent writer for the Daily Worker and other Communist periodicals.

Certainly this committee has no doubts as to the domination by the Communist Party of the American Youth Congress. It has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General and other governmental agencies.

Exhibit 22 shows Esther Caukin Brunauer was a signer of the call to the annual meeting of the American Youth Congress in 1938.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't want to divert the witness, but I think the press may not have a copy of this.

Senator LODGE. Neither has the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. It reads "We the Undersigned" and is broken down under the headings of women's organizations, health, education, trade-union, social service, government, and religious groups. There again I see some of our former colleagues: Arthur Capper, United States Senator from Kansas; L. D. Dickenson, Governor of Michigan; Matthew A. Dunn, United States Representative from Pennsylvania; James A. Farley, United States Postmaster General; Thomas F. Ford, United States Representative from California; Frank W. Fries, United States Representative from Illinois, and several other Representatives and a number of governors and a number of United States Senators. I won't take the time to read them.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I have refrained from naming the known Communists up here on all of these. Each document I present from day to day you will find contains some respectable citizens who have been duped into joining.

I might say this also in this case, Mr. Chairman. I do not think the fact that this woman belonged to these Communist front organizations can at all compare with the information the Chair will find in her files and in the files of her husband. I give these documents to show that those over in the State Department who hired her, and kept her on should have been put on notice, at least, that there was something wrong in the record; and also, I believe, when the Chair sees her record he will not be able to believe that she is still in a highly paid position having top secret clearance today.

This is, in my opinion, one of the most fantastic cases I know of.

Senator TYDINGS. I will not look at my records, of course, until the whole committee sees them at the same time. I just want to make that plain.

Senator McCARTHY. I understand that.

I might say also, I am not trying to advise the committee, but in all sincerity I don't think the members of the committee will be any more competent than I would be to go over and examine those records personally. I think you will have to have on your staff individuals who have been in this type of work for some years, who have taken some part in compiling those records, so that you will be able to get everything out of it.

May I suggest this further, especially. Especially in this Brunauer case I urge that the committee get not only her loyalty file, her personnel file—

Senator TYDINGS. Both in the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. Both in the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. Give me that again.

Senator McCARTHY. The State Department loyalty file, the State Department personnel file, and both files, which will be combined as one, over in the Civil Service Commission, and then what is doubly important, a glance at the FBI file on this woman and her husband. They are living together; at least I assume they are, which makes his file important also.

Exhibit 22 shows Esther Caukin Brunauer was a signer of the call to the annual meeting of the American Youth Congress in 1938.

Esther Brunauer is the wife of Stephen Brunauer, a Hungarian by birth. He is a scientist who has had the rank of Commander in the United States Navy and his scientific work has involved some of the topmost defense secrets which the armed forces of this country possess.

I think it is highly important that this committee immediately, in accordance with the mandate from the Senate, obtain the files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Naval Intelligence, and the State Department on the activities of Stephen Brunauer, the husband of this ranking official of the State Department.

I ask that the committee immediately seek to learn whether or not Stephen Brunauer has:

1. Been the subject of a constant investigation by Government agencies over a period of 10 years.

2. A close friend and collaborator of Noel Field, known Communist who recently and mysteriously disappeared behind the iron curtain.

3. He has admitted to associates that he was a member of the Communist Party.

I am reluctant to go any further into this case but I am prepared to produce competent witnesses who will testify to the importance of immediate action in this matter.

It can be readily shown that at least three Government agencies have been sifting the activities of a small group of people whose work seriously threatens the security of the country.

Certainly the Communist front activities of Mrs. Brunauer are sufficient to seriously question her security status.

Let me make it clear that I think the investigative agencies of the Government have been doing an excellent job. The thing that disturbs me is, after they have done a job, after you have matters in the files that make it unbelievable that a person could get top secret clearance, there is just no regard whatsoever paid to those reports of the investigative agencies.

So much for Brunauer.

Mr. Chairman, the next case will take about, or, I would say a least an hour and a half to complete. It is 20 of 12. Housing legislation is on the Senate floor, and I will want to be on the floor this afternoon. If the Chair wants me to, I shall start this document. I very much hate to get a third of the way through a case and then quit. If the Chair does not have any objection, instead of taking 15 minutes on this and getting in the middle of this, I would prefer starting on it tomorrow.

Senator TYNDING. Senator, of course we will try to accommodate you, but as I told you, we would try to sit all day and give you a chance without any major interruptions at presenting your case, and I notified the committee to that extent, and we are prepared to be here.

I would suggest, if you would allow me, that we start and keep on going, and keep in touch with the floor situation. It may be that somebody is reading Washington's Farewell Address or some other important document, in which event we can keep on without the loss of time. So, if you will start, we will keep in touch with the floor, and I will notify the Clerk, and at the proper time I will notify you if the housing matter is up for serious discussion.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me suggest, then, Mr. Chairman, I don't want to be cut off in the middle of this. I would rather miss some of the housing discussion than be forced to stop in the middle of it.

Could we do this: It will take me, I assume, about an hour and a half to finish this. It will be 1 o'clock or maybe slightly after that. Could we agree to this, to notify the floor that I will have no objection to the committee sitting until 1 o'clock, and I will have to object to the committee continuing after that time, because housing legislation is up. It is something I have been working on for some time, and I must be there.

Can we have an agreement that we will not stop in the middle of this case, and let me finish it, and when I finish this case we can retire to the Senate floor.

Senator LODGE. And pick up again his afternoon?

Senator McCARTHY. No. I will have to be on the floor during the housing legislation.

Senator TYNDING. Senator, there are a couple of aspects of this thing that make it a little difficult, much as I would like to comply with any request of yours.

The first one is that, as you know, we have asked Miss Kenyon to be here tomorrow, and she may not be ready to go on the stand. I don't know. I sent her a telegram telling her that her request to be heard would be honored promptly, and we had planned to hear her on Tuesday at 10:30 a. m. I got a reply by wire from her to the effect that she would be here Tuesday at 10:30 a. m.

Now, so far as I know, she will be here tomorrow morning. In the event, however, she should ask the committee for another day, I think we would have to probably take counsel and extend her the time that she requires to make her answer.

But if we could go on today and finish your case, it was my idea that we would immediately, notwithstanding we had not concluded the open hearings, organize our staff and take up these matters that you have suggested here and in other places, and start to outline a case.

I am trying to get, as you have yourself thought wise and I thought wise too, experienced investigators, preferably FBI men who are available, so that there will be no question about having an experienced handling of these particular files. I haven't gotten those men yet, but I am working on it and want to submit it to the whole committee before it becomes official. But if we could conclude with you today, I will sit here until 10 or 11 o'clock tonight so that we can dispose of it and get the thing moving in high gear and if there is anybody down there that is disloyal, we want to know it just as you do.

Senator McCARRHY. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I want to cooperate with the Chair fully, but simply must be over on the floor when we are discussing housing. That is a matter I have been working on for 2 years.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's go to 1 o'clock, and talk it over then.

Senator McCARRHY. I can't very well talk it over then, because I have to notify the floor whether or not they should put in an objection to my having the committee sit. The Chair knows we can sit only by unanimous consent. If we can agree that we will finish this case and then adjourn, I will notify the floor not to object to having this committee sit.

Senator McMAHON. I want the Senator to object.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me say this, before you do that.

Senator McCarthy, I want to accommodate you as long as I can. Is the reason you would like to go over that you have not your other cases ready, or is it because of the housing legislation?

Senator McCARRHY. I have plenty of material here to take up some time, Mr. Chairman, but as I have told you, I will give the committee the forenoon, and an hour or so in the afternoon. I will do that as long as necessary, but when there is legislation up which I think is important, the Reorganization Act provides that when such a situation occurs, a Senator is entitled to be on the floor.

Here is my thought: I don't want to be caught in the middle of a case. I would like to present all of the evidence, because it is done in chronological order. I would like to have an agreement either that I can finish this case when I start, or that we adjourn now and start again tomorrow morning. I do think instead of starting at 10:30 it might be better to start at 9 in the morning.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, it has been suggested by my colleagues to my right that if you can find it convenient to take up this case and without any interruption pursue it to a conclusion, perhaps at that time, and without penalizing you or taking any advantage of that agreement, we could again discuss it and work out something that would be mutually satisfactory to you and the committee. How does that strike you?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you are referring to the whispered tentative conversation which I had with you a moment ago, which I did not feel was a final commitment one way or the other and had not expected to be announced publicly—

Senator TYDINGS. I beg your pardon. I thought it was your suggestion. I merely relayed it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I made a suggestion of that kind, but did not expect it to be published. What I suggested was that the Senator certainly is entitled to continue a presentation of this case until he has concluded. I said to the chairman that to my knowledge, and I think to the knowledge of everybody else, the Senator from Wisconsin has been vitally interested in housing for over 2 years. I had not realized his interest until he mentioned it just a moment ago, but I can understand why he is interested in being on the floor when housing is discussed.

Senator McCARRHY. Let me say also for the Senator's benefit that the Housing Act of 1948 was drafted by the Senator from Wisconsin; the only public housing measure that was passed in 1948 was drafted by the Senator from Wisconsin, so this is one of the subjects I have been working at, and I simply insist that I be there. I am not asking any favor from the committee in that at all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I further suggested, if we continue our private conversation here in public, that upon the completion of this case by the Senator, if Judge Kenyon appears and wants to go on tomorrow at 10:30, so long as she has been invited to come, and if that is convenient, that I saw no particular reason why she should not come on at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning and not disturb her convenience, and the Senator from Wisconsin can go on following her testimony. I am hoping to expedite this matter.

Senator TYDINGS. Suppose the Housing Act goes on all this week. You will feel the same way so long as that act is pending, won't you?

Senator McCARTHY. I will feel that I want to be on the Senate floor in the afternoon. I will give you all the time you want in the forenoon.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead with your case and we will work it out. We won't take advantage of you if you want to get on the floor. The Chair will vote with any group that sees that you have your chance to be on the floor while legislation in which you are interested is up.

I regret we have to postpone this, I will say to everybody, and I know you do, but there is no other way we can handle it, so if you will go ahead with this case, when we get to the end of it we will recess subject to the situation that will then be mutually agreeable.

Senator McCARTHY. I want to make sure that we have the understanding, as Senator McMahon just made the statement he is going to insist that I object on the floor. It is now understood that I can start the next case and complete it, and that we then adjourn the hearing until tomorrow or whenever you want to.

Senator TYDINGS. What is your pleasure, gentlemen?

Senator MCMAHON. I reserve my vote until we see what the situation is on the floor. I am informed that some amendment to the FDIC may be up, and not the housing bill, for debate.

Senator TYDINGS. If the FDIC comes up instead of the housing bill, of course our understanding would be to continue on here.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, in about 10 minutes I have to decide whether or not I shall have to personally make sure that I will be available on the floor. If the Senator from Connecticut does not want to agree that when this case is finished I can go over to the Senate floor and work on this matter, I shall have to call the floor and say, "Put in my objection," which will prevent the committee sitting after 12. Otherwise I would just as soon give the committee another hour and a half's time on this case.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me see if I can summarize it in a way that we can all agree on. Senator, you want to be present if the housing bills are up. That is a must on your part, and everything will have to be shaped to that end.

Now, in the event the housing bill is not up, would you object, then, to sitting with the permission of the Senate, here, until the housing bill does come up?

Senator McCARTHY. It all depends, Mr. Chairman, on what legislation comes up.

Let me make myself clear. I am willing to give the committee the forenoon. I do have other work to do, you see. I have my own constituents to take care of, and legislation in which I am interested. I have been informed that the housing bill will be up. I think that came direct from your majority leader's office. If we can have an agreement by the entire committee that we can adjourn after this case has been completed, then I shall not object to the committee sitting. Otherwise, if the Senator from Connecticut is going to take the arbitrary position that when I have lost that right, he is going to insist on sitting, I shall have no choice but to call the floor now and say I object to this committee sitting. I don't want to do that.

Senator TYDINGS. Unless the Chair is overruled, he will announce that if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to take up this case to conclusion, and if the housing bill is up on the floor at any time we are sitting, the committee will recess at the notice of that event until tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock.

Senator McCARTHY. That is not sufficient, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. You phrase it, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. That when I have completed this case, if the Senate is in session that we then adjourn until tomorrow morning at such time as the Chair desires. I don't care whether it is 10, or 9:30.

Senator TYDINGS. Regardless of what is up on the floor?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes. I don't want to get into a squabble at 1:30.

Senator TYDINGS. We will proceed in that fashion, unless the Chair is overruled.

Senator GREEN. You are not canceling the appointment we made with Miss Kenyon?

Senator TYDINGS. Oh, no. Miss Kenyon will be here tomorrow morning at 10:30.

Senator McCARTHY. I don't want to interfere with Miss Kenyon at all.

Senator TYDINGS. Proceed with the next case.

Senator McCARTHY. I would like to introduce three more documents in the last case; exhibit 23, which is a photostat of the New York Times dated Thursday, March 16, 1939, which reflects that Esther Caukin Brunauer was very active in launching an organization called The American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts.

This is to point out that the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts was cited as a Communist-front organization, the leader of which was the editor of the Daily Worker. It is to be noted from this newspaper article that Esther Brunauer served on the executive committee of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts.

Exhibit 24, which is another photostat of the New York Times, of December 3, 1938, a photostat which pertains to the activities of Brunauer in connection with the Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts.

I referred in my statement to the Congress of Youth, also, Mr. Chairman. I did not introduce any exhibit at that time. I am now producing that, and that will be exhibit 25.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that there be accepted in evidence exhibits 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30 and 31.

Senator TYDINGS. The exhibits will be filed immediately following the case of the subjects to whom they are applicable.

Senator McCARTHY. And they are received in evidence, I assume.

Mr. Chairman, the State Department, with great frequency, utilizes the services of a large group of individuals in diverse fields as "consultants."

One of its regular performers in this field is the man I wish to discuss next. He is Owen J. Lattimore.

Lattimore was not only a consultant, but one of the principal architects of our far eastern policy. This man is one of the State Department's outstanding experts on problems dealing with the Far East and has been for a number of years.

Lattimore is currently employed as a director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, located at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md. He has held numerous positions with the State Department, among them a 6-month period in 1941 as the political adviser of President Roosevelt to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. He was a Deputy Director in charge of the Pacific Branch of the Office of War Information and in June of 1944 he, with John Carter Vincent, later to head the Far Eastern Bureau of the State Department, accompanied Henry Wallace on a diplomatic tour of Siberia and Free China.

Recently Lattimore completed a State Department mission to India and it is understood that he is now a consultant in the Department. I call your attention to this, Mr. Chairman, that while the State Department will tell you that he is not on the payroll as of today, the point is he is still considered by the Department as one of its top advisers and is put on and off the payroll as consultant apparently at will, and is apparently one of the top men in developing our Asiatic program.

As I say, I know when this case is published the State Department will come out and say, "This man is not on our payroll." Let me make it clear that so far as I know he has free access to the Department. I think the Chair will find upon investigation that he has a desk which is kept there for him constantly, kept for his sole benefit, and he comes in at will.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is it your understanding, Senator McCarthy, that Mr. Lattimore is on what might be termed the panel of consultants who are called in from time to time on a per diem basis, for a day or two or for a week or so, or for some short period of time, and after their consultation is over they retire back into private life until they are again called to consult on matters of their specialty?

Senator McCARTHY. Even much closer than that, Senator. He is the very close personal friend and adviser of those in charge of the Far Eastern Branch, and I might say that in this connection I will be glad to give the committee the names of witnesses whom they may decide to interrogate, either in public or in executive session.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Thank you.

Senator McCARTHY. This man's record as a pro-Communist goes back many years.

I hand the committee a letter, dated December 10, 1940. That is exhibit 27, exhibit 26 being this statement itself. Again we have the familiar name of Frederick V. Field, Communist chairman of the editorial board. Equally familiar is the name of Philip J. Jaffe, managing editor of the magazine, who was indicted and convicted for having illegal possession of secret State Department documents. The committee will note that there follows a list of eight members of the board of this pro-Communist magazine. It will also observe that 50 percent of the editorial board of this magazine, whose editor was convicted of possessing State Department secret documents illegally, have been or are now highly placed officials of the Department of State of the United States.

Their names are: T. A. Bisson, Owen Lattimore, David H. Popper, and William T. Stone.

In the June 6, 1946, issue of the Washington Times-Herald there appears an article entitled "How Come?" written by Mr. Frank C. Waldrop, editorial director of that newspaper, which will be exhibit 28.

Shortly, I shall read that article into the record, but I should like to mention in passing that of the 57 instructors in the orientation conference and training programs for personnel of the Foreign Service and the Department of State, all but three were Government officials. Those three were Dr. Edward C. Acheson, director of the School of Foreign Service and brother of the present Secretary of State; Prof. Owen Lattimore of Johns Hopkins University, and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

But more of this gentleman later.

When Mr. Waldrop asked "How come?" he was getting closer to a sordid picture than he imagined.

Here is what he had to say:

Herewith an item that may be of interest to Secretary of State Jimmy Byrnes who is doing his level best these days to cope with J. Stalin's bucking broncos of the Kremlin.

Whether he finds it interesting or not, he certainly could with profit ask a few questions about a project in his own shop going by the title of the "Orientation Conference and Training Programs for Personnel of the Foreign Office and the Department of State."

The writer of this piece sat in, uninvited, yesterday on one of those training projects and found it nothing more or less than an example to diplomats on how to needle a man whose back is turned—In this case Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

I might say to the committee that while I am going back a number of years, I think you must go back a number of years to develop the complete picture. [Continues reading:]

To begin at the beginning, the State Department has a Division of Training Services which has the very valuable assignment of making better diplomats of the departmental forces.

As a part of this, there are scheduled for every workday from Monday through Friday all this month, a series of lectures by supposed experts on subjects of importance in diplomacy.

Don't give up. It concerns you too, because the State Department is supposed to look out for the interests of the United States between wars and you live here.

Of 57 instructors listed to give the developing diplomats the real dope on their business, all but three are Government officials.

The three exceptions are: Dr. Edward C. Acheson, director of the School of Foreign Service at the George Washington University here and brother of Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson; Prof. Owen Lattimore, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

Lattimore is a bosom pal of Henry Wallace, the great mind of the ages now trying to decide whether he can best save the world by staying on in Truman's Cabinet to bore from within or by resigning to bore from without.

Lattimore also hangs out with other persons less well known, to an extent that ought to give J. Byrnes some pause.

Just an item: He was formerly on the editorial board of Amerasia, the pro-Soviet magazine that got caught in possession of confidential State Department documents in 1944 with the result that an editor and a State Department employee were convicted and fined.

Lattimore also has described Stalin's blood purges of 1930-39 as a "triumph for democracy," and that, friends, is just a slight sample.

He's clever, but you invariably find him in all those old familiar places when you check up. Consider his performance of yesterday.

Most people have the impression that on the record and the evidence the welfare of the United States is better looked after in Japan with Gen. Douglas MacArthur in sole command than in Germany, where a four-cornered quarrel over the remains grows worse and worse.

To all of this, Dr. Lattimore yesterday issued an hour-long "m-a-n-a-n, it's lousy." His line is that the Japs have outsmarted MacArthur in that they are holding onto a "conservative" agricultural policy and occasionally rescue one of their industrialists, bankers, and so forth, from the hangman's rope.

Match that up, citizens, with what you've been hearing from Moscow, if you bother to listen. And match up with it the realization that such a thought is the best offered our State Department help as expert inside dope on the Far East.

How come the State Department has to drag in Owen Lattimore to tell what's what in the Orient? Hasn't the Department got anybody on its own staff who knows anything?

And as for the baby lined up for June 10--that F. L. Schuman--he's all too well known around here, especially to people who have read the record of the Dies committee.

But if you don't already know what he is, you can get him completely in a flash by turning to page 682 of his latest book, Soviet Politics at Home and Abroad, wherein he states "The Russian adventure marks a long forward stride toward human mastery of man's fate * * *."

This again, Mr. Chairman, is referring to a man who is called in to lecture our diplomats. He says in his book:

The Russian adventure marks a long forward stride toward human mastery of man's fate. * * *

That is how the State Department's expert instructor on United States Soviet relations sums up Stalin's behavior and the almost 28 bloody years of Communist dictatorship in Russia.

No wonder State Department secret documents leak. No wonder Jimmy Byrnes goes to conferences with Molotov and comes staggering home asking who touched off the blast.

This writer plans to sit in on Schuman's June 10 performance, if it comes off, and will try to report on same in this space. That is, of course, if they don't lock the door first.

Thus we have the officials of the State Department again warned of a man who by any "yardstick of loyalty" could not possibly be a good security risk.

Mr. Lattimore himself is a prolific writer and there is no lack of material for the committee to ascertain exactly where this man stands in the political scheme of things.

The Reverend James F. Kearney, S. J., writing in the Columbia magazine of September 1940, gives more first-hand information of great value to the committee. This magazine is published by the Knights of Columbus, the most prominent order of Catholic laymen in America.

Here is what Reverend Kearney wrote:

Who or what has so vitiated the opinion of intelligent Americans on the China question?

This article was in September, 1940:

Until recently, despite the dust that has been deliberately thrown in American eyes by pink correspondents, the question could be stated so clearly and simply that grammar school students could grasp it. Having explained it to grammar school students, I know. Here it is, expressed in monosyllable words: "If the Reds win out there, we lose. If they lose, we win." Well, for all practical purposes, the Reds have now won, and in consequence we and the Chinese have lost. For communism it is the greatest triumph since the Russian revolution; for us, though few Americans yet fully realize it, it is perhaps the greatest disaster in our history; and the end is not yet. Who is responsible? It wasn't a one-man job; short-sighted Chinese officials contributed 50 percent. There are those who believe, though, that no Americans deserve more credit for this Russian triumph and Sino-American disaster than Owen Lattimore and a small group of his followers.

Owen Lattimore, confidant of two United States Presidents, adviser to our State Department, author of 10 books about the Far East, where he has 25 years of travel and study to his credit, was born in Washington, D. C., but after a few months was taken to North China. At 12 he went to study in Switzerland, then in England, and returned to China as a newsman before taking up exploration, particularly in Manchuria and Mongolia. He then studied in Peking, first on a fellowship from the Harvard Yen-ching Foundation and later on a John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship, knows the Chinese, Mongolian, and Russian languages well.

Returning to the United States at the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war in 1937, a year later he became director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations of Johns Hopkins University, a post he still holds.

Incidentally, he has held that post, I believe, all through the time he has acted as State Department consultant.

In 1941 he was for 6 months President Roosevelt's political adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, then returned to the States to enter the OWI, becoming deputy director to the overseas branch in charge of Pacific operations. In June, 1944, he and J. Carter Vincent, later to head the Far Eastern Bureau of the State Department, accompanied Henry Wallace of the State Department on a diplomatic tour of Siberia and free China.

So high does Owen Lattimore stand in Washington that it is said the only two books on President Truman's desk when he announced Japan's surrender were newsman John Gunther's Inside Asia and Lattimore's Solution in Asia. Lattimore was next named special economic adviser to Edwin V. Pauley, head of the postwar economic mission to Tokyo. Though not an authority on Japan, he did not hesitate to criticize former Ambassador Joseph C. Grew's plan, adopted by MacArthur, to govern the Japanese people through the Emperor. He believed that the Emperor and all his male heirs should be interned in China and a republic set up in Japan.

In this thoroughly distinguished orientalist's career there are many disturbing features. For example, in former Red Louis Budenz' March 19, 1949, Collier's article, entitled "The Menace of Red China," we read "Most Americans, during World War II fell for the Moscow line that the Chinese Communists were not really Communists, but agrarian reformers. That is just what Moscow wanted Americans to believe. Even many naive Government officials fell for it. This deception of United States officials and public was the result of a planned campaign; I helped to plan it. The No. 1 end was a Chinese coalition government in which Chiang would accept the agrarian reformers, at the insistence of the United States. We could work through legitimate Far East organizations and writers that were recognized as 'Oriental authorities.' Frederick V. Field emphasized use of the Institute of Pacific Relations. The agrarian reformers idea started from there. It took root in leading Far East cultural groups in the United States, spread to certain policymaking circles in the State Department and broke into prominent position in the American press. The Communists were successful in impressing their views on the United States State Department simply by planting articles with the proper slant in such magazines as Far Eastern Survey, Pacific Affairs and Amerasia. Both Far Eastern Survey and Pacific Affairs are publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations. This is not a Communist organization."

I might say for the benefit of Father Kearney that the California Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Institute of Pacific Relations as a Communist front organization.

Senator TYDINGS. You have been just quoting for the record Mr. Budenz' article in Collier's magazine?

Senator MCCARTHY. That is correct.

Where does Mr. Lattimore come in? From 1934 to 1941 he was editor of Pacific Affairs. Freda Uteley mentions him in two of her books. In her Last Chance in China she tells how Moscow, where she then worked as a Communist, was able to help its friends and discomfit its enemies in the Far East thanks to the Institute of Pacific Relations, and that Mr. Lattimore was among those Americans who came to Moscow for help and advice (p. 103).

I may inject here, if I may, that while I have not been in touch with Freda Uteley, I believe that she would be one of the valuable witnesses on whom the committee could call. She is a former Communist, apparently has completely reformed, and is apparently a very intelligent woman.

Senator TYDINGS. Is she the Polish lady who went in there and came back and became an American citizen?

Senator MCCARTHY. I don't know her national background.

Senator TYDINGS. I have them mixed up, I suppose.

Senator MCCARTHY (continues reading):

In her Lost Illusion (p. 104) she refers to the same 1936 Moscow meeting: "The whole staff of our Pacific Ocean cabinet had an all-day session at the Institute with E. C. Carter, Owen Lattimore, and Harriet Moore, leading lights of the Institute of Pacific Relations."

Understand, I am now quoting from a person who apparently sat in tight with the Communists at that time.

"I was a little surprised at the time that these Americans should defer so often and so completely to the Russian viewpoint. Owen Lattimore found it difficult at first to submit to the discipline required of the Friends of the Soviet Union. He told me a few months later in London how he had almost lost his position as editor of Pacific Affairs because he had published an article by the Trotskyist Harold Isaacs. In later years in the United States it did not astonish me to find the Institute of Pacific Relations following the same general lines as the Daily Worker in regard to China and Japan."

Henry Wallace never claimed to be an expert on the Far East. How much, if any, of his report after returning from the Siberia-China visit was written or suggested by the oriental expert, Mr. Lattimore, I do not know. One thing emerges, however: After their return, the American policy which has proved so disastrous for both Chinese and American interests and so helpful to Russia was put into effect and is still being pursued. Lattimore's solution in Asia was described by one reviewer as "an appeal to Chiang Kai-shek to free himself from the galling yoke (of the Kuomintang) and to set free the democratic forces which have proved effective in northwestern China," for example, the Chinese Reds. That book is again referred to in an article by ex-Communist Max Eastman and J. B. Powell in a June, 1945, Reader's Digest article, The Fate of the World Is at Stake in China, wherein they blast the deception that Russia is a democracy and that the Chinese can therefore safely be left to Russian influence. Owen Lattimore is perhaps the most subtle evangelist of this erroneous conception.

Mr. Lattimore praised the net result of the Moscow trials and the blood purge by which Stalin secured his dictatorship in 1930-39 as a triumph for democracy. He now urges our Government, in Solution in Asia, to accept cheerfully the spread of the Soviet form of democracy in Central Asia. His publishers thus indicate the drift of his book: "He (Mr. Lattimore) shows that all the Asiatic peoples are more interested in actual democratic practices, such as the ones they can see in action across the Russian border, than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism." Does that sound as if Mr. Lattimore, a top adviser on our Far Eastern affairs, is on our team?

The same article continues with a prophecy which has just about come true: "If Russian dictatorship spreads its tentacles across China the cause of democracy (for example, United States style) in Asia is lost. As is well known, these tentacles need not include invading Soviet troops, but only the native Communist Parties now giving allegiance to the Soviet Union and taking their directives from Moscow. When these Communist Parties get control of a neighboring state the Moscow dictatorship and its fellow travelers call that a friendly government. It is by means of these Communist-controlled friendly governments—not by Soviet military conquest—that Russian power and totalitarian tyranny is spreading from the Soviet Union, in Asia as in Europe."

That is perhaps good background for the current slogan of Mr. Lattimore and his loyal followers, Edgar Snow, Ted White, Richard Lauterbach, Harvard's Fairbank, and many an ex-OWI man, that there's nothing much for America to worry about because Mao Tse-tung's communism is a nationalist movement.

A moment's reflection should make it clear that the very last thing a real Chinese nationalist would do would be to swallow hook, line, and sinker the doctrine of Karl Marx, a German Jew, who besides being a foreigner has a system that goes counter to every Chinese instinct and every tradition in the Chinese concept of society.

This recalls an incident a Belgian priest related to me in Shanghai a year and a half ago. He had become a Chinese citizen, and when the Chinese Reds occupied his church in North China they followed the usual custom (which is probably new to Mr. Lattimore) of putting up the pictures of Marx and Stalin in the place of honor above the high altar, with those of Mao Tse-tung and Chu Teh below. A Chinese Red then told the priest flatly, "We are going to get rid of absolutely all foreign influence in China. Our policy is China for the Chinese." I can imagine Mr. Lattimore saying, "Just what I told you." But the Belgian-Chinese replied, "And those two foreign gentlemen up there, Marx and Stalin? When did they become Chinese citizens?" The Red slunk silently away.

If anyone is still puzzled by the contention that the Chinese Marxists are primarily nationalists, a glance at the Communist manifesto will clear matters up. Though not in substance, yet in form, we read there: "The struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie." That, I believe, shows us what is back of the present national slogan our United States plinks apply to China's Reds. It's not authentic nationalism, of course, as the manifesto explains later: "The Communists are reproached with desiring to abolish countries and nationality. The working men have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got."

The spurious nature of the nationalism of Mao Tse-tung was admitted by Mr. Lattimore himself, perhaps unintentionally, in a tape-recorded speech he gave in San Francisco, December 7, 1948: "The Chinese Communists never made any bones about the fact that they are Marxists. They are Marxist Communists in their international relations. They never question the Russian line. They follow every twist and turn of it." That is an important admission by Mr. Lattimore, since so many of his followers have been trying to tell us there is no Moscow control over China's Reds. If they follow every twist and turn of the Moscow line they are evidently not Chinese nationalists as we understand the term, but pseudo nationalists.

A. T. Steele and Andrew Roth of the New York Herald Tribune and the Nation, respectively, after getting out of Red Peking recently, declared that the Chinese Red leaders are in every sense of the word Communists who stand squarely and faithfully for the Moscow party line, and will join the Kremlin in the coming World War III against the Imperialist powers, particularly America. They likewise agree that while Mao might possibly become an extreme nationalist at some future date, another Tito, there is absolutely no evidence that this is a factor to be seriously reckoned with for a long time. Mr. Lattimore to the contrary notwithstanding. Spencer Moosa, latest newsmen out of Peking, confirms their statements. The very first movie put on by the Reds in the auditorium of the Catholic University in Peking after they moved in this year was the Life of Stalin. Need we say it was not anti-Russian? And so, instance after instance shows the very close connection between Moscow and Chinese communism that has been witnessed throughout the last 28 years by intelligent observers who have lived in Red China—where Mr. Lattimore has never lived.

To the average American, whom the Red propaganda is intended to victimize, it seems quite natural that Mao Tse-tung a native of China who has never visited Moscow, should think first of China's instead of Russia's interests. Yet how many native-born Americans are there who, once they join the party, think nothing of selling out their country and its secrets to the Kremlin? Such is the strange mesmerism exercised by their Moscow masters. It is, then, no harder to understand Mao's utter devotion to the party line than it is to understand that of Foster, or Dennis, or Earl Browder. After all, remember, a real Communist has no country. And surely Mao has proved he is a 100-percent Communist. Let's not be deceived any longer, then, by this fake nationalism of China's Reds, which is the central thesis of Mr. Lattimore's recent book, The Situation in Asia.

If a man who had written 10 volumes about Africa, and thereby won a name for himself as an authority, should nevertheless maintain that the Negroes in Africa aren't really black but white, it would be a cause for wonder. Mr. Owen Lattimore, who has written 10 books on Asia and is called the best informed American on Asiatic affairs living today is doubtless well-informed on many Asiatic matters but unfortunately, if we are to take his written words as an index of his knowledge of China's Reds, he is very badly misinformed about the true color of that most important body of individuals and their whole way of acting. Which reminds me of a recent conversation with one of Mr. Lattimore's OWI boys who had just returned from a 3 years' correspondent assignment in China. I asked him why it was that practically all of our foreign newsmen, though supposedly educated in the American tradition of fair play, spoke entirely of corruption in the Chiang regime but said nothing about the corruption in the Mao regime. And this man, who was being paid for giving his American readers an honest picture of conditions in the vital Far East, answered, "Because there is no corruption in the Red regime." I laughed at him for wasting his 3 years in the Orient and passed him an article showing that not only is the Red regime corrupt, but from every conceivable American standpoint it is conservatively 10 times more corrupt than its current opposite number.

It is probably of such men that Mr. Lattimore, in his book Situation in China (p. 277) writes: "Hitherto American observers who have been acutely conscious of secret police activities in Kuomintang China, have had nothing comparable to report from Communist China." The reason is that these official observers were allowed the freedom to observe the limited activities of KMT secret police, while they aren't even permitted to enter Red China. Had they wished, though, they could have learned a lot from people, some of them Americans, who had lived in Red China. They would have heard, for instance, about the T'ing chung bul, or eavesdropper corps, who, after killing off all watchdogs, creep up at night, next to the wall or on the flat roofs of North China homes, to hear what is being said inside the family about the Communists. Children are rewarded for spying on their parents and, if anyone is believed to be guilty of anti-Communist remarks, a terror gang swoops down at midnight and the chances are the unfortunate victim will be discovered next morning buried alive outside his home. This sort of secret police and terrorism combined has been so universal in Red China that if Mr. Lattimore doesn't know about it he knows extremely little of Chinese communism.

As far back as 1945 the predominant sentiment everywhere in Red areas was fear, universal fear, fear at every instant, according to an official report of a Frenchman, a former university professor from Tientsin who spent the years from 1941 to 1945 in Red territory, and had been hauled before both Japanese and Red tribunals. "It is not terror," he says, "for terror is a fear which shows itself exteriorally. Here one must not allow his fear to be seen; he must appear satisfied and approve everything that is said and done. It is a hidden fear, but a creeping, paralyzing fear. The people keep quiet. They do not criticize; they avoid passing out any news. They are afraid of their neighbor, who may denounce them. They are afraid of the Reds who might hear and imprison them. When the Reds impose a tax, it is paid without a word. If they requisition anyone for public work, the work is done carefully and rapidly, without need of any blows and curses as in the time of the Japanese, and wonderful to say, without any need of supervision. (This is amazing to anyone who knows the easy-going Chinese character.) I have witnessed groups of workers along the big highways built by the Japanese, doing exactly the same kind of work they did for the Japanese, but how different their attitude. There was no foreman there to supervise, and yet everything was done carefully, with hardly a word, without the least bit of joking." Mr. Lattimore, with his lack of background, might interpret this as a sign of enthusiasm for the Red masters. But the report states simply, "They were afraid."

What was true in 1945 in Red areas is also true today according to the very latest 1949 reports that have filtered through the bamboo curtain: "There isn't too much suffering from hunger in the city, but it is impossible to lay up any reserves. The Communists search every house methodically and confiscate any surplus. Anyone who complains or criticizes them disappears mysteriously, buried alive, it is said. No one dares say a word, even to his best friend. In the country districts conditions are terrible. The Reds take everything; grain, livestock, clothing, tools, and now all are being mobilized for army service. Famine reigns everywhere together with fear. The people endure this with clenched teeth, but when asked how things are going always answer, 'Everything is going well.' They had better!

These reports come from reliable people who were there and know what they are talking about, and who ridicule the fairy tales Mr. Lattimore from his distant and comfortable chair in Johns Hopkins spins for eager young Americans who believe he is an authority on China's Reds. What, for example, could be further from the truth than this statement in the Situation in China, page 100: "In China it may be conceded" (not by anyone who knows the situation, though, if I may interrupt) "that the Communists hold the confidence of the people to such an extent that they can probably do more by persuasion, with less resort to coercion, than any previous revolutionaries in history. But the Communists cannot indulge in experiments which the people do not accept, because the armed and organized peasants would be able to resist them just as they have hitherto resisted the return of the landlords." Sheer nonsense! The only real landlords left in Red areas are the Red leaders themselves, and the people know enough not to try to resist these ruthless masters. For some reason, no one seems to relish being buried alive; and so the Communists can indulge in absolutely any experiment they choose without the slightest open resistance from the peasants, who are merely awaiting patiently for better days.

Since Mr. Lattimore is patently in error on so many vital points connected with the China Red question, it becomes more and more strange that his advice on Red China should be followed almost slavishly by the United States State Department. It has already brought China to disaster and may, if we continue to follow it, also ruin America. It might be well to consider what advice he has given for future United States policy so we shall know what a new litany of Lattimore disasters awaits us.

He has a chapter on Japan in his Situation in Asia and, although he admits General MacArthur is a first-class administrator, he dislikes his "fatherly mysticism" and "oldline Republicanism", hints it would have been wiser to give the Russians more say, considers the present policy as pseudo-realistic and bound to fail. "It's likely to blow up in our faces, like a humiliating stink bomb," damaging MacArthur's reputation in the end. He doesn't like keeping the Emperor, nor the type of democracy MacArthur is giving, apparently preferring for Japan the totalitarian type Mao Tse-tung is employing in China. Mr. Lattimore doesn't like to see Japan make a bulwark against Russian expansion, and believes that since she is possessed of the most advanced technical and managerial know-how in Asia she will eventually make her own terms with both Russia and China, without consulting the United States.

"The Japanese, watching America's failure to control the situation in China through the Kuomintang, have been giggling in their kimono sleeves. In a queer way it has helped to restore their self-respect for their own failure on the continent." He sees no future for Japan apart from the future of Asia, since she needs the iron and coal of Manchuria and the markets of China.

In this he is probably right; that is why it was always to America's vital interest to see that the open door policy and the territorial integrity of China were preserved, though this adviser to our State Department did not think them very important. He considers east Asia now definitely out of control by either Russia or America, stating that it forms a group of "third countries" which seem to resemble Nippon's ill-fated "East Asia coprosperity sphere." He believes Japan, then, will come to terms both with Communist Russia and Communist China, and will end by being more anti-American than anti-Russian. If we had only adopted his plan for a Japanese democracy right after the war, what a deal of trouble we would have saved!

What, now, are his plans for the mainland? He has long been in favor of a Chiang coalition with the Reds, and blames our 80th Congress for spoiling that. The result is now Communist control—which of course would have evaporated just as well had his original coalition idea gone through. We mustn't lay down our own conditions for dealing with a Red China, he says, or we shall spoil our favorable position with the Chinese. Has he never heard how Mao's Reds detest Americans, and hold half a dozen United States consuls under house arrest? "We must at all costs avoid the appearance of wanting to punish the Chinese people for having a government which we didn't approve for them in advance." As if the Chinese were really anxious for a puppet Red regime. We must not support any rump government, for that would be dividing China. We must extend credits to poor Red China and help build it up by trade and American engineering know-how as "Ford Motors and General Electric did in Russia in the period between wars." But let's not lay down any conditions for our aid, by insisting that Red China be hostile to Red Russia.

And if all that isn't enough to make Uncle Sam suspect that Owen Lattimore is making a fool out of him in the interests of world communism, the expert goes much further: "The new government of China will claim China's Big Five position in the United Nations, including the right of veto. By the use of our own veto we could delay China in moving into this position," but of course it would be unfair to deprive Russia of another vote, especially since Russia has had nothing whatsoever to do with imposing communism on China! See now why the pinks are so strong on their insistence that the Red movement in China is purely nationalistic? And another vote for Mother Russia?

Let's take Outer Mongolia, that voted unanimously to be annexed to Russia in 1945—each voter being required to sign his name on his ballot. "Mongolia," he says, "is between a Communist-ruled Russia and a Communist-controlled China. It would be an advantage to American policy to be able to emphasize that there is a country occupying 600,000 square miles of territory * * * inhabited by people who are neither Chinese nor Russians. It is impossible to make use of this advantage unless the separation of Outer Mongolia is emphasized by membership in the United Nations * * *. It is true that Mongolia as a member of the United Nations would mean another vote for Russia; but would this be a greater disadvantage than our present complete lack of access to this key country between China and Russia?" (p. 220).

Yes, Mr. Lattimore, it would. Considering that the whole United States had but one vote in the United Nations while Russia started out with three, it is simply wonderful of Owen Lattimore to give a couple more Far East satellite votes to our cold war enemy. Since he is one of the chief advisers to our Far Eastern State Department Bureau, is it any wonder that disaster has been piled on disaster in Asia for Americans while world communism engages in frenzied applause? If Mr. Lattimore is permitted to turn over one far eastern vote after another to Russia, Moscow will soon dominate the United Nations, and then can safely discard the veto. Why should one man, whose writings show he has no knowledge of the character of China's Reds, be allowed to go on unchallenged promoting chaos and ruling Christianity in Asia? True, he doesn't say he wants a Red Asia; but the publisher of his Situation in Asia indicates his intentions when on the jacket of the book they print a map of Lattimore's Asia, including Japan, Sakhalin, all of China, the Philippines, the Dutch East Indies, Siam, Burma, Malaya, and India, in nice Soviet Red.

That is the end of the quotation of Father Kearney.

It is uncanny how these State Department policy makers are drawn together time after time in an organization or group or project of pro-Soviet nature.

I now hand the committee a booklet setting forth the officers and trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It will be noted that Mr. Lattimore is a trustee. It will be also noted from the book I previously handed the Chair that this institute is listed as either subversive or Communist front by the California Un-American Activities Committee.

Senator TRAVIS. Where are the headquarters of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Senator MCCARTHY. One East Fifty-fourth Street, New York City 22, and my exhibit 20, Mr. Chairman, reads: "The officers and trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations invite you to become a member of its American Council." This contains the name of our own Owen Lattimore. It will be filed in the record.

The familiar pattern starts again with Messrs. Lattimore, Hanson, Bisson, and Jessup.

In the Institute of Pacific Relations we have such pro-Communists as Frederick Vanderbilt Field, Philip Jaffe, Kate L. Mitchell, Andrew Roth, and Nym Wales. Incidentally, I might mention that Nym Wales, which is not her actual name, was the coeditor with Mr. Hanson in the magazine he was running in Peiping at the time the Japanese-Chinese war broke out.

The Attorney General of the United States has declared the American Peace Mobilization to be a subversive organization and the House Un-American Activities Committee has placed the same stamp of infamy on the Washington Committee for Aid to China.

The American Peace Mobilization was short-lived. It existed during the days of the Stalin-Hitler pact and was liquidated by the Communists on the very day that Hitler invaded the Soviet Union.

Frederick Vanderbilt Field, one of the country's top Communists, was executive secretary of the American Peace Mobilization on Tuesday evening, February 11, 1941, also.

On that date, the Washington Committee for Aid to China, held a meeting at Sixteenth and O Streets NW., Washington.

At the time this meeting was held, President Roosevelt was under the most savage attack of his career by Frederick Vanderbilt Field and his American Peace Mobilization. That was when the Stalin-Hitler pact still existed. That was when they were calling Roosevelt a warmonger in no uncertain terms.

The Senators may recall that this was the occasion when the American Peace Mobilization organized and carried out a 24-hour picket line around the White House. The pickets carried placards denouncing Roosevelt as a warmongering tool of Wall Street. That was while the Hitler-Stalin pact existed.

On June 21, 1941, the American Peace Mobilization pickets were still surrounding the White House. When Hitler invaded the Soviet Union on the morning of June 22, the pickets were withdrawn within an hour. The party line had changed in a matter of minutes and the American Peace Mobilization then became the American People's Mobilization, urging the immediate entrance of the United States into the war.

Again, associated with Frederick Vanderbilt Field, we have Owen Lattimore as the principal speaker at the above meeting on the evening of February 11, 1941, with only two other speakers. One of them was Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Here again we have the old familiar pattern of a member of the important policy-making group of the State Department collaborating with known Communists under the sponsorship of organizations officially declared subversive.

I want to again direct the committee's particular attention to the fact that while Owen Lattimore was with Frederick Vanderbilt Field, this was the same Field who, on the 22d day of June, the day after Hitler invaded Russia, promptly changed his line of attack, the same great and good friend of Owen Lattimore.

Senator TYDINGS. While you are taking a little breath, I would just like to take this opportunity to announce to the press that these exhibits will be available in the keeping of the reporter immediately after the conclusion of Senator McCarthy's testimony, because you will want to see all of the names on here. I see Mr. Henry Luce's name as one of the vice presidents of this organization.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I may suggest that there are a number of other names on there that are probably completely on the other side of the fence from Mr. Henry Luce, and I think it is unfair for the chairman or anyone else to pick and choose two or three names of respectable citizens who are on these lists and not call attention to a number of the Communists' names.

Senator TYDINGS. They were already pointed out by the witness. I just wanted to point out one on the other side, not three or four.

Senator MCCARTHY. I might say that the other day as I handed in the exhibits, as the Chair will recall, I was naming the outstanding Communists whose names appeared on exhibit after exhibit. The Chair objected to that and said he would have to name the respectable people who are named on a few of them. For that reason the Chair will note that I have refrained from naming all the well-known Communists who appear on exhibit after exhibit, and I hope I have made it clear in the past that one of the reasons why the Attorney General, the House committee, the California committee, and various other committees, have considered these front organizations so dangerous is that from time to time they have succeeded in getting respectable peoples' names on them. That is what has made them dangerous.

Senator TYNDING. I was of the impression, Senator McCarthy, that you had read some supporting names. I might have been in error. That is on page 1-A, where you say:

In the Institute of Pacific Relations, we have such pro-Communists as: Frederick Vanderbilt Field, Philip Jaffe, Kate L. Mitchell, Andrew Roth, Nym Wales.

Senator MCCARTHY. The Chair is correct.

Senator TYNDING. Following out Senator Hickenlooper's suggestion, the Chair will read the rest of these names. I do not know a great many of the people, but I will read their names. These are the officers and trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations: First, officers and board of trustees, American Council: Robert G. Sproul, chairman; Edward C. Carter, executive vice chairman; Joseph P. Chamberlain, Mortimer Graves, Henry W. Luce, Ray Lyman Wilbur, vice chairmen.

Ray Lyman Wilbur was either a Secretary in the Hoover Cabinet or is the head of one of the universities in California, I don't know which.

Brooks Emeny, treasurer; Tillie G. Shahn, assistant treasurer; and Lawrence Morris, secretary.

The members of the board of trustees are Edward W. Allen, Raymond B. Allen, Christian Arndt, Paul S. Bachman, Eugene E. Barnett, Pearl S. Buck, George Cameron, Edward C. Carter, Joseph P. Chamberlain, Allan E. Charles, Lauchlin Currie, John L. Curtis, Joseph S. Davis, A. L. Dean, Arthur Dean, Len De Caux, Dorothy Douglas, Brooks Emeny, Frederick V. Field, Henry Field, Galen M. Fisher.

Also G. W. Fisher, Charles K. Gamble, Clarence E. Gauss, Mrs. Frank Gerbode, Huntington Gilchrist, A. J. Gock, Carrington Goodrich, Henry F. Grady, Mortimer Graves, Admiral John W. Green-slade, William R. Herod, John Hersey, the writer; Paul G. Hoffman, William C. Johnstone, Owen Lattimore, Charles F. Loomis, Henry R. Luce, publisher of Life, Time, and Fortune magazines; Charles E. Martin, Mrs. Alfred McLaughlin, Abbot Low Moffat, Harriet L. Moore, George Abbot Morison, Lawrence Morris, A. W. Robertson.

Also Chester Rowell, Robert G. Sproul, G. Nye Steiger, Donald Straus, George Taylor, Juan Trippe, president of Pan American Air Lines; Henry A. Wallace, Louis Weiss, Sumner Welles, Lynn White, Jr., Brayton Wilbur, Ray Lyman Wilbur, Herbert J. Wood, and Mrs. Louise L. Wright.

The witness will proceed.

Senator McCARTHY. I now hand you, Mr. Chairman, exhibit 30, entitled "National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights." On April 21, 1943, the House Committee on Appropriations issued a report citing this organization as "subversive and un-American." On March 29, the House Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited it as a Communist front.

On September 2, 1947, on page 12 of its Report No. 1115, the congressional Committee on Un-American Activities said:

It will be remembered that during the days of the infamous Soviet-Nazi pact the Communists built a protective organization known as the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, which culminated in the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

In its 1948 report, on pages 112 and 327 the California Committee on Un-American Activities, after citing it as a Communist-front organization, defending Communists, had this to say:

After the dissolution of the American League for Peace and Democracy in February 1940, the Communist Party frantically organized a new series of front organizations. The National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights was one of the new fronts and it was filled from top to bottom with veteran Communist Party-liners.

The Maryland Association for Democratic Rights was an affiliate of the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights. At a conference of this organization in Baltimore early in 1944, we have as sponsors Mr. Owen Lattimore and his wife.

I might say I for one believe, and I think the committee will agree with me after they have gone into this in detail, that Owen Lattimore was not a dupe who joined these Communist-front organizations by mistake. He was one of the allegedly respectable men who got some actually respectable names on this list.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, allow me to interrupt you a moment. I don't know a lot of these people in this Baltimore chapter. Some of them I do know. Some of them I know very slightly; some of them I don't know at all.

I am not going to read the list in the record, but I would like, inasmuch as the chairman is from Maryland, to notify any Maryland papers or press services that are going to circulate in Maryland that a copy of all these names is available here at the head table if they want it.

Thank you, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say most likely the ones the Senator knows are the good, outstanding people.

Senator TYDINGS. The ones that I see there are the ones that have opposed me pretty generally in a good many elections. I don't mean all of them, but I recognize some of them.

Senator McCARTHY. We will consider that as proof that they were wrong.

I assume that Mr. Lattimore, a high State Department official, undoubtedly did get some fine Baltimore people to associate their names with that. He must have known that a year previous to that time this was declared a subversive, Communist-front organization. Most likely any Baltimore people who are on that, whose names are on that paper, did not know that that organization had been declared subversive a year before.

Senator TYDINGS. There are some names on there that I recognize, that I am sure he would exculpate from any desire to be in any disloyal organization. There are some others that I do not know, but I recognize three or four representative names.

Senator McCARTHY. Thank you, sir.

Once again we have a policy-making State Department attaché collaborating with those who have sworn to destroy the Nation by force and violence.

I find it impossible to visualize this sort of a good security risk under yardstick of loyalty outlined by Secretary of State Acheson.

I hand the committee an exhibit of the Writers' Congress of 1943. This will be exhibit No. 31.

On December 4, 1947, and on September 21, 1948, the then Attorney General Tom Clark in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, cited the Hollywood Writers' Mobilization as subversive and communistic. In its 1945 report on page 130, the California Committee on Un-American Affairs described this organization as one "whose true purpose" was "the creation of a clearing house for Communist propaganda."

On October 1, 2, and 3 of 1943, the Writers' Congress and the Hollywood Writers' Mobilization held a meeting on the University of California-LA campus in Westwood. Appearing as the representative of the Office of War Information was Mr. Owen Lattimore.

Here again we have Mr. Lattimore involved as a principal in an organization declared un-American by the Attorney General of the United States.

In the magazine, Pacific Affairs, of September 1938, Owen Lattimore described the Moscow purge trials as a "triumph for Democracy."

In his book, entitled "Solution in Asia," Owen Lattimore declares that among the people of Asia, the Soviet Union has "a great power of attraction—it stands for democracy."

Let me repeat that. Here is the man shaping our Asiatic policy. He said this in his own book. No one else has said this for him. Owen Lattimore has said, in his book entitled "Solution in Asia," "that among the people of Asia, the Soviet Union has a great power of attraction—it stands for democracy."

I submit that the background of Mr. Lattimore, his close collaboration and affiliation with numerous Communist organizations; his friendship and close cooperation with pro-Communist individuals, leaves absolutely no doubt that he is an extremely bad security risk under Secretary of State Acheson's yardstick of loyalty or under any other yardstick you could apply, and in fact, his wide knowledge of far eastern affairs and his affinity for the Soviet cause in that area might well have already done this Nation incalculable and irreparable harm.

So much for Mr. Lattimore.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall be prepared to give the committee whatever additional information I can at such other meeting as the Chair decides to call me. I might say that in view of the fact that the Chair said that Judge Kenyon might or might not be here tomorrow, I would appreciate it very much to know at the earliest possible time whether he wants me to appear tomorrow, and if so, at what time. I can't be called at the last minute and asked to come up here, because it does take a tremendous amount of night and day work for me to get these cases in shape.

Senator TYDINGS. I would say to Senator McCarthy that the matter up before the Senate is not the housing bill but the FDIC. You have been under right much of a strain there to read for an hour and a half or so. I think it would be very wise, with your approval, as the housing bill is not on the floor today, if we were to take a recess, which is at 1 o'clock, and come back, let us say, at half past two, which would give the Senator time to eat and get his next case in order.

Would that be satisfactory?

Senator MCCARTHY. I understood, Mr. Chairman, the agreement was that we would recess when we got through, and I simply am going to have to insist that I cannot spend all morning and all afternoon on these cases. It takes me a long time to get them in shape. I have been working just about around the clock getting these cases in shape for the committee, and I cannot work night and day only in preparation for the committee. I will come before the committee every forenoon. I just simply cannot spend every forenoon and afternoon here. There is a great wealth of material to be gone over.

I might say this. Originally I had planned on coming here today and giving the committee all of the information which I personally had assembled in chronological order. I felt that the information that I have given in the Congressional Record from the secret files would be sufficient to show that a sizeable number of individuals are bad security risks, and that the committee would develop all of those cases.

However, when I mentioned that to one of the newspaper men the other day, the State Department heard it and promptly there was a tremendous amount of screaming on the air and in the press that McCarthy wasn't presenting all of his cases.

In view of that I am going to try and give the committee all conceivable details of those cases. That is a hard job. I will bring that up to date as I possibly can.

Let me say this also. I think we have an unusual situation developing, an unusual campaign over in the State Department. It seems that whenever Dean Acheson wants to do any name calling or issue any press releases it is done in the name of a very likeable and fine young fellow, a harmless young man by the name of Peurifoy. It is a clever attempt to shift on to Peurifoy the blame for Acheson's activities. We all know that Mr. Peurifoy has no more power to discharge a man like Hanson or Lattimore than the President's aide has to discharge the President, and I just hope very soon the Secretary of State has enough guts to stand up and say "This is my baby; I will take the blame for the sort of situation that has been disclosed" and quit shoving the blame on to the shoulders of a very fine young man who must do as he is told.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not interrupt you, but that has nothing to do with the evidence before this committee. Our job is to hear evidence that has to do with disloyalty in the State Department and other branches of the Government where State Department employees have gone.

You have given us an outline of 81 cases. It is the policy of the chairman, I am sure, supported unanimously by the committee, that we will get those files, and we hope to organize this week and start work on them. If you have anything you wish to add to your testimony on the floor of the Senate, we will be very glad to have it, or any other cases you may have that you want to present.

When I talked to you on Friday, you told me that you thought you could finish the presentation of your case today, if you were not interrupted, in about 4 or 5 hours. You told Senator Lodge that, and I so announced it to the press.

We have made our arrangements to sit today, this afternoon or tonight, if possible, to give you the opportunity that you wanted, and we have made our arrangements accordingly. I think if you could help us by coming back at 2:30, so long as the situation on the Senate floor did not require you to go, it would be better if we could finish this afternoon, rather than have a night session. That will not preclude you, of course, from giving us additional information. We simply wanted to get the files of what we are to investigate pretty clear before we turned it over to the staff which we will shortly name, in more or less one piece, rather than to string it out so we could set up an over-all system to check and cross check at the very beginning. You can appreciate that that would be the thorough way to do it.

Senator MCCARTHY. I think the chairman has a very commendable idea. I might say, however, that as I said before, this is not the only task I have, presenting this evidence. I have a State and a lot of people in that State. I have to take care of their interests also. I have been working almost 24 hours a day getting these cases in shape. I simply cannot work all morning and all afternoon before this committee. The most I can do is to give the committee half a day of my time, and I will be glad to do that on any day. I will be glad to present these cases, and I think they are of sufficient import so that the committee will want to hear them. If not, that is entirely up to the committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I strenuously object and do object to night sessions. I reserved that right the other day. I am not going to sit in night sessions if I can help it.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, could you come back at 2:30 or 3 o'clock with more material, today?

Senator MCCARTHY. I have told the Chair that I will give the committee my mornings. I just can't give them all day. I don't want to appear arbitrary, but this has been a tremendous task. My office staff is almost on the verge of quitting. I have been working them all night. I worked them all day Sunday and all Sunday night. I must have time to get this material in shape.

As I say, I had originally planned on giving the committee the material principally from the Congressional Record on many of these individuals, giving them all of the leads. However, I find that the Secretary of State is demanding that I personally give the committee more. I think maybe he is right in this case, so I will give the committee more stuff. I will give them cases that are more fully developed outside of the secret files.

I might say that in the Hanson case you have a complete case without any files at all. I think the files will be of interest to you.

In the Brunauer case, I do sincerely hope the committee takes that case immediately and goes into it and gets the files. There is plenty of work for the committee to start on. They need not wait until I present more cases. If no other case were presented except the Brunauer case and if she is gotten out of this top-secret position, it would justify the committee's existence, it would justify the spending of all the money the Senate has authorized the committee to spend.

Senator TYDINGS. It hasn't authorized any, yet.

Senator McCARTHY. Let's start on that one.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say that the committee hasn't had a dollar put at its disposal yet. There has been no authorization, but I am hoping that today we will get some money.

Senator, the chairman of the committee is certainly not going to press you. You are carrying a heavy burden. We are all carrying a heavy burden, too. I haven't been in my office to do any work now for 4 or 5 or 6 days, and I have a bunch of people down there who are after me, almost beside themselves, to get some decisions, and that is the reason I tried to get the thing under way today and hoped we could have concluded, but if you are not ready there is no reason why you should not have a fair chance to produce it. It would help us all to plan our lives if we could know about what you estimate—we are not going to hold you to it—the additional time that you will require to present the matter that you have in mind.

Senator McCARTHY. I want the Chair to know that I am not trying to evade giving him an estimate, but let me say this. It will be extremely difficult to estimate. I have in my office now letters from people, some of them having good information, some of them the typical crackpot letters which one gets, giving information and tips in a vast number of these cases. I find that some of them develop unusually fast. In fact, much of the material that I am presenting tomorrow morning frankly was not in my hands the day I spoke on the Senate floor. When I say "tomorrow," I mean the next day you can hear me.

The information that I have presently developed, the cases that I am ready to start on tomorrow or the next day, whenever I am called, those cases will still take, I think, more than the 5 hours which I mentioned to the Chair last Friday. The Chair was not misquoting me. I did tell the Chair that I thought I could get rid of all these cases in 5 hours without any interruptions.

I frankly don't know, Mr. Chairman. I think it will take another, oh, at least 2 or 3 days, spending the entire forenoon without interruptions—I mean without any unnecessary interruptions.

Senator TYDINGS. That gives us some line on it. Then I take it it is the Senator's position that he does not want to go on any more today.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this understanding, that I will not be asked to spend any afternoons or evenings on this. I think if I give the committee my mornings, then I should have the afternoons and evenings for my own work and to further develop these cases.

Senator TYDINGS. We will try to conform to the Senator's wish.

Might I ask him if he would object to meeting earlier than we have been meeting, so we could get more in?

Senator McCARTHY. No objection at all, Mr. Chairman. I might say, when I suggested 9 o'clock, I heard a great protest from all of the members of the press.

Senator TYDINGS. I think the committee would like to get half an hour in the office before they come up here, but we will just have to make up our minds to put up with some inconvenience, all of us.

I am going to say to the Senator I have not talked with Miss Kenyon. I presume she will want to go on tomorrow. If she isn't ready to go on tomorrow, then the Senator, I take it, would be ready to start again tomorrow.

Senator McCARTHY. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I understood she sent word to the Chairman she would be here to go on.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right, but that was last week, in response to a pretty quick telegram. I haven't seen her and haven't communicated with her and have had no word directly or indirectly from her. If she wants to take another day, I think we ought to give it to her. She was not here to hear the charges. She has to read them and become up-to-date on them, and so on.

But, without objection, we will take a recess until 9:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, at which time I will ask Senator McCarthy to be ready to go on with his testimony.

Senator McCARTHY. Wait, Mr. Chairman: I would like to know definitely How soon can you contact Judge Kenyon?

Senator TYDINGS. We can take you up until 12 or 12:30, so long as you want to go on with us, and then we can go on with Miss Kenyon in the afternoon, so in any event, if you will be ready tomorrow we can dispose of you and Judge Kenyon most likely at the same time.

Senator McCARTHY. In other words, I can definitely assume I will go on at 9:30 in the morning?

Senator TYDINGS. And we will try to run until 12:30, and come back and give Judge Kenyon the afternoon. I do not know that she will want to go on. I imagine she will.

(Whereupon, at 1:15 p. m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene the following day, Tuesday, March 14, 1950, at 9:30 a. m.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 13, 1950, at 9:40 a. m. in room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, and Hickenlooper.

Also present: Senator McCarthy.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will please come to order.

While you are getting your papers ready, Senator McCarthy, the Chair would like to make an announcement.

The committee has appointed, as its chief counsel, Mr. Edward P. Morgan, who was born May 28, 1918. After graduating from law school, Georgetown University, with degrees from other universities, Mr. Morgan, in March of 1940, was appointed as special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Following services in the field with the FBI, he was, in succession, a supervisor at FBI headquarters; assistant special agent in charge of FBI field offices; and special agent in charge of the Providence, R. I. and Albany, N. Y., field offices.

In the spring of 1945, he was appointed chief inspector at FBI headquarters, having under his supervision and direction all inspection matters involving the 59 FBI field offices in the United States and its Territories.

While associated with the FBI, Mr. Morgan made a special study of Communists, Fascists, and other totalitarian ideologies, and lectured to FBI agents and police officers from all over the world on such matters.

Now, proceed, Senator McCarthy.

But, before proceeding, may I say further that Mr. Morgan is not now with the FBI, but is a member of a Washington law firm.

The committee is going to admonish its fellow members, and also witnesses, to try to get here on time. The chairman expects to get here on time every morning unless he is in an accident, and hopes all others will do likewise.

Senator McCARTHY. I think the Chair's clock is fast.

Mr. Chairman, in this case I have some reports from various intelligence files, and some of the material I think will be of a great deal of interest to the committee. The copies of the reports which I am handing to the committee contain a complete copy of the files. However, in reading this, you will find that I will omit some of the material which is in your intelligence report, and in the copies that go to the press. The committee will find that I have deleted sections of the files dealing with—well, the purpose will be obvious to the Chair.

Senator TYDINGS. You are not going to read that? Do you want to make it a part of the record?

Senator MCCARTHY. I want to make it a part of the record also.

Senator TYDINGS. If you will desist until we get a chance to look this over.

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I intend to read the entire document.

Senator TYDINGS. You have this marked on top "For committee use only."

Senator MCCARTHY. Here is the copy with certain portions of the intelligence report deleted.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you give this copy to Senator Lodge, Senator Hickenlooper?

Will you give this to Senator McMahon, Senator Green?

Just hold up a minute, Senator McCarthy. You only gave us one copy of your opening remarks. Will you give us a copy for each committee member?

Senator McCarthy, may I ask if this contains a part of the material you will read?

Senator MCCARTHY. Let me make myself clear. The material I am giving the Chair contains copies of intelligence reports concerning this man I am about to cover, Gustavo Duran. Parts of the report are such that I do not think they should go out to the public. The reason will be very obvious if the Chair will compare the portions I have deleted. If I start explaining why they should not go out—

Senator TYDINGS. I just wanted to get the record straight. So it is fair to say that what you have given us for committee use only is not to be released by the committee until after they have had a chance to look at it.

Senator MCCARTHY. And I am offering the deleted copies—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute, Senator.

Senator McCarthy, a very proper question has been asked me, and that is: "What you have given us is a complete record of the intelligence files of the individual, or is it just a partial record of it?"

Senator MCCARTHY. That is all of the file that I have. There undoubtedly is much more in the files, but this is as complete as I can get it, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. This is all that you have?

Senator MCCARTHY. That is all that I have.

I might say I will give the Chair the photostatic copies, but I would like to keep those until I finish my statement.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, proceed.

Senator MCCARTHY. I offer this as exhibit 32.

Mr. Chairman, the committee will recall that the name of Gustavo Duran was first mentioned by me as a possible bad security risk in a speech which I made in Wheeling, W. Va., and Reno, Nev.

Senator TYDINGS. May I ask a question in order to keep the record straight? I don't know the man, and didn't hear of him before, and didn't read your Reno speech.

Senator McCARTHY. You missed something.

Senator TYDINGS. I will ask you whether you know, or not, whether this man is in the State Department today.

Senator McCARTHY. His position will be shown when——

Senator TYDINGS. He is now in the Department?

Senator McCARTHY. He was in the State Department. He is now in the United Nations, as the Chair will notice as we go along.

I have called Trygve Lie's office to find out exactly what work he is doing.

Strangely enough, the Secretary, rather his secretary, said they couldn't give that information to me.

I checked with the State Department and got the information, which is in the Register.

However, my physical check indicates that this man is in IRO, apparently screening refugees in connection with our DP program.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, we will investigate the case, but what I would like to know now is about when he left the State Department here.

Senator McCARTHY. Exactly, if the Chair will bear with me, all the exact dates are in my report.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. At that time I said:

Now, let's see what happens when individuals with Communist connections are forced out of the State Department. Gustavo Duran, who was labeled as (I quote) "a notorious international Communist," was made assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin-American affairs.

I refer there to Mr. Spruille Braden, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment, Senator Green; that is "For committee use only."

His opening remarks are on this paper.

Go ahead, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. He was taken into the State Department from his job as a lieutenant colonel in the Communist International Brigade. Finally, after intense congressional pressure and criticism, he resigned in 1946 from the State Department—and, ladies and gentlemen, where do you think he is now?

Senator TYDINGS. I don't want to interrupt you, but I wonder if you would be good enough to tell us who made that quote "a notorious international Communist"?

Senator McCARTHY. We will get to that.

Senator TYDINGS. You will get to that?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

He took over a high-salaried job as Chief of Cultural Activities Section in the Office of the Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations.

Senator GREEN. Excuse me. You say he was labeled. I think we ought to know by whom he was labeled.

Senator McCARTHY. By our intelligence forces. If the Senator will read the intelligence letters, the photostats I will give him——

Senator GREEN. I would like to read that and follow the testimony better in that way.

Senator McCARTHY. He was labeled in our own intelligence files. I will give the Chair a complete photostat of all the files which have been available, and I am sure the Senator will not question that after he reads the files.

This statement was promptly ridiculed by the Secretary of State who—through Mr. Peurifoy—merely said that this man Duran was no longer an employee of the State Department, but had been in the auxiliary foreign service from January 1943 until September 1945, and thereafter until October 4, 1946, in the Department. Mr. Peurifoy added that Duran had voluntarily resigned from the State Department on October 4, 1946.

One of the important facts that the Secretary overlooked in making this press release is that this man is still, as of today, a high-salaried official in the United Nations. On March 8 my office phoned the office of Trygve Lie to find out exactly what type of work he was doing. My office was advised that information could not be given to me.

In other words, the information as to what Gustavo Duran is presently doing in the United Nations was not furnished me.

The State Department advised me that Duran is now Chief of the Cultural Activities Section of the Department of Social Affairs, United Nations.

I was rather surprised to find that the Permanent Secretary of the United Nations felt he could not give to a United States Senator the information as to what this man was doing. However, since that time I have had the matter checked as well as possible in New York and am informed he is actually with the International Refugee Organization, engaged in work having to do with screening refugees coming into this country. The financial contribution which the United States makes toward the running of this United Nations agency amounts to 45.57 percent. (Taken from S. Rept. 1274, 81st Cong., 2d sess., Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, prepared by Subcommittee on Relations with International Organizations.)

I might say that while the report shows that we pay 45.57 percent, actually, of course, we are paying practically all of the cost, in view of the fact that most of the nations that are contributing money are contributing money which we have previously given them.

Senator TYDINGS. The same money?

Senator McCARTHY. Whether it is the same dollar or not does not make any difference. If you put an American dollar in one pocket and take out a French dollar from the other pocket to pay the expenses, then what is the difference there.

Senator TYDINGS. In fairness, I don't think your remark is open to the interpretation that if we had not given them this money they would not have contributed. That is what you virtually are saying there, and I don't think you intend to say that.

Senator McCARTHY. When we give some $5,000,000,000 to the United Nations membership, and they take money, whether it is the same dollar or not, to help pay for the UN work, obviously it is our money. So, in effect, the 45.57 percent refers to money we put in directly. It does not refer to American dollars which obviously are coming in indirectly.

Senator TYDINGS. Take the case of Great Britain. I feel pretty sure that if the British were not receiving a penny from us they would still have representation and they would pay for themselves at the United Nations.

My only point was—the way you stated it—it looked as though they would not have their representatives there if we did not pay for it. I don't think you mean to convey that; that is my point.

Senator McCARHY. We can speculate on this, Mr. Chairman, but it would seem that if we were not giving the nations what we are, they would have to contribute more heavily directly. Whether that is true or not is a matter of speculation, but the point, as a practical matter, we are paying much more than the approximate half that this would indicate.

However, the Chair may have a different opinion.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right; but, as you have stated, you have stated a fact, and a fact is only a matter of speculation and I don't think we ought to have speculation in here. I think we ought to stick to facts. That was my point.

Senator McCARHY. I think we should stick to facts. The fact is that the committee says that we are paying practically 45.57 percent—

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARHY. The additional fact is that the other nations which contribute 30 or 35 percent, whatever it happens to be, are nations that are receiving four or five billions of dollars from us.

At the time that Acheson's man attempted to ridicule my statement, he either did not know the facts in the case or he was covering up the information which is in the files and which should have been known to him.

This information, which I shall document for the committee, was known or was available to the State Department. It shows that Duran was (1) well known for his rabid Communist beliefs and activities; (2) that he was active in secret Soviet operations in the Spanish Republican Army; (3) that a highly confidential report was sent to the State Department by the military attaché at the American Embassy in Madrid which, according to all existing rules, called for Duran's immediate dismissal—unless the facts were proven to be wrong. Originally, I understand it was claimed that this was a case of mistaken identity. That claim, I believe, has been subsequently dropped in view of the fact that our intelligence produced pictures of him in the uniform that he wore at the time he was the regional head of SIM, which was the Spanish counterpart of the Russian NKVD or OGPU. I now hand the committee one of those pictures.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do I understand, Senator, that that was the Spanish secret police, the SIM?

Senator McCARHY. That was the secret police of the Spanish republican regime.

Senator TYDINGS. I suppose both sides had secret police; didn't they, Senator?

Senator McCARHY. I assume that would be a fair supposition, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GREEN. May I ask a question?

Senator TYDINGS. Certainly.

Senator GREEN. Do I understand you to claim that because he was in the Spanish secret police that was evidence of his being a Communist?

Senator McCARRY. As I develop this, the Senator will discover that Mr. Prieto, who was the Spanish Minister, appointed this man from the army, as head of the SIM. He was then dissatisfied with his activities. He was putting too many Communists in as the subheads. As the Senator will find as a result of that, Prieto moved Duran back to his army post as a major in the army, and that the Russian technicians called on him and told him that unless Duran headed this SIM unit they would break off relations with Prieto. The Russians said "You must have this man as head of this regional SIM."

Prieto ignored them, and the relations were broken off with this Russian technical staff.

Now, if the Senator will let me read the document, then if he still has any questions, I will certainly be more than happy to answer them. I wish he would let me give him the entire document, and I don't think he will have any questions then.

I now hand the Chair the picture I referred to, which apparently did away with the original contention that it was a case of mistaken identity, so the claim of mistaken identity has been dropped.

At the time this intelligence report reached the State Department, Duran was a highly placed official in a confidential capacity with the State Department in South America.

When the American people read the carefully prepared statement put out by the Secretary of State's office in regard to the Duran statement, they were entitled to rely upon it as being the truth. Unfortunately, anyone who believed that statement got a completely erroneous impression of the actual facts.

Whichever way you wish to interpret this situation I submit to the committee that it is typical of the carelessness of the top executives of the State Department of this country. The situation I have just discussed is typical of the type of news releases emanating from the State Department; it is typical of the half-truths we hear in answer to the information which I have been developing in regard to the bad security risks in that Department.

I now submit to the committee the intelligence report just referred to in its entirety.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, I don't recall now—do you recall who was Secretary of State in 1945, when this happened?

Senator McCARRY. Mr. Acheson, I believe, was Under Secretary. The Senator will recall, I believe, who the Secretary was.

I believe you will recall, sir, as well as I do.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't recall, because we changed so frequently about that time.

Senator McCARRY. That is why I say I think you will recall as well as I do, sir. I think it was Jimmie Byrnes, wasn't it?

Senator TYDINGS. Has anybody got the date?

Senator McCARRY. Jimmie Byrnes was Secretary; the Chair will recall that Grew was the Under Secretary, that Grew was the man who insisted upon the prosecution of a man called Service, whose case I shall deal with this morning; that Grew was forced—let us say he retired or resigned 2 days later, after Acheson took over and reinstated.

Service. We will get to that, but I think that should refresh our recollection as to who the Secretary was.

Senator TYDINGS. Who was the Under Secretary of State at the time you criticize the State Department for this particular transaction? I take it from your remarks it was Mr. Grew?

Senator McCARTHY. No, Mr. Chairman. I think Mr. Grew did an excellent job. That is why he is no longer there. Mr. Dean Acheson was Under Secretary of State at this time. It was in 1946——

Senator TYDINGS. In 1945?

Senator McCARTHY. We are speaking now—he was discharged in October 1946, according to Mr. Acheson's own press release. I must rely on that—October 4, 1946.

Senator TYDINGS. Hold that there, because I think we mentioned a date of 1945 a moment ago, and I want the record to show which is correct, I want the record to be straight.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the Chair will refer to the second last paragraph on page 12, he will find that the press release of the State Department shows that Duran was in the Department until October 4, 1946.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's refer to that.

Senator McCARTHY. The fifth line from the bottom.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's refer to that paragraph and get it in.

As I understand it, he has been in auxiliary foreign service from January 1943 until September 1945.

Now, during that period of time do you recall who was the Secretary and the Under Secretary of State?

Senator McCARTHY. The Chair will have to put the name on him—as to the exact date the different men resigned——

Senator TYDINGS. Was Mr. Acheson in the Department during the time from 1943 to 1945?

Senator McCARTHY. The first we have of Mr. Acheson was in 1939. He said he would vouch for Hiss completely. He was connected with the Department then. Again, in 1943, at the time of the FBI investigation of Hiss, he was there then, and I assume was Assistant Secretary at that time. He was made Under Secretary, Mr. Chairman, at the time Joe Grew was forced out.

Senator TYDINGS. When was that?

Senator McCARTHY. At the time of the Amerasia case in 1945.

Senator TYDINGS. Then, from 1943 to 1945, he could not have been the Under Secretary.

Senator McCARTHY. He could not have been the Under Secretary before he was made Under Secretary, that is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. As I understand it—who was the Under Secretary when Mr. Grew was forced out, as you say?

Senator McCARTHY. I don't know when Grew took over. I don't know the exact date he resigned. I connect the date of his resignation with the Service case. He was reinstated 2 days before Grew resigned.

Senator TYDINGS. The only reason I bring it up, you have used Mr. Acheson's name several times, and I think it is important to show whether or not he was Under Secretary when the alleged service was rendered to the country by the subject you refer to.

Senator McCARTHY. I think that is a good question, Mr. Chairman. Let us clear that up now.

If the Chair will refer to the photostatic copy of the intelligence report——

Senator TYDINGS. Is this it?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes. You will find that five copies were given to the State Department. I believe the date was in 1946; it is on the report. At that time Mr. Acheson was the Under Secretary, I believe.

Senator TYDINGS. He didn't stay in very long after Acheson became Under Secretary, according to your date.

Senator McCARTHY. He stayed until October 4, 1946. Acheson became Under Secretary in 1946. If the Chair does not consider a year a very long time—

Senator TYDINGS. I don't think any man can get the dossiers of 16,000 employees after 10 minutes, or within a short time of taking over an office.

Senator McCARTHY. Let's go on and see what Duran is doing now. I think this is important, and I will call attention to it—the State Department put out a carefully worded statement which certainly did not contain the facts in my statement. I said this man had been in the State Department. I pointed out this was an example of what happens to an outstanding Communist when forced out. I pointed out that he was over with the United Nations. The State Department put out an answer to that saying, in effect, the last they knew of this man was in October 1946.

Now, the State Department knows very well where this man is, and I think one of the things the committee should investigate—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute—all right, go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. I think one of the things this committee should spend some time on is the question of how men like Duran, and these other individuals with unusual backgrounds, shift so easily from the State Department to the United Nations.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator, we will examine into everything.

Senator McCARTHY. Someone, we know, using ordinary common horse sense—we know someone in the State Department is shifting them over. I think we should find out who.

Now, going on with our man Duran—it will be noted the State Department received a copy of the intelligence report just referred to. There are certain matters discussed in this report which I do not feel should be made public until the committee has had a chance to thoroughly look into them. I have, therefore, deleted those sections from the copies being handed to the press and will not read them into the record at this time. The entire report, however, with nothing deleted, is being handed to each of the members of the committee.

B. I. D. No. 7232
Report No. R-200/46

CONFIDENTIAL INTELLIGENCE REPORT

For general use by any United States Intelligence Agency

From : Military Attaché, American Embassy, Madrid, Spain

JUNE 4, 1946.

Source : Spanish Army Central General Staff B-3

Area Reported On : Spain

Who's Who : Gustavo Duran

Following is the report given the Military Attaché by the A. C. of S., G-2, Spanish Central General Staff, after the M/A asked whether Duran was known: "Gustavo Duran came to Madrid for the first time in the 1920's from the Canary Island, in the company of another Canarian, a painter called Nestor, who was registered by the Spanish police for the same reasons—" as Durans * * *

"Similar trouble happened to him in other European capitals. His—" * * * [again a blank space] * * *. "grew to the limit in Paris, which was the preferred center for his activities some years before the advent of the Spanish Republic in 1931, while he was under the protection of his friend Nestor, the painter, who was well known in certain Parisian quarters. About that time the Soviets entrusted Gustavo Duran with some missions and finally appointed him their agent."

"Upon the proclamation of the Spanish Republic, the 'Porcelana' (as he was nicknamed) returned to Madrid. His identity papers indicated that he was the representative of the Paramount Film Co. However, his true mission was service of the GPU. Duran was greatly successful in his activities due to the political protection he enjoyed. He soon became one of the leading members of the youths of the Communist Party, and greatly contributed to the merger of the Communists youths with the youths of the Spanish Labor Party, thus giving birth to the JSU, of fateful remembrance, since this organization committed the most cold-blooded crimes before July 18, 1936—that is the date of the military uprising—and during the red revolution which ensued.

I might say this was before the Spanish civil war, as we all know.

"Together with other 'close' friends of his and some young pro-Communist poets, among whom Alberty was noted, Duran succeeded in becoming notorious. All of them were his tools and all of them were made into active Communists. In Duran's home located—" * * * [at blank] * * *. "such meetings took place that the police had to interfere frequently, thus giving occasion to complete his record as—" * * * [considerable blank space] * * *. "In the files of the General Directorate of Security. This record as—" * * * [blank] * * *. "was probably removed by his friend, Serrano Poncela, who was the chief of the 'Red' police during the months of October and November 1936 in Madrid and political reporter of 'Mundo Obrero' (a Communist newspaper), and chief of the JSS. Duran's release from his frequent imprisonments for—" * * * [again a blank] * * *. "conduct was due to his powerful political protectors, who blindly obeyed orders from the Soviet political police."

"Upon the national uprising (beginning of civil war) Gustavo Duran took over the nearest convent to his house, called 'las Siervas de Maria,' located at the old Chamberi Plaza. He was there the 'responsible,' or chief. He was afflicted there with typhoid fever during the month of August 1936."

The next notation on the photostat is that five copies of this report went to the Dist W Europe, one to the Spec Dist, one to DC/CG, five to ONI, six to the State Department, and one to the FBI.

"The 'Causo General' (general judicial proceedings) has information about the crimes perpetrated by the militia under the command of Duran's 'choza' (illegal prison). He was one of the principal leaders of the popular militia created by the Communists. He was a personal friend of Lister and Modesto (commanders of red brigades, now Generals in the Russian Army) and soon became captain, major and lieutenant colonel of the 'Red' Army. He belonged to the General staff of the 'Red' forces which directed the 'brilliant' withdrawals of Talavera de la Reina, Maqueda, Toledo, etc.

"When the international brigades were brought into the Madrid and Aranjuez fronts, Gustavo Duran formed part of the High Russian General Staff, with headquarters at Tarancon and its vicinity, where they left sad and hideous recollections.

"After Tarancon we (the Spanish Intelligence Service) lost track of Duran. It appears that he went to Moscow with a delegation of male and female members of the 'Red' Army. It appears that later he was for some time in Paris.

"And now he is in Washington as a collaborator of Spruille Braden, Chief of a Section of the State Department."

Then, the MA Comment: "A very reliable Spaulard who is anti-Franco in sympathies but is middle of the road Republican and extremely pro-United States and democratic in his views states that he knows personally that Duran as commander officer of an international brigade in a small town not far from Madrid ordered the execution of the town electrician and another man who was a mason, neither of whom has committed any act for which they should have suffered this execution.

"WENDELL G. JOHNSON,
"Colonel, U. S. C. Military Attache."

Senator TYDINGS. Shortly after that report reached the State Department, the notation is that this man voluntarily resigned.

Senator MCCARTHY. This apparently reached the State Department June 4, and October 4 he voluntarily—I think that word is important—he "voluntarily" resigned.

Senator TYDINGS. Won't you allow me to correct that? The date of the report, written in Spain, was June 4, not the date it was received by the State Department—is that correct?

Senator MCCARTHY. I assume it took a couple of days to get here, more or less, so we will say June 6 or 7.

Now, on August 2, Senator Wherry wrote to the State Department, to Secretary Byrnes, and I think this is especially significant, because all of this material must have been in the files at the time the Secretary indicated this man just had disappeared from public life.

AUGUST 2, 1946.

The Honorable JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SECRETARY: As a member of the Appropriations Committee, on April 18, 1946, I asked for investigation of certain persons holding positions of trust and responsibility in your Department.

It was my purpose then and is now to withhold appropriations that finance the salaries and activities of anyone in the State Department whose allegiance apparently is to some other country than to the United States.

You will recall, Mr. Secretary, that when you appeared I questioned you about some of these officials and among them was a Gustavo Duran. This was just prior to the Carter Glass funeral. At that time you stated there was a question of identity of Gustavo Duran.

That question no longer exists, since Intelligence procured the particular picture I gave the Chair.

You stated further an investigation had revealed that he was some other person than the man in the State Department, who has been an assistant to Spruille Braden.

It has now come to my knowledge there exists an extensive military intelligence report on this man, Gustavo Duran, and I am reliably informed that several copies of this report have been delivered to the State Department.

I am now making this formal request upon you in my official capacity as a United States Senator, and as a member of the State Department Subcommittee on Appropriations, that on the basis of this report you immediately discharge Gustavo Duran.

Cordially yours,

Senator TYDINGS. Have you got Secretary Byrnes' reply to that?

Senator MCCARTHY. I have a reply to it but, as usual in correspondence, you write to the Secretary, and someone else replies.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you read the reply?

Senator MCCARTHY. The Chair knows I intend to read the reply, because it is on the next page of the document.

Senator TYDINGS. I didn't see it.

Senator McCARTHY. It is headed:

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, September 14, 1946.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your recent inquiry about the security investigation by the Department of Mr. Gustavo Duran. As you know, the Department has a security committee which confines itself to reviewing security investigations—in other words, the old Loyalty Board—and to making recommendations based thereon. Of course, this committee has nothing to do with reviewing the qualifications or competency of the person reviewed for a position in the Department other than as security is involved. I have added this because from our conversation I would assume that you seriously question the qualifications of Mr. Duran for employment, as distinguished from security consideration. That phase of Mr. Duran's employment is not within the scope of the security committee.

I want to call the committee's attention especially to the next paragraph. This indicates that conditions have not changed much since September 14, 1946, down to date. He says:

After reviewing the entire record on Mr. Duran as procured from all available sources, the security committee recommended favorably on Mr. Duran. I have carefully gone over the record before the security committee and I have approved their recommendation.

While I recognize that the above conclusions are at variance with your own feelings, I have to do my duty as I see it and I hope that you will recognize that I have attempted to exercise my judgment faithfully and honestly.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

And, it is signed "Donald Russell."

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Russell at that time—was he Under Secretary of State?

Senator McCARTHY. He was the predecessor of Mr. Peurifoy—held the job now held by Mr. Peurifoy.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you know the title?

Senator McCARTHY. I have difficulty in keeping track of the title. I believe it was Assistant Secretary for Administration, or something along that line. Anyway, he had the job Mr. Peurifoy now holds.

When Mr. Russell wrote this letter on September 4, 1946, he had in his files the top-secret report from the military attaché in Madrid, which I have already referred to, outlining in detail the facts I have given on Duran.

Now what was the mysterious power in the possession of Duran that enabled him to continue to serve as a confidential assistant to Spruille Braden, the then head of the State Department's South American affairs?

Why was this man permitted voluntarily to resign in the face of these grave charges?

And, I might add, who has gotten him the important task of going to the UN, and doing the job of screening refugees coming into this Nation?

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, I would like to say that your inquiry that we should find out who got him the job in the United Nations, inasmuch as there is no evidence in what we are reading here, will be a part of our inquiry. We don't know who he is, whether innocent or guilty, but we will find out anyway.

Senator McCARTHY. I don't have documentary evidence, but we will be able to help your staff very considerably, as to who recommends these individuals to UN, and who gets them their jobs.

Mr. Duran obviously had powerful friends, and one of his greatest champions was his immediate chief, Spruille Braden.

I now show the committee exhibit 33, which is a copy of a letter marked "secret" and dated December 21, 1942, in Habana.

I believe the chairman has this exhibit before him, which reads as follows:

HABANA, December 21, 1943.

Memorandum for the Military Attaché:

Mr. Gustav J. Duran was recommended to me in the first instance by a friend of unimpeachable patriotism and integrity. He was recommended for a specific objective requiring a person of highly specialized qualifications; his duties were to be concerned with protecting United States interests through confidential surveillance over Falangist activities in Cuba.

As to Mr. Duran's background, he is a naturalized American citizen born and educated in Spain.

Incidentally, his naturalization was one of the most rapid I ever heard of—as I recall it took about 6 weeks.

He is of good family, and in his youth was particularly interested in the arts. When the Spanish civil war began in July 1936 he gave up everything to fight on the side of the Loyalists and from a somewhat dilettante but brilliant young man, turned into a vital force for the Republican cause. His military record was reportedly brilliant. He was further described to me as being a man whose hatred for the Fascists, and his deep devotion to liberal principles, are not open to debate.

This is Spruille Braden speaking, you understand.

A close association with him during a period of over a year fully supports this description.

Mr. Duran arrived in Habana in November 1942 on the payroll of the Pan American Union and was to transfer to the staff of the CIAA on February 1, 1943. Instead, I urgently recommended his employment as an auxiliary Foreign Service officer in a telegram from which I quote the following:

"I regard Duran as eminently qualified for the work he is performing and I have the highest estimation for his intelligence and character as well as for his complete loyalty and discretion. He has already proven of very great value to this Embassy and I anticipate that his usefulness will increase as he becomes more familiar with conditions in Cuba. I consider that his continuance here is particularly desirable at the present time when our relations with Spain are of such vital importance."

Mr. Duran has now served as one of my immediate associates for more than a year. His work has been excellent and outstandingly useful to the United States Government. From my personal knowledge based on close association, Mr. Duran is not a Communist but a liberal of the highest type. I consider him an unusually worthy, patriotic, and honorable American citizen, who shows great promise as a United States Government official capable of high responsibility.

SPRUILLE BRADEN.

This was written, Mr. Chairman, at the time, you understand, that Duran, of Spanish fame, was not the Duran of State Department fame, but that claim has long since been dropped.

Senator TYDINGS. The date of the communication you have just read was December 21, 1943.

Senator McCARTHY. That is exactly as I read it, December 21, 1943, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Braden describes Mr. Duran as one recommended to him by a friend of unimpeachable integrity.

He set forth in his letter that Duran was a naturalized citizen, born and educated in Spain, of good family and in his youth was particularly interested in the arts. Braden said that from 1936 Duran gave up everything to fight on the side of the Spanish Loyalists and said he urgently recommended his employment as an auxiliary Foreign Service officer.

Incidentally, not that this is important, but Duran was mistaken in where he was born. He was born in the Canary Islands, according to the Intelligence reports.

Now with that information in the possession of the then Secretary of State, information which Braden gave, plus the claim that this was not the same Duran, I can understand why the then Secretary kept him on. That was before the intelligence report was made available to the Secretary of State.

Following Senator Wherry's letter to the State Department of August 1946, in which the Senator maintained that this man was such a bad security risk that he should be discharged, we find that he was permitted to resign on October 4, 1946.

In view of the grave charges made by Senator Wherry and the unusual attitude of the State Department in permitting this man's resignation, plus all the information the committee will have before it, it would be interesting to know what, if any, investigation was made by State Department officials as to his conduct while in a responsible, confidential capacity in the Department.

But Duran's friends in the State Department did not turn their backs on him.

After his resignation, Duran almost immediately was employed as a representative of the International Refugee Organization of the United Nations. He was employed there as of yesterday.

I believe I have explained that this is not his title, according to the State Department. Trygve Lie's secretary says he cannot tell me what he is doing, but we sent a man over there to physically check, and try and find out, and he reports that his work has to do with the screening of refugees.

Senator GREEN. May I ask a question?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

Senator GREEN. Can you explain why Mr. Braden did not sign this letter of December 23, 1943?

Senator McCARTHY. There is no part of Mr. Braden's actions that I would even attempt to explain, Senator.

Senator GREEN. All right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, this exhibit, as I understand it, is not in the form of a letter. It is in the form of a memorandum for the military attaché, or rather, from the military attaché.

Senator McCARTHY. It is a photostat of the memorandum which is in the Department file.

Senator TYDINGS. The signature is typed in; is that your point?

Senator McCARTHY. If the Senator wants to get the original, he can get it where I cannot. I assume that would be in order.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, we will get it.

Senator McCARTHY. I have received a confidential report that Duran was recommended for his UN position by a member of the present Presidential Cabinet. It has also been reported to me that Duran is the brother-in-law of Michael Straight, the owner and publisher of a pro-Communist magazine called the New Republic.

Here again it is certainly pertinent to inquire where this man got his power, what he did while in the State Department and, possibly, of equal importance, is what he did not do.

To complete this picture, I attach hereto copies of the following documents:

Senator TYDINGS. Has the New Republic been declared by any organization as a Communist-front newspaper, Senator McCarthy?

Senator MCCARTHY. I did not say "Communist front," Mr. Chairman. It is not necessary for the Chair to put words in my mouth. If he will read the top of page 13—

Senator TYDINGS. I did not read it, but I want to know who designates it as pro-Communist magazine.

Senator MCCARTHY. I have just named them that. If the chairman will read it, I think he will agree—

Senator TYDINGS. I do not have the time to read it.

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not recommend it necessarily for reading. Now, the exhibit numbered 34, Mr. Chairman—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is that the one denominated 1?

Senator MCCARTHY. This is the report from Edward J. Ruff, assistant United States military attaché in the Dominican Republic, addressed to the American Intelligence Service dated December 30, 1943.

I have a note here, that the date of this is December 30, 1943. I do not find any date on this document, however. I assume that that is the correct date.

The second page of the letter, I do not have the first page either—the first part may not be too valuable, Mr. Chairman. It is not clear who Ruff is referring to.

It is marked "Secret copy," and says:

He states, dogmatically, that the records showed Duran to be a member of the Spanish Communist Party. Our source had previously made available to us the information agreeing with that sent to us by military attaché, Habana, except the statement that Duran entered the Army as a private. According to our agent, Duran was commissioned directly from civilian life and given the rank of major in the militia. Later when the militia became part of the Spanish Republican Army, he was made a major in the army. The only additional information we had, and which we did not mention in the report, as it was not believed pertinent, was the reported fact that Duran is a homosexual. I do not question Duran's interest in the arts, his culture, or intelligence. However, we only stated in our report that Duran was a member of the Communist Party, and that we did not know whether he is still a member of the Communist Party. I, myself, am convinced that Duran was a Communist and consider Ambassador Braden's statement that he is a "liberal of the highest type" to be a euphemism. Under the circumstances, I believed the reliability of our report still remains as originally submitted.

The Ambassador here is inclined to concur in my report on Duran, but has asked that no further official correspondence on the subject be sent up. Hence this personal letter from me.

I want to repeat that, Mr. Chairman:

The Ambassador here is inclined to concur in my report on Duran, but has asked that no further official correspondence on the subject be sent up. Hence this personal letter from me.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute, Senator McCarthy.

Senator MCCARTHY. I might say the entire letter—the first half I did not read, and it might be well to read that into the record, also, and with the permission of the Chair I would like to read the first half of that letter.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McCARTHY. I read the last half from the photostatic copy. I do not have a photostat of the first. Here is the first half:

I want to take this opportunity to clarify my position in connection with Report No. 428, dated December 13, 1943, subject: Gustavo Duran, alleged Communist employee of the CIAA, Habana. As you know, this office received a cable from the military attaché, Habana, requesting that dissemination of this report be held up on the grounds that it was "absolutely incorrect." A few days ago we received letter No. 7007 from Lieutenant Colonel Brown, written by Ambassador Braden concerning this individual. Both these communications corroborated information which we had regarding Duran and I cannot see on the basis of their reports how our report can be branded as "absolutely incorrect." Our only statement in the report on Duran is that he was a member of the Communist Party in Spain. From further reports received, this information can now be evaluated as A-1. For your own knowledge, the information on Duran was submitted by a Spanish refugee who also served on Duran's promotion board in Spain, which board was charged with considering recommendations for promotion of Spanish Republican officers. As our source was actually sitting on the board at the time that Duran's recommendation for promotion came through, he himself saw all Duran's papers and letters of recommendation, and had access to complete information regarding Duran's background.

I next submit to the Chair an excerpt from the book, Why and How I Left Defense Ministry in the Intrigue of Russia in Spain, by Indalecio Prieto, former Minister of Defense for the Spanish Republican cause.

Senator TYDINGS. Is that the next page?

Senator McCARTHY. I have the original document, if the Chair cares for it.

Senator TYDINGS. I want to follow you.

Senator McCARTHY. I hope the committee will keep in mind that this is the same Duran who is apparently presently screening our DP's.

It is true that I have had certain incidents with the Russians. Certain Russian technicians proposed to me in Valencia that a service of military investigations should be created. This was the Spanish counterpart of the NKVD. I confess that I opposed the project. But because of insistent pressure, I created the SIM.

The SIM, I believe the committee knows, is the counterpart of the Russian NKVD.

I was especially concerned with choosing a chief, until I gave it to an intimate friend of mine, who had just come from France, where he was with his family. In entrusting him with the task, I gave him these instructions:

"You are going to form the SIM, carefully, with elements of all groups of the Popular Front. Your only charges will be these two: Do not permit the new organization to be converted into an instrument of the Communists and do not permit Russian technicians to gain control. Listen to the advice of these technicians and follow their orientations, which can be very useful to you, but control must always be in your hands and in that of the Government, and of no one else."

I showed little tact in the selection of that comrade. A Republican named Sayagues came in fact to be the chief of SIM. Regional chiefs of the SIM were designated and they proposed to me a certain Gustavo Duran for the Madrid zone. It was not concealed from me that the person proposed was a Communist. I knew this, but in spite of that, he was appointed by decree which I myself drew up, because I did not wish to follow in a slavish manner the project which was handed to me—there is an article by virtue of which the appointment of all agents of the SIM rests exclusively with the Minister of National Defense. This was a guarantee which temporarily I wish to establish. No one could be an agent of the SIM who was not in possession of the memorandum book which bore duplicate the signature of the minister. Duran having been appointed chief of the demarcation of the army of the center, of his own accord and without power to do so, appointed the agents who were under his orders, which to the number of some hundreds, were Communists and only four or five were Socialists.

As the Chair will recall, this was at the time Spain was trying to work out her difficulties by having a coalition government of Socialists, Communists, and so forth.

I faced an intolerable situation, wherefore alleging, and with reason, that I lacked commanders in the army. I ordered that all military chiefs who were not in particular positions in the army should return to their former positions, and thus Major Duran had to return to his military function. Because of Duran's leaving the SIM, I received a visit from a Russian technician, of these services, who said to me:

"RUSSIAN AGENT. I have come to speak to you about the dismissal of Duran. What happened?

"PRIETO. Nothing special I lacked commanders in the army and ordered Duran to return to it.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. No. You discharged him because he appointed Communists as agents in Madrid.

"PRIETO. That is also sufficient reason, because Duran absolutely lacked authority to make appointments.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Why did he not have the power to appoint agents?

"PRIETO. Because by virtue of the decree creating the SIM that power is reserved exclusively to the Minister."

Still quoting:

I read the decree and before the evidence of my statement my visitor alleged:

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Duran could make temporary appointments.

"PRIETO. Neither actual nor temporary. Here in Spain, moreover, the temporary is converted into the definitive.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Be that as it may, I come to ask you to immediately restore Major Duran as chief of the SIM in Madrid.

"PRIETO. I am very sorry, but I cannot consent.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. If you do not consent to restore Duran, my relations with you are broken.

"PRIETO. I am sorry, but Major Duran will go to the front of his division and will not return to the SIM. Your attitude is unjustified and I cannot yield to it."

I did not yield as a matter of fact, and my relations with the Russian technician, through his own wish, were absolutely cut off. I have not seen him since that scene.

Incidentally, the Chair questioned my description of the magazine New Republic.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not question it, I asked what information you had to support your allegation.

Senator MCCARTHY. If I may finish, I want to call attention to the fact that Mr. Wallace was for a time the editor of that paper, and the Chair may not think he is pro-Communist. I think he is, and as far as I know the magazine has not changed its policy in the slightest since Wallace left, in fact it almost seemed that Wallace was a stabilizing influence on that paper, if anyone could call Wallace that in any thing.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that covers exhibits in the Duran case.

Senator TYDINGS. The confidential exhibits furnished by the witnesses will be held by the committee until the whole committee authorizes in whole or in part their release.

Senator MCCARTHY. I am going to give the chairman another photo-stat—I think that had better be given later to the committee staff.

Mr. Chairman, while out making some Lincoln Day speeches, I also mentioned another name which has been shrugged off by the State Department. I would like to read what I said about this individual, very briefly.

Senator GREEN. May I ask a question?

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green would like to ask a question.

Senator GREEN. In that connection, Senator, would you like to put into the record all your speeches on this subject?

Senator McCARTHY. If the Senator wants my speeches, he most certainly can have them.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you put in both the written speeches and the oral speeches, because as I recall your testimony, you stated on the floor that you spoke without notes out at Wheeling, at least.

Senator McCARTHY. Not at Wheeling, at Reno, Nev.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, at Reno; and, we would like to have both the written speech and the oral speech.

Senator McCARTHY. I am glad to know the Chair is so interested in my speeches. I will give him a complete file I have made.

Senator TYDINGS. The Chair is interested in everything you have to say about this hearing, from the time it started until it ends.

Senator McCARTHY. Here is what was said about this man Harlow Shapley.

I said you will recall last spring there was held in New York what was known as a World Peace Conference—

Senator TYDINGS. Do you have copies of this?

Senator McCARTHY. I am reading from the Congressional Record.

This conference was labeled by the State Department, and Mr. Truman, as a sounding board of Communist propaganda and a front for Russia. Mr. Harlow Shapley was a chairman of that conference. Interestingly enough, according to a news release put out by the State Department in July, the Secretary of State appointed Shapley on a commission which acts as liaison with UNESCO and the State Department.

After I made my Lincoln Day speech, the State Department, through its Under Secretary John Peurifoy, had this to say in his press release of February 18, 1950, concerning Dr. Shapley:

Dr. Shapley has never been an employee of the Department of State. However, in 1945, he served as a member of the American delegation at the UNESCO Conference in London; and in 1946 to the International Astronomical Union at Copenhagen.

Dr. Shapley is a member of the National Commission for UNESCO, representing the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

I submit that this statement in Mr. Peurifoy's press release is a misrepresentation of the true facts concerning Dr. Shapley's association with our Department of State.

Keep in mind, this is the man who headed the peace conference which the Secretary labeled as a sounding board for Russia.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, my two colleagues are asking me questions which I will attempt to clear up.

Is this one of the cases you outlined on the Senate floor by number?

Senator McCARTHY. No; this is one of the men I mentioned in talking, one that the Secretary had referred to in a news release, and I assure the Chair that whenever I refer to one of those cases mentioned on the Senate floor, I will give him the number.

The full facts concerning Dr. Shapley and the facts that the State Department's press release conveniently omitted are these:

Dr. Shapley was appointed to the National Commission for UNESCO by the Secretary of State in May 1947 to fill an unexpired term, and he was reappointed to that position by the Secretary of State in June 1947 for a second term on the Commission, which expires in April of this year.

Not only was Dr. Shapley twice appointed to the National Commission by the predecessor of the present Secretary of State, in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 565 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, but his transportation expenses and $10 per diem are also paid by the State Department, in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 565.

I am at a complete loss to understand how the State Department could seek to avoid responsibility for Dr. Shapley's appointment and continuance on the National Commission, in view of these uncontroverted facts.

As a matter of fact, I know that John Peurifoy had all of these facts in his possession concerning the appointment and payment of expenses for Dr. Shapley at the National Commission at the time his misleading press release of February 13 was issued to the public. I know that because I have a letter from John Peurifoy, dated February 16, 1950, in which he furnished me with the facts concerning Shapley's appointments and compensation, in accordance with Public Law 565.

Now I personally do not blame John Peurifoy for attempting to mislead the public and whitewash the State Department in that press release. I have known Peurifoy to be an upright, honest individual, and I for one am convinced that he is issuing these misleading half truths to the American public on orders from higher ups.

It is inconceivable that the Secretary of State should be condemning the Communist-inspired Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace on the one hand, and retaining Dr. Harlow Shapley, one of its main organizers, in an important position with UNESCO, on the other.

As this committee well knows, the power to appoint carries with it the power to dismiss unless definite restrictions are placed on the appointing authority, which they are not in the case of Dr. Shapley. Furthermore, inasmuch as State Department funds are being used to pay the traveling expenses and per diem of Dr. Shapley's at the National Commission, there is no reason why he could not be summarily dismissed from that position by Secretary Acheson under the broad powers of the so-called McCarran rider.

Dr. Shapley's active participation in the Soviet Peace Conference is not the last nor only Communist-front with which this man has been affiliated. His record with Communist fronts is a long and interesting one.

Now, I have here, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the committee's time to dwell on each one, in view of the fact that the Secretary himself has said this man headed an outfit which was a sounding board of Communism, but I have here in my hand, a list of some 36 Communist-front organizations which this individual has belonged to, and if the Chair's staff is interested—

Senator Tydings. They will be printed in the record at this point.
 Senator McCarrin. I will be glad to give them to him.

1. Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, sponsor (letterhead dated September 8, 1944) (also letterhead of April 28, 1949).
2. Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, chairman, reception committee for Irene Joliot-Curie, a leading French Communist frontier and wife of Frederick Joliot-Curie, top-ranking French Communist Party member (invitation to the dinner, March 31, 1948).
3. Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, speaker (the Worker, October 31, 1947).
4. Fraternal Outlook, official organ of the International Workers Order, interview, March 1942, p. 12.
5. National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, signer of Statement on issuance of commissions to Communists (Daily Worker, March 18, 1945).
6. Progressive Citizens of America, attack on motion picture industry for firing Communists (Daily Worker, November 20, 1947).
7. Progressive Citizens of America, vice chairman (PCA Politics, October 1947).
8. Progressive Citizens of America, chairman, cultural freedom conference (Daily Worker, October 27, 1947).
9. Progressive Citizens of America, honorary chairman, Massachusetts chapter (the Progressive Citizen, March 1947).
10. Progressive Citizens of America, Conference on Thought Control in the U. S. A. (pamphlet, 1947).
11. Progressive Citizens of America, delegate, national convention (release of list of delegates, 1948).
12. Progressive Citizens of America, speaker on behalf of Hollywood Communists (dinner program, March 1948).
13. National Committee to Defeat the Mundt Bill (pamphlet: Hey, Brother, There's a Law Against You) (also release dated June 15, 1949).
14. League of American Writers, signer of open letter (Daily Worker, July 31, 1949).
15. Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, vice chairman (letterhead, May 1949).
16. Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, initiating sponsor (Daily Worker, December 24, 1944).

May I call attention to the fact that most of the organizations with which Harlow Shapley has been associated get their publicity exclusively in the Daily Worker, the official organ of the Communist Party.

17. Congress of American Women, an affiliate of the Soviet-controlled Women's International Democratic Federation, speaker (Daily Worker, September 23, 1947).
18. American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, member, national committee (letterhead, September 22, 1939).
19. Signer of statement defending Isadore Rubin, Communist writer (Daily Worker, January 10, 1948).
20. Teachers Union, speaker (New York Times, April 18, 1949).

I might point out that this organization has been cited as Communist by a number of witnesses before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

21. New York Conference for Inalienable Rights, signer of open telegram (Daily Worker, September 17, 1949).
22. United Public Workers—an organization which was thrown out of the CIO for being Communist—speaker (Daily Worker, April 16, 1948).
23. Bill of Rights Conference of the Civil Rights Congress, sponsor (Daily Worker, June 17, 1949).
24. Council for Pan American Democracy, open letter defending Luiz Carlos Prestes, leading Brazilian Communist Party official (New Masses, December 8, 1949).
25. National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, signer of open letter (Daily Worker, May 13, 1949).
26. New Masses, official Communist periodical, signer of open letter (New Masses, April 2, 1949).

27. Spanish Refugee Appeal, national sponsor (letterhead dated February 26, 1946).
28. Conference Against Anti-Communist Legislation, speaker (Washington Times-Herald, April 28, 1948).
29. Citizens United to Abolish the Wood-Rankin Committee, supporter (New York Times, March 14, 1940, paid advertisement).
30. American Russian Institute, speaker (Daily Worker, May 20, 1947).
31. American Russian Institute, member, board of trustees (New York Times, December 12, 1947).
32. Statement in defense of Gerhard Eisler (Daily Worker, June 28, 1947).

Eisler is, of course, the notorious International Communist agent who escaped on the Polish liner Batory last year. Incidentally, the affection between these two was mutual, because Eisler spoke in praise of Harlow Shapley in a piece entitled "My Side of the Story," page 6.

33. Conference on Cultural Freedom and Civil Liberties (PCA Politics, October 1947).
34. Committee of One Thousand, sponsor (press release, March 5, 1948).
35. Attack on United States Foreign Policy in Greece (New York Times, September 10, 1947).
36. Committee for the First Amendment (pamphlet, p. 5).

Mr. Chairman, in their recent testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee, both Mr. Acheson and Mr. Peurifoy stated that homosexuals are regarded as poor security risks. These State Department officials pointed out in that testimony that some 91 homosexuals, whom they considered to be people of moral weaknesses, were asked to resign from the Department.

I agree, and I am sure that no one here will disagree, with the official position of the State Department; namely, that homosexuals are poor security risks.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute.

We will have a little less confusion in the chamber, please, a little less noise.

Proceed, Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. The case I will now discuss involves a man who is not only reported to be a homosexual, but he was arrested for sexual perversion.

Because of the sordid details of this case—and until the committee has had ample opportunity to investigate the matter—I will not make public the name of this man, but I will give to the committee the full details concerning this case, including the name of the individual involved, for their executive consideration.

This individual was employed in the Foreign Service and the State Department until 1948 when he resigned for reasons unknown to me.

I had received information from several sources that this man was a notorious homosexual. A check of the records of the Metropolitan Police Department indicated that these reports were true. I now hand the Chair, for your executive consideration, a copy of a police report, together with a police photograph and the official biography of this individual as it appeared in the State Department Register of April, 1948.

I suggest that not be displayed.

Senator TYDINGS. The Chair will hold it until after the hearing, and then we will have a short executive session if necessary.

The first name here is the last name, is it not, on that biography you have just given us?

Senator McCARTHY. Let me look at the copy.

Senator TYDINGS. The first name?

Senator McCARTHY. The first name is the last name.

All of this material, as I said, is being given for your executive consideration, as I do not desire to make his name public at this time for the reason stated above.

You will note from the police records that this man was arrested on September 8, 1943. The charge was sexual perversion and the police report states that he was known to hang out at the men's room at Lafayette Park in Washington.

This man is getting about $12,000 a year now.

He was charged with disorderly conduct in connection with his perverted activities. I do not have the record of the disposition of this case available, but I am informed that he was required to post collateral of $25 on this charge and forfeited collateral.

As I previously said, this man resigned from the State Department in 1948 and shortly thereafter became employed in one of the most sensitive agencies of our Government where he now holds an important and high-paying position. I am prepared to furnish the name of that agency for the executive consideration of this committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, you say it is one of the most sensitive agencies of ours? Is it the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. It is the CIA.

Senator TYDINGS. He was in the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. He was in the State Department, in 1948, and went from there to the CIA, that is the Central Intelligence Agency.

Senator TYDINGS. It is not under the State Department at the present time, is it?

Senator McCARTHY. Let us make this clear, so the wrong man will not be suspected: He is not one of the main officials in the CIA.

Senator TYDINGS. I understand that; but he was in the State Department, according to your testimony?

Senator McCARTHY. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. He is not now in the State Department, but is over working in the CIA?

Senator McCARTHY. That is right, and at a salary of somewhere around ten or twelve thousand dollars a year, as I recall.

Furthermore, I have been informed that the files of the State Department and other investigative departments of the Government contain these and other facts concerning the homosexuality of this Federal employee.

In view of this man's criminal record, which I have just presented to the committee, and other information concerning his lack of moral fitness, I am at a loss to understand why he was allowed to resign from the State Department. I might say, in connection with that, it seems unusual to me, in that we have so many normal people, so many competent Americans, that we must employ so many very, very unusual men in Washington. It certainly gives the country an odd idea of the type of individuals who are running things down here.

Again referring to Mr. Peurifoy's recent testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee, I wish to point out that Mr. Peurifoy informed that committee that he has experienced difficulty in having security risks fired from the Department. In his testimony, Mr. Peurifoy said that at one point he recommended the dismissal of 10 poor security risks from the Department under the provisions of the McCarran rider but that his recommendations were overruled and only one of these men was fired.

He did state, I believe, the other nine were allowed to resign, I assume so they could take over some other Government jobs.

As I said earlier in this statement, I do not know why the individual who is the subject of my present case was allowed to resign; but I think it is the responsibility of this committee to find out the full facts concerning his resignation.

I also believe that the committee should immediately determine how this individual was able to stay in the Department for almost 5 years after he was arrested on a morals charge in Washington, D. C. I also think the committee should find out how he, after leaving the State Department, was able to get a top-salaried, important position in another sensitive Government agency. It should be of considerable interest to this committee to find out who sponsored this individual or who intervened in his behalf in both the State Department and his present place of employment.

I feel that this case is of sufficient importance for the committee to take immediate action.

Would the Chair like to wait until they bring the copies for the members of the committee, for the next case, or shall I proceed?

Senator TRIMES. How long will it be, Senator?

Senator MCCARRHY. About a minute.

Senator TRIMES. We will wait.

(There was a short pause.)

Senator MCCARRHY. Mr. Chairman, before these are handed to the press, I ask that these documents be marked "Exhibit 35."

Senator TRIMES. All right, Senator, proceed.

Senator MCCARRHY. Mr. Chairman, this is one of those so-called old cases, but it is very new in some respects. We find in this case, and the Chair's staff should check on this immediately—in this case you will find that the State Department's loyalty board has again picked up this case very recently, and again they have given a clean bill of health to this individual.

However, a week ago last Friday, the Civil Service Commission's appeals loyalty board, in this particular case, made what is known as a post-audit. In that post-audit the case was sent back to the State Department loyalty board, not only with the statement that they were dissatisfied with the results but with the recommendation that the State Department loyalty board that sat upon that case not be allowed to sit upon it again, but that a new board be convened.

So, I want to make it clear, when I talk about this man's danger as a security risk, that the Civil Service Commission has, as recently as a week ago last Friday, rather wholeheartedly agreed, and went so far as to say "We think you should have a different loyalty board sitting on this case next time."

This case is that of John Stewart Service.

This man is a Foreign Service officer of the Department of State and at the moment is in Calcutta, India, where he is helping determine the all-important policy of our Government toward India.

The name of John Stewart Service is not new to the men in the Government who must pass on a governmental employee's fitness as a security risk.

When Mr. Peurifoy testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee, he said that Service had been cleared four different times.

It is my understanding that the number has now risen to five and I earnestly request that this committee ascertain immediately if Service was not considered as a bad security risk by the loyalty appeal board of the Civil Service Commission, in a post-audit decision, handed down on March 3 of this year.

I understand that this Board returned the file of Mr. Service to the State Department with the report that they did not feel that they could give him clearance and requested that a new board be appointed for the consideration of this case.

To indicate to the committee the importance of this man's position as a security risk to the Government, I think it should be noted that he is one of the dozen top policy makers in the entire Department of State on far-eastern policy.

He is one of the small, potent group of "untouchables" who year after year formulate and carry out the plans for the Department of State and its dealings with foreign nations; particularly, those in the Far East.

The Communist affiliations of Service are well known.

His background is crystal clear.

He was a friend and associate of Frederick Vanderbilt Field, the Communist chairman of the editorial board of the infamous Amerasia.

Half of the editorial board of this magazine were pro-Communist members of the State Department and the committee is in possession of these names.

On June 6, 1945, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, after an exceedingly painstaking and careful investigation covering months, arrested Philip J. Jaffe, Kate Louise Mitchell, editor and coeditor of Amerasia; Andrew Roth, a lieutenant in the United States Naval Reserve stationed in Washington; Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen; and John Stewart Service, who were employees of the State Department—this is the same John S. Service to whom I have just referred and who is presently representing the State Department in Calcutta, India; also Mark Julius Gayn, a magazine writer of New York City, who is about to leave for Russia.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that while I believe some of the members of the committee may be fully aware of the chronological record, I think it is important that I put in all the details for the record.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, go ahead.

Senator MCCARTHY. They were arrested on charges of espionage in connection with the theft of the following Government records:

Classified documents from the State Department, including some top secret and confidential classification.....	300
Prepared by ONI.....	163
Prepared by MID.....	42
Prepared by OWI.....	58
From the files of the War Department.....	9

Now, some of the important documents picked up by the FBI at the time of the arrest were as follows, and I call this to the committee's attention.

First: One document marked "secret" and obviously originating in the Navy Department dealt with the schedule and targets for the bombing of Japan. This particular document was known to be in the possession of Philip Jaffe, one of the defendants, during the early spring of 1946 and before the program had been effected. That information in the hands of our enemies could have cost us many precious American lives.

Second: Another document, also marked "top secret" and likewise originating in the Navy Department, dealt with the disposition of the Japanese Fleet subsequent to the major naval battle of October 1944, and gave the location and class of each Japanese warship. What conceivable reason or excuse could there be for these people, or anyone else without authority, to have that information in their possession and at the same time claim they are entitled to it because of freedom of the press? That was the excuse they offered. They stole this document for no good purpose.

Third: Another document stolen from the Office of Postal and Telegraph Censorship was a secret report on the Far East and so stamped as to leave no doubt in anybody's mind that the mere possession of it by an unauthorized person was a clear violation of the Espionage Act. This was not an antiquated paper but of current and vital interest to our Government and the Nation's welfare.

Fourth: Another document stolen was from the Office of Military Intelligence and consisted of 22 pages containing information obtained from Japanese prisoners of war.

Fifth: Another stolen document, particularly illuminating and of present great importance to our policy in China, was a lengthy detailed report showing complete disposition of the units in the army of Chiang Kai-shek, where located, how placed, under whose command, naming the units, division by division, and showing their military strength.

Many of the stolen documents bear an imprint which reads as follows:

This document contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the Espionage Act, 50 United States Code 31-32, as amended. Its transmission or the revelation of its contents in any manner to an unauthorized person is prohibited by law.

Despite the very small circulation of approximately 1,700 copies of this magazine it had a large photo-copying department. According to Congressman Dondero, who sponsored the resolution for the investigation of the grand jury, this department was working through the night, into the small hours of morning, and even on Sundays. It could reproduce the stolen documents—and undoubtedly did—and distribute them into channels to serve subversive purposes, even into the clenched fists raised to destroy our Government.

In June 1944, Amerasia commenced attacks upon Joseph C. Grew, who had during his stay in the State Department rather vigorously opposed the clique which favored scuttling Chiang Kai-shek and allowing the Communist element in China to take over.

Larsen, one of the codefendants in this case, subsequently wrote a lengthy report on this matter. I would like to quote briefly from parts of that report.

Here is his quote:

Behind the now-famous State Department espionage case, involving the arrest of six persons of whom I was one, an arrest which shocked the Nation on June 7, 1945, is the story of a highly organized campaign to switch American policy in the Far East from its long-established course to the Soviet line. It is a story which has never been told before in full. Many sensational, though little explained, developments such as the General Stilwell affair, the resignation of Undersecretary Joseph C. Grew and Ambassador Patrick Hurley and the emergence of a pro-Soviet bloc in the Far Eastern Division of the State Department, are interlaced with the case of the six, as the episode became known. * * *

It is the mysterious whitewash of the chief actors of the espionage case which the Congress has directed to the Hobbs committee to investigate. But from behind that whitewash there emerges the pattern of a major operation performed upon Uncle Sam without his being conscious of it. That operation vitally affects our main ramparts in the Pacific. In consequence of this operation General Marshall was sent on a foredoomed mission to China designed to promote Soviet expansion on our Asiatic frontier. It was a mission which could not but come to grief and which may yet bring untold sorrow to the American people.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, the report from which you are reading does not show whether or not you are still quoting Larsen, but I take it that you are.

Do you see the quotation marks?

Senator MCCARTHY. I will tell the Chair when I finish the quote.

Senator TYDINGS. If you will do that, we can follow it better.

Senator MCCARTHY. I will do that, sir.

How did it happen that the United States began to turn in 1944 upon its loyal ally, the Chiang Kai-shek Government, which had for 7 years fought Japan, and to assume the sponsorship of the rebel Communist regime which collaborated with the Japanese during the period of the Stalin-Hitler pact? How did it come to pass that Washington since 1944 has been seeking to foster Communist members upon the sole recognized and legitimate government of China, a maneuver equivalent to an attempt by a powerful China to introduce Earl Browder and William Z. Foster into key positions in the United States Government? How did it transpire that our top-ranking military leader, General Marshall, should have promoted an agreement in China under which American officers would be training and equipping rebel Chinese Communist units at the very time when they were ambushing our marines and when Communists the world over were waging a war of nerves upon the United States?

Whose was the hand which forced the sensational resignation of Under Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew and his replacement by Dean Acheson? And was the same hand responsible for driving Ambassador Patrick Hurley into a blind alley and retirement?

The Chair will notice the quotation marks there. That will indicate the end of that quotation.

In describing the arrest, Larsen had this to say about his arrival at the office of the United States Commissioner:

There I found myself sitting next to John Stewart Service, a leading figure in the pro-Soviet group in the China Section of the State Department, and to Lt. Andrew Roth, liaison officer between the Office of Naval Intelligence and the State Department, whom I also knew as an adherent of pro-Soviet policies. Both of them were arrested separately the same night in Washington.

Larsen then goes on to describe John Stewart Service, John P. Davies, Jr., and John Carter Vincent as the pro-Soviet group in the China Section whose views were reflected by Amerasia and whose members were in close touch with Jaffe and Roth. In connection with this, it will be remembered that John Service, as Stilwell's political adviser accompanied a highly secret military commission to Yenan. Upon the return of this mission, you will recall that Stilwell demanded that Chiang Kai-shek allow him to equip and arm some 300,000 Communists. Chiang Kai-shek objected on the grounds that this was part of a Soviet plot to build up the rebel forces to the extent that they would control China. Chiang Kai-shek promptly requested the recall of Stilwell and President Roosevelt wisely relieved Stilwell of his command. It was at this time that Service submitted his report No. 40 to the State Department, which according to Hurley, was a plan for the removal of support from the Chiang Kai-shek government with the end result that the Communists would take over.

The espionage cases apparently had their origin when a British Intelligence Unit called attention to material being published in Amerasia which was embarrassing its investigations.

Preliminary investigations conducted at that time by OSS disclosed classified State Department material in the possession of Jaffe and Mitchell. The FBI men then took over and reported that in the course of its quest it was found that John Stewart Service was in communication from China with Jaffe. The substance of some of Service's confidential messages to the State Department reached the offices of Amerasia in New York before they arrived in Washington. One of the papers found in Jaffe's possession was document No. 58, one of Service's secret reports, entitled "Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek—Decline of his Prestige and Criticism of and Opposition to his Leadership."

In the course of the FBI investigation Amerasia was revealed as the center of a group of active and enthusiastic Communists or fellow travelers. To give you a better picture of Amerasia, it perhaps should be mentioned here that Owen Lattimore was formerly an editor of Amerasia, and Frederick Vanderbilt Field, a writer for the Daily Worker, was the magazine head. Mr. Jaffe incidentally was naturalized in 1923 and served as a contributing editor of the Defender, a monthly magazine of International Labor Defense, a Communist organization, in 1933. From 1934 to 1936 he had been a member of the editorial board of China Today, which was a publication of the pro-Soviet American Friends of the Chinese People. At that time he operated under the alias of J. W. Phillips. Under the name of J. W. Phillips, he presided in 1935 over a banquet at which Earl Browder was a speaker—speaking now of a man whom Service was in close contact while in China.

He also lectured at the Jefferson School of Social Science, an avowed Communist Party institution. He was also a member of the board of directors of the National Council of American Soviet Friendship. The New York Times, subsequent to his arrest, referred to him as an active supporter of pro-Communist and pro-Soviet movements for a number of years.

According to an article in Plain Talk magazine Jaffe has been a liberal contributor to pro-Soviet causes and that on one occasion he reserved two tables at a hotel banquet held to launch a pro-Communist China front in the name of "The Fifth Floor, 35 East Twelfth Street," which incidentally happens to be the National Headquarters of the Communist Party.

I realize that this history of Jaffe's activities is unnecessary for most of the members of this investigating body, but I feel that the record should be complete so that anyone who reads it will understand the background of the individual to whom his four codefendants had been delivering secret State and War Department material. His coeditor, Miss Mitchell, gave a party for John S. Service when he returned from China. Service had previously attended a special press conference held by the Institute of Pacific Relations, in which he supported the position of the Chinese Communists. The committee will recall that the California committee cited the Institute of Pacific Relations as a Communist-front organization.

Larsen had this to say about his codefendants:

I knew Jaffe and his group as the editor of a magazine which had almost semiofficial standing among the left wingers in the State Department.

The night Kate Mitchell was arrested, she had in her possession, according to Congressman Dondero, a highly confidential document entitled "Plan of Battle Operation for Soldiers," a paper of such importance that Army officers were subject to court martial if they lost their copies.

Congressman Frank Fellows, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary which investigated the grand jury which failed to indict Service—incidentally, the committee's report shows that some of the members of the grand jury voted for his indictment; that is in the House report—wrote a minority report in which he stated:

The author of the resolution under which this committee assumed jurisdiction stated upon the floor of the House, "The President authorized the arrest to be made and the arrests were forbidden by the State Department."

Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew very urgently insisted upon a prosecution of the six individuals who were picked up by the FBI on charges of conspiracy to commit espionage. He thereupon immediately became a target in a campaign of vilification as the culprit in the case rather than the six who had been picked up by the FBI.

I wish the committee would keep in mind when we are talking about Service we are talking about the same Service whose loyalty report was sent back to the State Department on March 3, 10 days ago, with the request that they look it over again and appoint a new board this time. It is the same Service, so there are some men over in the Civil Service Commission loyalty board who certainly are loyalty conscious.

Lieutenant Roth wrote a series of articles for a New York paper and published a book in which he vigorously attacked Grew for his opposition to the Communist sympathizers in the State Department insofar as the far-eastern policy was concerned.

Under Secretary Grew, after a lifetime in the diplomatic service, resigned, and President Truman announced that Dean Acheson would take over the post of Under Secretary of State.

"During my conference with Mr. Jaffe in October," Larsen said, "he dropped a remark which one could never forget," and here is what Jaffe had to say: "Well, we've suffered a lot, but anyhow we got Grew out."

I might say that in the article in which I am quoting Larsen, the article in Plain Talk, he quotes Joe Davies as saying that one of the conditions of Acheson's taking over was the resignation of Grew. That is the quotation from Larsen's article in Plain Talk.

In regard to the legal handling of this case, the following is found in Plain Talk in an article by Larsen:

While public attention was largely focused upon extraneous issues, the Espionage case itself was following a special course behind the scenes. It appeared that Kate Mitchell—

one of the coeditors of Amerasia and one of the codefendants—had an influential uncle in Buffalo, a reputable attorney by the name of James M. Mitchell, former president of the New York State Bar Association. Mr. Mitchell was a member of a very influential law firm in Buffalo, Kenellek, Cooke, Mitchell, Bass & Letchworth. The New York City correspondents of that law firm include the most redoubtable Col. Joseph M. Hartfield, extremely well known and extremely influential in Government circles in Washington. Col. Hartfield, who is regarded by some as one of the most powerful political lawyers in the country, made at least four trips to Washington where he called on top officials of the Department of Justice in the matter.

In that connection I would like to quote again from Congressman Dondoro's talk on the House floor, in which he stated:

I have heretofore charged and reiterated now that the court before whom these cases were brought was not fully informed of the facts. A summary of the court proceedings has been furnished to me, which shows no evidence or exhibit obtained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation presented to the court.

This, incidentally, was not the FBI's case. They were not trying the case. They merely presented the evidence.

Jaffe's counsel told the court that Jaffe had no intention of harming the Government, and United States Attorney Hitchcock told the court there was no element of disloyalty in connection with the case. If that is the fact, may I respectfully ask what purpose did these individuals have in mind in stealing these particular files?

Had this same thing happened in certain other governments, these people would undoubtedly have been summarily shot, without a trial. Let us not forget we were still at war at that time with Germany and Japan when these files were stolen, and Jaffe, in whose possession they were found, had been for more than 10 years a leader and heavy financial supporter of Communist propaganda causes, according to the FBI.

As I stated above, after the grand jury failed to indict Mitchell, Service, and Roth, the House passed a resolution in which it directed the Committee on the Judiciary—to make a thorough investigation of all the circumstances with respect to the disposition of the charges of espionage and the possession of documents stolen from secret Government files which were made by the Federal Bureau of Investigation "against Phillip J. Jaffe, Kate L. Mitchell, John Stewart Service, Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, Andrew Roth, and Mark Gayn," and to report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House, if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems necessary.

In this connection let me point this out to the committee. When I mentioned John Stewart Service in February of this year the State Department then prepared a press release, something to tell the people what had happened in this case, of course. In that they stated that John Stewart Service had been cleared four times. One of the times they refer to is the House investigation of the grand jury. They failed to tell the people that a number of the members of that grand jury, but not the required 12, voted for the indictment of Service. They failed to tell the public that that grand jury, as I will point out later, in effect has said, as I can show, that it is not a question of guilt that they were going into—we are concerned with a question of whether or not the evidence was in such fashion that it could be presented to the court to prove the guilt.

Now, if that is what the State Department calls a clearance, when less than the 12 votes are present for indictment, then I say there is somebody who has a bad conception of the loyalty rules and regulations in that Department.

This committee then confirmed a report of a theft of a vast number of documents from the State, War, and Navy Departments, which ranged in classification all the way from top secret to confidential. This committee report indicates that a number of the members of the grand jury voted for the indictment of Service and Mitchell on the espionage charges, but that the required number of 12 did not so vote.

It will be noted that the committee was not appointed for the purpose of passing upon the guilt or innocence of the espionage suspects, but the committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating the way that the case was handled and to make recommendations. The committee did not in any way question the theft of the documents. Incidentally, the committee said nothing to indicate that they thought Service was not guilty. However, it seemed to place a great deal of stress upon the fact that the documents might not be admissible in evidence because of the method of obtaining them.

For example, on page 5 the report states as follows:

4. Many of the identifiable documents might have had their evidential value destroyed by reason of the possibility of the court's sustaining the defendants' motions attacking the warrants of arrest.

VI. Judicial decisions require scrupulous care to see that searches and seizures are reasonable. While search and seizure on arrest may be made without a search warrant, yet this is not so unless the warrant of arrest issued after "probable cause" of guilt had been established by legal evidence.

On page 6 of the report the following statement is made:

If the warrant for arrest was not issued on "probable cause" substantiated by facts, the evidence disclosed as a result of the search and seizure incident to the arrest based on such a warrant should be subject to suppression and, therefore, not usable as evidence of the crime for which the arrest was made.

I think this is extremely important in considering this Service case and considering any statements that he was cleared by this grand jury. The House committee, in effect, says that the reason they are not taking action, not against Service—they had no right to take action against Service—the House committee says:

The reason we are not taking action against the grand jury in this case is because, while in effect all of those documents were stolen—

some four or five hundred; I forget the number—

they were obtained in such a manner by the FBI, under the search warrant, that perhaps they could not be effectively used in convicting these men—the six individuals who had stolen them.

Senator TYDINGS. We understand your point, Senator.

Senator MCCARTHY. I want to make it very clear in the record. I am speaking not only for the committee but trying to make a very complete record in all these cases, Mr. Chairman.

While I have not seen any testimony of any of the grand jurors themselves, and do not know whether it is available or not, the above would seem to indicate that the committee felt that the grand jury was disturbed, not so much by the question of guilt or innocence of the defendants but by the question as to whether or not the guilt or innocence could be proven. They apparently felt that much of the material would not be admissible because of the method of search and seizure. The following comment will be noted on page 7 of the committee report:

Most of the items seized at Jaffe's office were typewritten copies. Some of such copies were proved to have been typed in one of the Government departments. It may be fairly inferred that the originals of such copies were never removed but that copies were made at the department or agency where the original reposed.

Let me cite this for the benefit of the lawyers, especially, on the committee. Here is what the committee report says in accusing the grand jury. They say:

Most of the items seized at Jaffe's office were typewritten copies. Some of such copies were proved to have been typed in one of the Government departments. It may be fairly inferred that the originals of such copies were never removed but that copies were made at the department or agency where the original reposed.

This seems to make it very clear that the committee, for some unknown reason, felt that making copies of secret documents and then delivering the copies to unauthorized persons placed the crime in a different class than if they had delivered the originals. It is rather difficult to understand this reasoning, in view of the fact that photographs or copies of an important secret document would normally be of the same value to any enemy power as the original.

The committee further pointed out that an additional reason for not finding the grand jury at fault is because any of the six can still be further prosecuted on the charge of espionage. That, of course, is no longer true. The statute of limitations has now run. The majority report makes some excellent recommendations, which the Secretary of State might well read. I especially call his attention to recommendations 1, 2, and 3 on page 9, which read as follows:

1. That the head of every department and agency of our Government see to it that more—much more—care be exercised in personnel procurement. That all those considered for Government positions in every echelon be investigated so thoroughly as to insure that no one be employed unless absolute certainty has been attained that nothing in background, present attitude, or affiliations raises any reasonable doubt of loyalty and patriotic devotion to the United States of America.

That is very good advice for the Secretary of State if he will follow it.

2. That the watchword and motivating principle of Government employment must be: None but the best. For the fewer, the better, unless above question.

3. Again the recommendation of the House committee—

That each and every present employee who fails to measure up to the highest standard should be discharged. No house divided against itself can stand.

One of the members of the six-man committee, Congressman Hancock, was prevented by illness from participating in the report. Two of the members of the committee wrote dissenting opinions, which meant that the decision to absolve the grand jury of responsibility was made by a 3 to 2 decision.

There are other valuable recommendations made by that House committee, recommendations with which I do not think anyone can disagree.

I might say this: I am not criticizing the House committee for failing to recommend action against the grand jury. While I think their reasoning, when they say some of the documents were only copies and therefore they do not have the same strength as the originals, is rather ridiculous, there were some competent lawyers on that House committee. I understand, and I can see where they would decide that even though the evidence was overwhelming to prove the guilt of these six individuals, if the evidence were not in such shape that it could be used in a court of law to convict under the circumstances, they could well have said "We will not recommend any action against the grand jury."

So that House committee, which was not considering the guilt of Service but considering whether or not the grand jury was competent, rendered a split decision, 3 to 2, and decided that they would not hold the grand jury liable in this case, and that is the type of clearance that the State Department refers to when they tell the country "This man was cleared four times."

Congressman Fellows, in his dissenting opinion, made the following statement:

Jaffe either took these documents himself, or his confederates took them for him. And two of the documents found were top secret, so marked and so designated. I can see no point in arguing that these papers may not have been of much value. The thieves thought they were. The Government agencies so adjudged them. And the facts show that the defendants could have had their choice of any documents they wished; they were given no protection so far as the State Department was concerned.

That is the end of Congressman Fellows' quotation. He was a member of the Un-American Activities Committee.

This transaction, or rather a series of transactions involved, embraces the unlawful removal of top secret, secret, confidential, and restricted files from the Department of State, in our National Government. This, Mr. Chairman, is a very serious offense. In time of war, this is a most serious offense. When war is in progress, or even in time of peace, it is of little or no concern whether the files removed were originals or copies; the fact that information of either or any classification was removed from the secret files in the Department of State and was delivered to any individual, or group of individuals, who had no lawful right to receive the same, is the essence of the offense.

I call the committee's attention to this. Here is where the majority went wrong, for whether they were copies or originals, the crime was the same:

When that very secret information was thus unlawfully revealed to others, no matter how the same was imparted to Mr. Jaffe, whether by an original, or by copy, or by any other method, the real damage has been done.

There should not be any attempt made in the report to either minimize or acquit anyone from the magnitude of the act or acts committed. The report filed appears to at least attempt to either minimize or completely justify some of the unlawful acts which were undoubtedly committed.

All of those who participated in any way in the removal, or attempted removal, of these documents from the Department of State, or who copied such reports and thereafter delivered such copies to Mr. Jaffe, or to any other person, not lawfully entitled to receive the same, should be prosecuted, and all those participating, in any degree, in the unlawful acts under investigation should be immediately discharged from their positions in our Government. The report should speak strongly and without any reservation upon that subject.

I might say, after this recommendation was made, Mr. Chairman, as the Chair knows, not only was John Service reinstated, after they got rid of Joe Grew, but he was placed subsequently in charge of promotion and placement of personnel in the Far Eastern Division, or some title such as that, so the State Department certainly did not take the advice of either the majority or the minority opinion of that committee.

Again quoting from the minority opinion :

The questions here involved are so grave and the offenses so great that no effort should be made to protect or defend those who so offended, but the report should be made both firm and strong—to speak the truth—but to place the blame where the same rightfully belongs.

This is but a small portion of the pertinent background of Service, but certainly, beyond doubt, it forever excludes this man as a security risk, no matter what yardstick is used, and again may I say I congratulate the Civil Service Loyalty Appeals Board in this case, though not in some of the others we will bring up, for having the intelligence and guts to send this back and say that the State Department loyalty board who cleared this man did wrong, and the next time we don't want the same men sitting on the board, and I certainly hope that the State Department follows the advice of the Civil Service Loyalty Appeals Board.

Again we have a known associate and collaborator with Communists and pro-Communists, a man high in the State Department, consorting with admitted espionage agents, and I wish to say to this committee what I said on the floor of the Senate on February 20, 1950 :

When Chiang Kai-shek was fighting our war, the State Department had in China a young man named John S. Service. His task, obviously, was not to work for the communication of China. Strangely, however, he sent official reports back to the State Department urging that we torpedo our ally Chiang Kai-shek and stating, in effect, that communism was the best hope of China.

Later this man—John Service—was picked up by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for turning over to the Communists secret State Department information. Strangely, however, he was never prosecuted. However, Joseph Grew, the Under Secretary of State, who insisted on his prosecution, was forced to resign. Two days after Grew's successor, Dean Acheson, took over as Under Secretary of State, this man John Service, who had been picked up by the FBI and who had previously urged that communism was the best hope of China, was not only reinstated in the State Department but promoted. And finally, under Acheson, placed in charge of all placements and promotions.

I might say I think the word "all" should not have been in that speech. I believe it was only in charge of placements and promotions in the far-eastern area.

Mr. Chairman, today this man, John S. Service, is a ranking officer in the policy-making group of "untouchables" on duty in Calcutta, India, one of the most strategically important listening posts in the world today, and since the fall of China the most important new front of the cold war.

Five times this man has been investigated as to his loyalty and his acceptance as a security risk to the Nation.

What possible reason could there have been for even a second investigation of his record?

He was not an acceptable security risk under Mr. Acheson's own "yardstick of loyalty" the day he entered the Government.

He is not a sound security risk today.

I am going to try to finish out a short one. I would like permission to finish it even if the bell does ring before I get through.

Senator TRINING. All right, Senator. We will give you the time.

Might I ask if you have an approximation of the amount of time you would like to have to finish this?

Senator McCARTHY. It will take some time on this, Mr. Chairman. Then I have a sizable number of names which I wish to present to the committee, not in the public record but some for the staff, now that a staff has been appointed. I cannot finish it between now and 12 o'clock.

Senator TYDINGS. We will wait a little longer. Go ahead.

Senator McCARTHY. I might say that I am very grateful for the fact that I have been able to put my case on in the manner that I have been in the last 2 days. I want to thank the Senator very much.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McCarthy, of course we are going to reserve the right to ask you some questions. We are not doing it now because we do not want to interrupt you.

Senator McCARTHY. Absolutely, and I certainly will be here for any questions you want to ask.

If the Chair wants to ask questions about the last case——

Senator TYDINGS. Inasmuch as we have let them all go by with no opportunity for interrogation, we will have to go back and fill in things we will want to know.

Senator McCARTHY. Very good.

I would like to mark these, Mr. Chairman, as exhibits 36, 37, 38——

Senator TYDINGS. It has been suggested that you use the three initials of the subject in each case. Then there probably won't be any confusion.

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, I can do that.

Senator TYDINGS. I think that will be a good way to handle it.

Senator McCARTHY. I have already marked these.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead and leave them that way.

Senator McCARTHY. 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, and 48.

Exhibits Nos. 36 to 48 I now offer as evidence in this case, if that is agreeable to the Chair.

Senator TYDINGS. The exhibits will be printed at the appropriate place in the Senator's remarks.

The Department of State of the United States operates with thousands of employees and requires a tremendous budget which has aided materially in placing on the American people the greatest tax burden they have ever been called upon to bear.

All but a small handful of those employees are honest and loyal Americans. The State Department is their life work. They have given to it years of service, unquestioned loyalty; and they have served it with great pride.

In the far-flung places of the world, these loyal men and women have spent their lives and exercised all their ingenuity to give to their Department and their Government every possible bit of information and advice they thought useful.

Career employees of the State Department, by virtue of their long residence in every foreign country on the globe and their close association, and many times friendship, with citizens and officials of those countries, have had access to, have reported on, every phase of economic and political affairs in the nations to which they are attached.

These are the real "experts" of the State Department.

It is a tragedy when we find the advice and experiences of such outstandingly able employees stored in a multitude of steel filing cases and disregarded while the Department of State's closed corporation of "untouchables" call upon pro-Communist idealists, crackpots, and, to put it mildly, "bad security risks" to advise them on American diplomatic policy.

The next case I wish to call to the attention of the committee is that of Prof. Frederick L. Schuman.

Dr. Schuman is on the faculty of Williams College and is a highly placed lecturer with the Department of State.

It is the function of Dr. Schuman to explain how to be better diplomats to veteran diplomats and career men of the State Department in its Division of Training Services.

Senator TYNINGS. I do not know this gentleman or anything about him. Might I ask you if he is an employee of the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. He is one of the lecturers, as I will show you. His task has been to come in and lecture to young men sent out into foreign fields and tell them how they should be guided.

Senator TYNINGS. I understand that, but I do not know what his status is. Is he an employee or not an employee?

Senator McCARTHY. Do you mean does he get paid for that?

Senator TYNINGS. Both ways. Does he work for the State Department?

Senator McCARTHY. That, Mr. Chairman, is not a year-round job, I understand. He is listed, I believe, as a consultant. If you call the State Department and say "Is he working there?" if they check and find he made no lecture today, which he obviously didn't, they will undoubtedly tell you he is not working for the State Department. He is one of the lecturers.

Senator TYNINGS. How often does he lecture? Have you any idea? Do you know whether he is paid or not for those lectures?

Senator McCARTHY. I don't know. In fact, I don't think that is important.

Senator TYNINGS. We will find out. I thought maybe your record might have it.

Senator McCARTHY. I don't think it is a question of whether he is paid. It is the fact that this man is picked, of all the competent, outstanding Americans we have, to come and tell these young men who are going into the field how they should act and what they should do that is an unusual matter.

It is the function of Dr. Schuman to explain how to be better diplomats to veteran diplomats and career men of the State Department in its Division of Training Services. He is described by the State Department itself as one of a group of "experts on subjects of importance in diplomacy."

Appearing with Professor Schuman in the lecture program were Owen Lattimore and Dr. Edward C. Acheson, director of the School of Foreign Service at George Washington University and brother of Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Let me make it clear that I am not referring to any one program in which all three of them appeared. I am referring to three men who were called in to make these lectures.

Dr. Schuman was formerly with the Federal Communications Commission, where he served under Mr. Goodman Watson, who was finally discharged by that department.

Dr. Schuman is one of the closest collaborators in and sponsors of Communist-front organizations in America.

He was affiliated with the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions, which was denounced as a subversive organization by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. This is the organization under whose auspices was held the Cultural and Science Conference for World Peace at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria in New York from March 25 to 29, 1949, and which, incidentally, was denounced by the Secretary—

Senator TYDINGS. Which Secretary?

Senator MCCARTHY. Secretary of State Acheson. If I can quote his exact words, I think he said it was "a sounding board for Russian propaganda."

This organization was denounced as an instrument of Soviet propaganda by the State Department.

Dr. Schuman's affiliations with the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions are not casual. He was a member of its policy and program committee in 1948. To those who say many of these Communist-front connections have been at a time when we were friends with Russia, I call attention to the fact that there has been no break from even during the days of the Hitler-Stalin Pact right up until 1948 and 1949. You don't find any change whatsoever in their sponsorship of these Communist front organizations, and I might say that some individuals can come down and say "I didn't know about this organization; I didn't know anything about its aims," but not Dr. Schuman. When he belongs to the organizations I am going to give you, you can be sure he knows what he is doing. This is the man who lectures in the State Department.

He was a signer of a press release of the same organization on March 1, 1949. He was a member of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions for Wallace, according to the Daily Worker, August 18, 1948, page 7, and he again appeared as a sponsor, according to the Daily Worker on October 10, 1948, page 2.

Professor Schuman was a sponsor of the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born, which was cited as subversive by the Attorney General, the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and the California Committee on Un-American Activities.

He was prominent in the affairs of the American Council on Soviet Relations, which has been cited by subversive by the Attorney General, the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the California Committee on Un-American Activities. He was a sponsor of the American League for Peace and Democracy, which has been cited by the same three official bodies as a communistic and subversive organization.

The American Russian Institute, which has also been the recipient of Professor Schuman's aid, has been cited as communistic and subversive by the Attorney General, the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and the California Committee on Un-American Activities.

The same adherence applies to the American Slav Congress, which the same three organizations have cited as subversive.

He sponsored the Civil Rights Congress, an organization termed subversive by the House Committee on Un-American Activities; and he was also affiliated with the Committee for Boycott Against Japanese Aggression, named communistic and subversive by the Attorney General, the House Un-American Activities Committee, and the California Committee on Un-American Activities.

Professor Schuman lent his name and prestige to the activities of the Friends of the Soviet Union, which was cited by all three of the above as officially a communistic and subversive organization. The African Aid Committee was named subversive and communistic by the Attorney General, the House Un-American Activities Committee, and the California Un-American Activities Committee; and here again we have Professor Schuman as a sponsor. The same three agencies have declared subversive and communistic the National Conference of American Policy in China and the Far East. This is one he has been really active in. They called a conference under the auspices of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy. Here again we have Professor Schuman lending aid and comfort to a subversive organization.

We could perhaps continue for hours in elaborating on the pro-Communist affiliations of this consultant to the small group of "untouchables" who determine, force through, and carry out the foreign policy of this country.

I have chosen at random some of the organizations, all pro-Communist in nature, with which this man has been affiliated.

Incidentally, when I talked about this man's activities as a lecturer, I hope I made it clear that that was one of his activities in the State Department. He is also a consultant, one of the authorities on far-eastern affairs, naturally. A most casual survey of these organizations will indicate that, if he is not a card-holding member of the Communist Party, the difference is so slight that it is unimportant.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have before me the photostats of documents showing his connection with these organizations. In view of the fact that the Senate is in session, I am not going to take the Senators' time to read them.

Senator TYDINGS. They will be put in the record at this place as the Senator has marked them.

TESTIMONIAL TO ELLIS ISLAND HUNGER STRIKERS

CHARLES DOYLE—GERHART EISLER—IRVING POTASH—FERDINAND C. SMITH—JOHN WILLIAMSON

Hotel McAlpin, New York City, March 3, 1940

DEAR FRIEND: We invite you to join with us in a testimonial dinner to be held at the McAlpin Hotel, New York City, on Thursday evening, March 3, 1949, for the five men who participated in a hunger strike on Ellis Island, during March 1948.

These five men—Charles Doyle, Gerhart Eisler, Irving Potash, Ferdinand Smith, and John Williamson—united in a hunger strike in order that the constitutional right to bail should not be lost to the American people.

As you will remember, people all over the country joined in demonstrations for them and the principle for which they so heroically were ready to give their lives. As a result, bail was granted by the courts.

We are holding this testimonial on the first anniversary of their great fight which is not yet won. Bail has been granted to Irving Potash, Ferdinand Smith, and John Williamson by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. But it is still being denied to Charles Doyle and Gerhart Eisler, although they are at this moment free on the original bail granted by the courts.

Therefore, the fight for bail must go on. This testimonial must demonstrate our determination to continue the defense of Doyle and Eider and to carry on an effective campaign to defeat the Justice Department's deportation drive.

We hope that you will participate with us in this testimonial. Reservations are $6 per plate. Reservations for tables of 10 are $60.

Sincerely yours,

REV. JOHN W. DARR, Jr.,
Chairman, Board of Directors.

MISS JANE SWANHAUSER,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MISS SWANHAUSER: Since you give us the choice of day for Dr. Su, I will ask for Friday, June 24, or Saturday, June 25. I still leave it to you to decide which of these two days, since I feel it is possible some other branch may have spoken already for one of these two dates I named. Kindly write at once which date I may count upon and send me, first of all, any particulars about Dr. Su that I may use in publicity; also tell me if this trip is to raise money for I must pay $15 flat if I use a university hall and make any sort of collection. We have little hope of raising much here, as the bowl of rice drive is now on, but we feel that if Dr. Su can speak to the 3,000 students of the summer school who come, many of them from country regions, that they will carry the idea of boycott, etc., back to their homes and spread the idea. I am sure you will consider even this worth while. I shall not be able to do any advertising until I hear from you, so please write as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

ANNA H. RUBIO.

AFRICAN AID COMMITTEE,
New York 10, N. Y., January 20, 1950.

DEAR FRIEND: "We have but one appeal to make to you, our brothers abroad—your moral and financial support will highly be appreciated"—that is the message from leaders of the Nigerian workers recently shot down while striking for 50 cents a day pay.

A token contribution of $200 has already been sent to these workers by our committee. We must send more. With your help, we can do so.

Even if you have already contributed to the African Aid Committee, we urge you to give again in this emergency.

And please help us in reaching others with this appeal by signing and returning the blank below.

Very truly yours,

W. E. B. Du Bois, Chairman.

To Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois,
African Aid Committee:

I'll be glad to get others to help, too.

Send me materials for soliciting contributions among my friends and organizations in response to the appeal from the workers of Nigeria.

CALL TO A NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON AMERICAN POLICY IN CHINA AND THE FAR EAST

Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, January 23-25, 1948, Hotel Roosevelt, New York City

National Chairmen: T. A. Blason, Dr. W. E. B. Dubois, Hon. Stanley M. Isaacs; Organizing Secretary Stephen H. Fritschman

"It is my considered opinion that future generations will regard the betrayal of the Chinese people by the American Government in the Truman administration as one of the greatest errors ever made in American diplomacy."—Brig. Gen. Evans F. Carlson, United States Marine Corps.

The three undersigned national chairmen call upon all interested organizations to send delegates and observers to a national conference on American policy in China and the Far East to be held in New York City, January 23, 24, and 25, 1948.

The purposes of the conference are to discuss and plan action on—

1. The halting of United States intervention in China and other friendly far eastern countries.
2. The carrying out of the democratic decisions of the Potsdam agreement and the Moscow conference regarding policies in Japan and Korea.
3. The relationship between far eastern policy and domestic well-being.
4. A program to achieve a genuinely democratic far eastern policy which alone can give any hope of peace.
5. Rallying all democratic Americans to support of such a program.

We Americans have always felt a pride and strength in our heritage as a democratic people. Our Government's present far eastern policy violates our most cherished American political beliefs and threatens our own democracy.

In China, the largest nation in earth, United States policy, through military, financial, and political intervention, is aiding in the imposition of a backward, corrupt and violently antidemocratic regime which the vast majority of the Chinese people themselves repudiate. The most reactionary elements in the United States are now scheming for further intervention on a scale which will subject the Chinese people to an autocracy dependent upon outside financial and military help—that is the United States—for its continued existence. This American intervention also violates the Charter of the United Nations.

In Japan, many observers, Americans and others, are deeply disturbed over the practically unilateral American occupation which seems less concerned about eradicating the reactionary elements responsible for Pearl Harbor than is now harnessing these elements to the dangerous ambitions of an antidemocratic American group.

In the Philippines, the American Government is giving energetic support to Filipino collaborationists and other betrayers of their country's independence; and by imposing upon the Philippines economic conditions inimical to their development as a free nation, is making a mockery of Philippine independence.

In Indonesia, the people struggling against their Dutch oppressors have been forsaken by an American policy evidently geared to safeguarding the status quo rather than to giving encouragement to those seeking freedom and a rising standard of living.

In southern Korea, where American occupation forces now rule over people who were our allies in the war, economic chaos and political fascism are the fruits of American policy.

The American democratic heritage and destiny is now suffering what may prove irrevocable damage from the present far-eastern policy of our Government. This policy is costing us taxpayers billions of futile dollars; it is postponing the healthy trans-Pacific trade we should be enjoying; it is creating conditions that contribute toward an economic depression here at home; it is fast making enemies of the millions of Asia who are our natural allies in the desire for a peaceful and democratic world; it is engendering international frictions which can easily lead us into another war.

It is time for democratic American citizens to act. In addition to organizational delegates and observers we invite individuals to attend as visitors.

This conference will bring together citizens who wish to secure the facts and understand the issues related to far eastern policy, and to discuss the means of effective citizenship action on that policy. The conference will assist the delegates and individuals to carry back to their organizations and communities the facts, insights, convictions, and suggested methods of action necessary at this time. All decisions of the conference will come out of floor discussion and, we hope, will be implemented in whole or in part, by each organization in its own way.

T. A. Bisson,
W. E. B. DuBois,
STANLEY M. ISAACS,
National Chairmen.

URGENT SUMMONS TO A CONGRESS ON CIVIL RIGHTS IN DETROIT, APRIL 27 AND 28, 1946, TO ORGANIZE AN OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE RISING FASCIST AGGRESSION IN THE UNITED STATES

Today's drive to subvert our democratic liberties is well-organized, well-heeled, insidious. It presents an emergency that emergency measures alone can meet. The great war against fascism is won, but the victory is far from secure. Only a coalition of all the forces of the people, through united action, can prevent its destruction.

Here's what is happening in the United States:

PROGRAM

Congress on civil rights, Detroit, Mich., April 27 and 28, 1946

Saturday morning, First Congregational Church (Woodward Avenue at Forest):
 11 a. m., registration.
 12 noon, opening luncheon.

Saturday afternoon, 2 p. m. to 6 p. m., Maccabees Auditorium (Woodward Avenue at Putnam):

Defense Against the Enemy Within—Presentation of key issues.

Protect Minorities for America's Defense—The fight against police terror in Columbia, Tenn., the Freeport killings, and other widespread violation of civil rights; results of campaigns on these cases.

Labor's Rights—First Line of Defense—The fight against the Case bill, police violence, the injunction menace.

Crush America's Fifth Column—The fight against the Rankin committee, Gerald L. K. Smith, the KKK, Bilbo and all domestic fascists.

The Menace of anti-Semitism and Jim Crow—The fight against terrorism, and discrimination in employment, housing, and education.

Initial report of resolutions committee; report of credentials committee; election of campaigns coordination committee.

Saturday evening, 8:30 p. m., reception for delegates by Michigan Civil Rights Federation.

Sunday, 9:30 a. m. to 3:30 p. m.:

Report of campaigns coordination committee. Discussion of proposals.

Luncheon recess.

Continued discussion and action on committee report.

Final report of resolutions committee.

Proposals for carrying out conference decisions.

Conference Headquarters: 600 Hammond Building, Fort and Woodward Avenues, Detroit. Telephone: Cadillac 6278.

Registration: At First Congregational Church from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. on Saturday. After 2 p. m., at Maccabees auditorium. Registration fee: $2 for each organization delegate, or individual.

Representation: Two representatives from each organization; interested individuals.

Conference luncheon: Saturday noon, at First Congregational Church. Reservations may be made at $1.50 per plate. Please make reservations in advance. Luncheon speakers to be announced.

Accommodations: Reservations for hotel accommodations must be made in advance because of housing difficulties. Address all requests for reservations to New York headquarters of Congress on Civil Rights. For further details, additional copies of this call and general inquiry, send all communications to:

Congress on Civil Rights, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York 17, N. Y.

Reactionary forces, based on war-rich monopolies, the die-hard union breakers, red-baiters, and race haters, command the largest surviving fifth column in the world. They are turning the weapons and methods of fascism against the American people. They are prepared to destroy our democracy, even to the establishment of outright fascism.

Their program consists of smashing unions through strike provocation, injunctions, and legislation like the Case bill that would wipe out labor gains of a quarter of a century; spreading discrimination and hatred against minorities through violence against Negro civilians and veterans, particularly in the South, anti-Semitism and destruction of FEPC; maintaining the poll-tax system to disfranchise 10,000,000 Negro and white Americans; sapping the strength of labor and other organizations by using Hitler's prime weapon of red baiting, especially through revival of the Dies committee under Rankin.

This reactionary program has met the growing organized resistance of the labor movement and other groups and individuals who believe firmly in democratic liberties.

The popular response to such campaigns as FEPC and poll-tax repeal shows that the people will organize. Veterans are fighting discrimination and challenging the pro-Fascist press. Committees everywhere have sprung up to defend victims of police and lynch violence; the renewed activity of such Fascist spokesmen as Gerald L. K. Smith has brought widespread, fighting protests.

Labor has sharply stiffened the defense of its civil rights, and people in all walks of life are rallying with enthusiasm to labor's defense.

Now more than ever the united action of the democratic forces is needed to enable each organization and individual to exert maximum effectiveness in the realization of a common program. The elaboration of a campaign or series of campaigns, coordinated in detail and Nation-wide in scope, is therefore essential to meet the challenges that today confront us all:

To safeguard and extend all democratic rights, especially the rights of labor, and of racial, political, religious and national minorities;

To combat all forms of discrimination against these groups;

To defend and aid victims of the fight for these rights;

To fight against domestic fascism and all its forms—Jim Crow, anti-Semitism, red-baiting, discrimination against the foreign born.

To these ends, we call upon civil rights, labor, religious, interracial, and other organizations and individuals to attend a congress on civil rights in Detroit on April 27 and 28, 1946, to formulate and agree upon a national program to defeat the offensive of reactionary and Fascist forces, and to consider all steps required to assure the maximum unification of effort to advance that program.

A STATEMENT OF AMERICAN EDUCATORS

As American educators, we are much disturbed by one of the byproducts of the Presidential "loyalty order"—the listing of a number of schools as "subversive" organizations by the Attorney General of the United States. The charge that these schools "appear" to be "adjuncts of the Communist Party" could be made against any institution that teaches Marxism, and could thus always be used as a device for labeling Marxist teaching subversive.

We may or may not believe in Marxist schools, Catholic schools, single-tax schools, or any other schools with particular social outlooks. We are alarmed that any official of the American Government assumes the power officially to proclaim the teaching and study of an economic philosophy to be subversive.

We believe that every group—including Marxists—has the right, under the American Constitution, to teach and propagate its ideas, and that students, whether they are Marxists or not, have the right to study Marxism and to judge for themselves the validity of its teachings. If this right can be denied by arbitrary government fiat—in the sense that teaching at or attending a school where such ideas are taught is declared "subversive"—then similarly any other ideas not approved by those in power can as readily be stifled.

We recognize, for example, that the Jefferson School of Social Science in New York is, in its teaching of the social sciences, avowedly Marxist. It operates as an independent institution under its board of trustees, and clearly defines its educational objectives and organization in its bulletins. Whatever one might think of Marxism as a method or a body of doctrine, it is clear that the action of the Attorney General in stigmatizing such institutions as "subversive," especially without hearing or trial, represents an extremely dangerous step in the direction of thought control and the institution of thought police. If Marxist schools can be declared subversive, then social science teachers who assign Marxist materials or express Marxist views may quickly be subjected to the same label. Freedom of inquiry will be gravely imperilled.

The President's Commission on Higher Education for American Democracy (December 15, 1947) has ably stated: "The social role of education in a democratic society is at once to insure equal liberty and equal opportunity to differing individuals and groups, and to enable the citizens to understand, appraise, and redirect forces, men, and events as these tend to strengthen or to weaken their liberties."

In this spirit, we ask that the President of the United States and the Attorney General withdraw the blacklist of Marxist and labor educational institutions, as repugnant to our national ideal of freedom of thought.

TO HONOR A GREAT AMERICAN ON THE THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF HIS COURAGEOUS LAUNCHING OF THE FIGHT FOR PEACE

You are cordially invited to join us in honoring Henry A. Wallace, a great leader and a wonderful human being at a dinner, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Monday evening, September 12, 1949, at 7 o'clock.

Couvert: $10—dress optional.

R. S. V. P.

TED O. THACKREY, Dinner Chairman.

Three years ago, a man of courage and principle and great concern for his fellow man raised his voice against what he regarded as a betrayal of the people.

His conscience aflame, he spoke up, at Madison Square Garden, on September 12, 1946, against the drift away from the Roosevelt path of peace and cooperation.

He did this at great personal sacrifice. Just as 2 years earlier when his denunciation of Jim Crow at the Democratic National Convention cost him the Presidency, so now his Jeremiah-like warning led inevitably to his resignation from the Cabinet a few days later.

On that September 12, Henry A. Wallace launched, and has since led with magnificent integrity, the resistance movement that has given organized expression to the peace forces of America. Some day this movement will be judged in true perspective and all who have participated in it will have reason to be proud.

Funds from this dinner will be used to further Mr. Wallace's great work as the leader of the Progressive Party.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY LEADING EDUCATORS CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON PROFESSORS

LETTERS TO DR. ALLEN CALL FIRING THREAT TO ENTIRE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

One hundred and fifty educational leaders from more than 50 colleges and universities throughout the country have urged Dr. Raymond Allen, president of the University of Washington, to reinstate with full rights of tenure the 3 professors recently discharged from the university for membership in or "ambiguous relationship to" the Communist Party in a letter released today (Tuesday) by the Bureau of Academic Freedom of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions.

Dr. Christian Gauss, dean emeritus of Princeton University; Prof. L. C. Dunn of Columbia University; Dr. L. B. Arguimbau, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dr. Howard Mumford Jones, of Harvard University; and Prof. Robert Chambers, of New York University, are among the signers of the letter which characterizes the firings as a "shocking repudiation" of the principles of democracy and academic freedom.

Other signatures to the letter, which has also been sent to the board of regents of the University of Washington, include: Dr. David Haber, Yale Law School; Prof. Colston Warne, Amherst College; Dr. Earl R. Douglass, director of the College of Education, University of Colorado; Dr. Frank W. Weymouth, Stanford University; Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge; Dr. W. C. H. Prentice of Swarthmore College; Dr. I. M. Kolthoff, University of Minnesota; and Dr. T. W. Reese, Mount Holyoke College.

Following is the complete text of the letter, released by Dr. Clyde R. Miller, director of the NCASF Bureau on Academic Freedom:

"The principle that every citizen has a right to his personal beliefs and associations and to voluntary participation in the affairs of the community is fundamental to the traditional American concepts of democracy and academic freedom.

"The recent decision of the University of Washington to dismiss three faculty members on the basis of membership in the Communist Party, or on the premise of "guilt by association," is a shocking repudiation of this principle. If these dismissed professors are not reinstated, the result will be irreparable damage to all educational institutions and particularly to the University of Washington.

"The university's action, if it is not swiftly reversed, will set a precedent for the dismissal of any instructor for any personal beliefs and associations.

"As educators, deeply concerned for our own civil rights and those of our fellow citizens, and cognizant of the further implications of this action as a threat to our entire educational system, we urge the immediate reinstatement, with full rights of tenure, of the dismissed professors, Phillips, Butterworth, and Gundlach."

List of other professors whose names appear on the statement are attached.

NOTABLES DEFEND COMMUNIST RIGHTS

More than 100 prominent individuals yesterday called upon Congress to defeat the various "exceptional and punitive measures directed against the Communist Party," now in the hands of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Signers of the letter include Thomas Mann, Franklin P. Adams, Vincent Sheean, Prof. Frederick L. Schuman of Williams College, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Eddy, Mrs. Margaret Sanger Slee, Jo Davidson, Garson Kanin, Libby Holman, and Dean Walter G. Mudder of Boston University School of Theology.

"Legislation such as that proposed by Congressmen Rankin, Sheppard, Hartley, Parnell Thomas, and McDonough follows the Hitler pattern," the signers declared in a letter to House Speaker Joseph Martin, released by the Civil Rights Congress.

"The Communist Party is a legal American political party. We see nothing in its program, record or activities, either in war or peace to justify the enactment of the repressive legislation now being urged upon the Congress in an atmosphere of an organized hysteria."

Among the other signers of the letter are Samuel L. M. Barlow, Sholem Asch, Elmer A. Benson, former Governor of Minnesota; Prof. S. P. Breckenridge, University of Chicago; Zlatko Balokovic, Professors Archibald Cox, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dunn and F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard University; Prof. J. Frank Doble, University of Texas, Adolf Dehn.

Also, Mayor Cornelius D. Scully, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Charles Houston, attorney Roscoe Dunjee, Oklahoma City; Prof. Henry Pratt Fairchild, Howard East, Dr. Harry F. Ward, John Howard Lawson, Agnes Smedley, Rev. Charles F. McClennan, Cleveland, Ohio; Arthur Miller, Artur Schnabel, Dashiell Hammett, and Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, president, Palmer Memorial Institute.

Also, Max Weber, William Jay Schieffelin, Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, Howard University; Bishop W. Y. Bell, Cordele, Ga.; Matthew Josephson, historian; Rabbi Jacob H. Kaplan, Miami, Fla.; Francis Fisher Kane, Philadelphia attorney; Prof. Malcolm Sharp, University of Chicago Law School; George Marshall and Milton Kaufman, Civil Rights Congress.

NATIONAL WALLACE FOR PRESIDENT COMMITTEE, 39 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

For A. M. Release, Friday, March 26, 1938

Formation of a 700-member National Wallace for President Committee was announced yesterday (Thursday) by Elmer A. Benson, former Minnesota Governor and chairman of the Wallace group.

The committee will hold its first meeting in Chicago April 9, 10, and 11, to make plans for the formation of a new national political party and to plan the program for the Wallace campaign.

Programs for the various divisions of the Wallace committee will be drafted on the opening day of the meeting. The divisions include those for labor, women, professional groups, nationality groups, youth, and farm.

On April 10 and through part of April 11, State directors from approximately 40 States will report on their organizational progress and their drive to put Wallace's name on the ballot. The press will be admitted to this session of the meeting.

On the night of April 10 the committee members will attend a mass rally at the Chicago Stadium, where both Mr. Wallace and Senator Glen Taylor will speak.

The Chicago meeting will also issue the call for the new party convention and set the date and place.

Eleven new State parties have already been formed by Wallace groups. Plans are already under way for forming new parties shortly in 24 other States.

Among the 700 members of the committee are:

EXHIBIT 48

THE TEXT OF AN OPEN CALLING FOR GREATER UNITY OF THE ANTI-FASCIST FORCES AND STRENGTHENING OF THE FRONT AGAINST AGGRESSION THROUGH CLOSER COOPERATION WITH THE SOVIET UNION RELEASED ON AUGUST 14 BY 400 LEADING AMERICANS

To All Active Supporters of Democracy and Peace

One of the greatest problems confronting all those engaged in the struggle for democracy and peace, whether they be liberals, progressives, trade-unionists, or others, is how to unite their various forces so as to achieve victory for their common goals. The Fascists and their allies are well aware that democracy will win if its supporters are united. Accordingly, they are intent on destroying such unity at all costs.

On the international scene the Fascists and their friends have tried to prevent a united antiaggression front by sowing suspicion between the Soviet Union and other nations interested in maintaining peace.

On the domestic scene the reactionaries are attempting to split the democratic front by similar tactics. Realizing that here in America they cannot get far with a definitely pro-Fascist appeal, they strive to pervert American anti-Fascist sentiment to their own ends. With the aim of turning anti-Fascist feeling against the Soviet Union they have encouraged the fantastic falsehood that the U. S. S. R. and the totalitarian states are basically alike. By this strategy they hope to create dissension among the progressive forces whose united strength is a first necessity for the defeat of fascism.

Some sincere American liberals have fallen into this trap and unwittingly aided a cause to which they are essentially opposed. Thus, a number of them have carelessly lent their signatures to the recent manifesto issued by the so-called Committee for Cultural Freedom. This manifesto denounces in vague, undefined terms all forms of "Dictatorship" and asserts that the Fascist states and Soviet Russia equally menace American institutions and the democratic way of life.

While we prefer to dwell on facts rather than personalities, we feel it is necessary to point out that among the signers of this manifesto are individuals who have for years had as their chief political objective the maligning of the Soviet people and their government, and it is precisely these people who are the initiators and controllers of the committee.

A number of other committees have been formed which give lip service to democracy and peace while actually attacking the Soviet Union and aiding reaction. Honest persons approached by such committees should scrutinize their aims very carefully and support only those groups genuinely interested in preserving culture and freedom and refusing to serve as instruments for attacking the Soviet Union or aiding fascism in any other way.

The undersigned do not represent any committee or organization, nor do they propose to form one. Our object is to point out the real purpose behind all these attempts to bracket the Soviet Union with the Fascist states, and to make it clear that Soviet and Fascist policies are diametrically opposed. To this end we should like to stress ten basic points in which Soviet socialism differs fundamentally from totalitarian fascism.

1. The Soviet Union continues as always to be a consistent bulwark against war and aggression, and works unceasingly for the goal of a peaceful international order.

2. It has eliminated racial and national prejudice within its borders, freed the minority peoples enslaved under the Tsars, stimulated the development of the culture and economic welfare of these peoples, and made the expression of anti-semitism or any racial animosity a criminal offense.

3. It has socialized the means of production and distribution through the public ownership of industry and the collectivization of agriculture.

4. It has established nation-wide socialist planning, resulting in increasingly higher living standards and the abolition of unemployment and depression.

5. It has built the trade unions, in which almost 24,000,000 workers are organized, into the very fabric of its society.

6. The Soviet Union has emancipated woman and the family, and has developed an advanced system of child care.

7. From the viewpoint of cultural freedom, the difference between the Soviet Union and the Fascist countries is most striking. The Soviet Union has affected one of the most far-reaching cultural and educational advances in all history and among a population which at the start was almost three-fourths illiterate. Those writers and thinkers whose books have been burned by the Nazis are published in the Soviet Union. The best literature from Homer to Thomas Mann, the best thought from Aristotle to Lenin, is available to the masses of the Soviet people, who themselves actively participate in the creation of culture.

8. It has replaced the myths and superstitions of old Russia with the truths and techniques of experimental science, extending scientific procedures to every field, from economics to public health. And it has made science and scientific study available to the mass of the people.

9. The Soviet Union considers political dictatorship a transitional form and has shown a steadily expanding democracy in every sphere. Its epoch-making new constitution guarantees Soviet citizens universal suffrage, civil liberties, the right to employment, to leisure, to free education, to free medical care, to material security in sickness and old age, to equality of the sexes in all fields of activity, and to equality of all races and nationalities.

10. In relation to Russia's past, the country has been advancing rapidly along the road of material and cultural progress in ways that the American people can understand and appreciate.

The Soviet Union has an economic system different from our own. But Soviet aims and achievements make it clear that there exists a sound and permanent basis in mutual ideals for cooperation between the U. S. A. and the U. S. S. R. on behalf of world peace and the security and freedom of all nations.

Accordingly, the signers of this letter urge Americans of whatever political persuasion to stand firmly for close cooperation in this sphere between the United States and Soviet Russia, and to be on guard against any and all attempts to prevent such cooperation in this critical period in the affairs of mankind.

Among the 400 signers of the open letter are:

Senator McCARTHY. I would like to call one to the committee's attention, something I did not suspect before I saw this document. It seems that on September 12, 1949, one of these Communist-front organizations sponsored a dinner for Henry A. Wallace and, believe it or not, the covert charge was $10.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that you have hired a staff to obtain the complete information on anyone in the State Department or closely related agencies who is suspected of being a bad security risk.

I am, therefore, submitting to the chairman for the attention of the staff a list of 25 names which requires further investigation. All of these individuals to the best of my knowledge are either in the State Department, or in closely related agencies. At least they were very recently.

Senator TYDINGS. We will look them up.

Senator MCCARTHY. I understand all of them have been investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and that such FBI investigations have developed information which is now in the files—information which, according to Acheson's own "yardstick of loyalty" would stamp many, if not all of them, as being bad security risks.

With the very limited staff which I have available (and, as the Chair knows, I have been allocated no funds for this investigation; I have been conducting it completely on my own), it would take me a considerable period of time to develop all of the information on all of these individuals and submit individual cases on each of them to the committee.

I intend, of course, to continue my investigation and assemble all available information which comes to my attention on any of these individuals, which information shall be available to the staff of this committee.

In the meantime, in order to get things started, I believe the staff might well start checking on these individuals. Obviously, the staff could do a much speedier job in that the files, which are not easily available to me, will be available to the committee.

None of the names which I now hand the Chair covers the cases which I covered on the Senate floor.

Let me make that clear. These are additional names, some I had not had time to develop when I made the speech on the Senate floor.

Senator TYDINGS. We are glad to have them. We will look into them, examine the files, and make a report.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thank the chairman.

I shall continue to develop as much information on those cases as possible and will, of course, submit to the committee all such information as soon as I have it properly documented.

I have remaining a considerable amount of information on the balance of these cases covered on the Senate floor, which information is being assembled as rapidly as possible and put into shape to be presented to the committee. This task will be completed as soon as possible.

I now give the Chair, if I may, these names.

Senator TYDINGS. These are the keys?

Senator MCCARTHY. Those are the 25 names that have had information in their files, information which indicates they should not be there.

Senator TYDINGS. I am very hopeful that we can get our staff under way some time during the week, and I would like to consult the Senator as to his convenience when he will give us in executive session, as he said he would, the names of the 81 people, some of whom he has since given us in public, but all of the 81 cases that he delineated on the Senate floor, so that we may key the names to the information which the Senator has given us, and when we request the files, make sure that we are requesting them for all the people that he has mentioned in his testimony.

I would like to say to the Senator that it would be very helpful to the committee if we could get all of the names at one time, for this reason: I would like to make the request in writing, confidentially of course, to the proper authorities for all of these files at one time, and provide a safe place, arranged as they come from different departments, where they can all be assembled in one room, so that if the Civil Service files or State Department or any other files are needed, we will have them all in one place, where we can make a thorough and complete investigation of a case without having to go from one department to another, and I am sure the Senator will want it done that way.

Senator McCARTHY. I think it is an excellent idea.

Senator TYDINGS. But unless we have all of the files in one room at the start, it will take us much longer than we need to do it. So I will ask the Senator, as I said, at his convenience, in executive session, today if he would like to, or tomorrow, if he will not give us the keys so that we can turn them over to counsel and our staff and begin the operation of assembling these files.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say to the Chair that as soon as I have all the information assembled which I have—I think I have considerable information of benefit to your staff.

Senator TYDINGS. We would like to have it.

Senator McCARTHY. It will all be turned over with the names. I have given you the names of 25 that I consider very important, 25 that I have not been able to develop beyond the point of knowing that the files are valuable. The files show that the FBI has given information which, so far as I know, makes them bad security risks under Acheson's own yardstick. The staff will have plenty to do on those 25 and will have no difficulty at all, I am sure, in transmitting to the staff information which I have. I am sure we will get along on that very well.

I might say that before I turn over the Senate floor cases I want to check all of the information, document it, and give it to you. There seems to be a great deal of interest, and rightly so, on the part of people as to just the extent of the information we have on those particular cases.

Senator TYDINGS. I would say to the Senator that during the course of this proceeding if he will come to me with any additional matter that he has not given to us at the start, we will be glad to have it.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding about it, I would appreciate it if the Senator would hand it personally to me until such time as I can designate somebody else to hand it to in the event that I am not available at the moment.

As I understand it, the Senator has now placed his case before us, and he wants us to go ahead and investigate these loyalty files and so on.

Senator McCARTHY. You understand that I have a sizable number of additional cases to lay before the Senator, work that will take, I assume, 2 or 3 or 4 days. Whether the Chair will want it in executive session or in public I frankly do not care.

Senator TYDINGS. How does the Senator want to do it?

Senator McCARTHY. I think, Mr. Chairman, when we refer to men like John Service, Owen Lattimore, individuals of top importance, I believe any facts which we have with regard to them definitely should be made public. I think those morals cases, which also are extremely bad security risks, obviously should be made in executive session. Then there is an area in between which I frankly don't care whether they are made in public or executive session.

I might say this, outside of the top men, like Hanson, who is taking over this point 4 program, Lattimore, and several other names that I think should be given in public, I think the names better be given in executive session, now that you have a staff to check on them. That is merely my suggestion.

I might say to the Chair I would like to see the Chair follow through his suggestion this afternoon. I can give him information which I think—

Senator TYDINGS. I am going to ask the Senator if he won't hold that information until tomorrow, because I have no place to keep it. I prefer to have the Senator keep it until tomorrow, until I can make some definite arrangements for quarters and one or two other things, protecting the information we get and so on.

What I would like to know is, does the Senator want us to go ahead now, or does he want us to sit to hear more things?

Senator MCCARTHY. I will have considerable more, Mr. Chairman, but I would like some time to develop the cases so I can present them in chronological order, with all the information I have. That will take me time.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not questioning it. I am just trying to find out to accommodate the Senator. When does he think he will want to have this stuff available, and how does he want to deliver it to us? Does he want to do it in a session such as we are in now, or does he want to hand it to the committee for investigation? There are five of us on the committee. Whatever way the Senator wants to do it, we will try to accommodate him. We will leave that up to his judgment.

Senator MCCARTHY. I thank the Chair, and as I get the other cases in shape I will contact the Chair, and I am sure we can work out something completely satisfactory to both the committee and myself as to how the further facts will be presented.

Senator TYDINGS. In order to make the record straight, I put in the record the first day, cut out, the case numbers from 1 to 81, I think it was, and put those in the record so that we would have that already as a part of the testimony, and I take it for granted the Senator wants that made a part of his sworn testimony.

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not mind having it made part of the record. If the chairman wants me to repeat any of it under oath, I will be glad to do so.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not want you to repeat it. I want to know what category it is in. I want to know whether you desire it to be part of your sworn testimony. We can put it in as a part of the Congressional Record, or we can put it in as part of his sworn testimony. Which would he prefer?

Senator MCCARTHY. I do not follow the chairman. The chairman has put the evidence in the record. That is the committee's testimony. If I see fit to put any testimony in, I will put it in. Do you follow me?

Senator TYDINGS. What I meant was, the Senator gave us 81 cases on the floor of the Senate. I am not trying to take any advantage of the Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. The Senator would have difficulty doing that.

Senator TYDINGS. I believe I would, and I would not do it if I could. I would like the Senator to believe that. I want him to have a fair chance here in every sense of the word.

Senator McCARTHY. I am sure the Chair does.

Senator TYDINGS. He delineated 81 cases on the floor of the Senate, which I have put in the record. I see no reason why they should not be a part of the Senator's sworn testimony, that he is bringing those cases before the committee.

Senator McCARTHY. The only way you can make those part of the sworn testimony, Mr. Chairman, is to ask me to repeat them. You cannot make an oath retroactive. I do not follow the Chair at all, and I assume the Chair is not a lawyer. There is no way of making an oath retroactive. If the Chair wants me to repeat what I said on the Senate floor, under oath, I will be glad to come in and do that. There is no possible way the Chair can put things in the record and say "Now will you consider that as part of your testimony under oath?"

Let's make this clear. If the Chair wants me to come back here at any time and repeat any part or all of what I said on the Senate floor, and do it under oath, I will be glad to do it. I am not going to try to indulge in some completely impossible and ridiculous procedure of trying to make an oath retroactive.

Senator TYDINGS. I have no disposition to make it retroactive. What I thought was, the Senator has testified under oath. He has also delineated certain cases on the Senate floor. I simply wanted to ask him if the remarks he made on the Senate floor, and which are now a part of the record, he wishes included in his sworn testimony, or whether he wishes them not included in the sworn testimony. That is all I asked the Senator.

Senator McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, regardless of what my wishes are, the only way I can make them part of the sworn testimony is to swear to them, either in affidavit form or repeat them. If the Chair desires them put in affidavit form, if he wants me to repeat them, I will be glad to take that up with him. Otherwise, the Chair has introduced them.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, if the Senator does not want to make them part of his sworn testimony.

Senator McCARTHY. I will make it part of my sworn testimony if the Chair wants me to come in and repeat it. There is no way of making an oath retroactive.

Senator TYDINGS. Certainly there is. All he needs to say is "All the things I gave in these cases on the Senate floor I would like considered a part of my sworn testimony." It is just as simple as that. There is no trick about that.

Senator McCARTHY. I am telling the Chair it can't be done, but if he wants me to come in and read that part of the Congressional Record under oath, I will be glad to do that at any time, this afternoon.

Senator TYDINGS. I was asked by some committee members to ask that question of the Senator, and I have discharged my obligation to them.

Whenever the Senator wants to return to the stand, all he has to do is to tell the chairman.

Senator McCarthy. I thank the chairman very much.

Senator Tydings. I would like to ask if Judge Dorothy Kenyon is in the room? I don't know her. She may have some friends in the room. We are counting on hearing her at 2:30 this afternoon unless when I get to my office I find she has requested a postponement to another day. So far I have received no such message, so unless that is received, we will proceed, as scheduled yesterday, at 2:30, to hear Judge Kenyon.

(Whereupon, at 12:20 p. m., a recess was taken until 2:30 p. m. of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Senator Tydings. The committee will come to order.

For the record, the day that Senator McCarthy testified, bringing in the name of Miss, or Judge Dorothy Kenyon, I received a telegram, either that day or the following morning, I think that night, in which Miss Kenyon asked me to accord her the privilege of a hearing.

I immediately replied and told her that I would be glad to set Tuesday, today, as the time when she might come before this committee and answer any remarks or charges which Senator McCarthy had made, and asked her was that satisfactory.

I immediately received another telegram from Judge Kenyon in which she said Tuesday would be satisfactory, and she is here in response to those telegrams.

So that Judge Kenyon may know what the powers of this committee are, and what its duty is, and I think we owe it to her, she may not have seen the formal resolution which brought us into being, I would like to read it before she testifies.

This is Senate Resolution 231. It was agreed to on February 22, 1950. The resolution reads as follows:

That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable, and if said recommendations are to include formal charges of disloyalty against any individual, then the committee, before making said recommendations, shall give said individual open hearings for the purpose of taking evidence or testimony on said charges. In the conduct of this study and investigation, the committee is directed to procure, by subpoena, and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of all the Government employees in the Department of State and such other agencies against whom charges have been heard.

Senator McCarthy, on the first day he appeared before our committee in open hearing, made certain statements, Judge Kenyon, in which your name was drawn.

You are now at liberty to proceed to answer them in such manner as you deem fit.

Before you testify, will you stand and raise your right hand.

Do you solemnly promise that the testimony you shall give in this matter pending before the committee, in accordance with Senate Resolution 231, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Miss KENYON. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, Judge. You may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF MISS DOROTHY KENYON, ACCOMPANIED BY THEODORE KIENDL, COUNSEL

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for giving me this opportunity to appear.

My name is Dorothy Kenyon. I live at No. 483 West Twenty-first Street, New York City. I am a practicing lawyer with offices located at No. 50 Broadway, New York City.

When I was informed of the accusations that were made against me before this subcommittee last week, I did explode. Doubtless my indignation led me to make some impulsive remarks in unparliamentary language. Reflection, and a recollection refreshed by such investigation as I could make in the interim, now permits a more dispassionate approach. However, nothing can diminish the deep resentment I feel that such outrageous charges should be publicized before this subcommittee and broadcast over the entire Nation without any notice or warning to me.

My answer to these charges is short, simple, and direct. I am not, and never have been disloyal. I am not and never have been, a Communist. I am not, and never have been a fellow traveler. I am not, and never have been, a supporter of, a member of, or a sympathizer with any organization known to me to be, or suspected by me of being, controlled or dominated by Communists. As emphatically and unreservedly as possible, I deny any connection of any kind or character with communism or its adherents. If this leaves anything unsaid to indicate my total and complete detestation of that political philosophy, it is only because it is impossible for me to express my sentiments. I mean my denial to be all-inclusive.

So absolute a negation of the charges should be supplemented with an equally positive, but brief, affirmation of what I am and have been.

I received my A. B. degree from Smith College and my law degree—doctor juris—from New York University Law School. I am a member of Phi Beta Kappa and have been for several years a senator of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa.

I come of a family of lawyers, my father having been a patent lawyer in New York City where my brothers and a cousin now practice under the firm name of Kenyon & Kenyon. My father's cousin, William S. Kenyon, was for many years a member of the United States Senate and later a Federal judge in Iowa.

I was admitted to the bar in 1917 and have practiced law continually ever since, except during certain periods when I held public office. Mine is a general practice. I am a member of the Bar Association of the City of New York, the New York County Lawyers' Association, the New York State Bar Association, the American Bar Association, the National Women Lawyers' Association, the American Society of International Law, the American Branch of the International Law Association and several others.

I have held public office three times, first from June 1, 1936, to December 31, 1937, 2 years, as deputy commissioner of licenses by appointment of Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia; second from January 1, 1939, to December 31, 1939, 1 year, as municipal court judge in New York City, also by appointment of Mayor LaGuardia; and third, from January 1, 1947, to December 31, 1949, as United States delegate to the Commission on the Status of Women of the United Nations, by appointment of President Truman, ratified and confirmed by the Senate. I was also appointed in January 1938 by the League of Nations as one of a Commission of seven jurists—of whom I was the only American—to study the legal status of women throughout the world. This Commission continued to operate until the war made further communication between its members impossible. I have also served on a number of governmentally appointed commissions and committees dealing with such varied subjects as the regulation of employment agencies, minimum-wage legislation, consumer-cooperative corporations, problems growing out of the wartime employment of women, et cetera. I have also done a small amount of labor arbitration.

My interest in good government led me early into the ranks of the League of Women Voters, of which I have been a member for almost 30 years and which I have served in many capacities and offices. It also led me into the Citizens Union of New York, of whose executive committee I have been a member for almost 20 years. When the American Labor Party was formed in New York I was one of its earliest members, but I left it after our efforts to save it from Communist domination finally failed.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, an exhibit, copies of which I am giving to all the members of the subcommittee; it is dated, the Daily News, Wednesday, February 14, 1940. It is announcing the setting up of a committee to fight the Communist attempt to capture the Labor Party, and I was one of the vice presidents of that organization.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you pause until we can look at the exhibit?

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want to read it in, yourself?

Miss KENYON. No, no, I have read everything, Mr. Chairman, that is of importance; and I am leaving the whole statement with the exhibits attached. I have a number of other exhibits.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Miss Kenyon, would you be kind enough to identify for us, this document again, and to tell us in a brief way, for the information of the press, who may not have copies of it, and who want to know—briefly what is it all about?

Miss KENYON. Yes. It is a statement that appeared in the Daily News, a New York newspaper, on Wednesday, February 14, 1940, announcing the setting up of a liberal and labor committee to safeguard the American Labor Party and to fight the Communists' attempt to capture that labor party, and my name is there listed as one of the vice chairmen.

I am simply offering that as documentary evidence.

Senator TYDINGS. I think that identification is sufficient. It will be accepted as exhibit 49.

I will say to the press: I will leave a copy here on the table, as we have some extra ones, and should you gentlemen wish to familiarize yourselves with this to a greater extent, go ahead.

All right, Judge Kenyon, proceed.

Miss KENYON. I am now an enrolled Democrat. I am also a member of Americans for Democratic Action.

My interest in civil liberties led me equally early into the ranks of the American Civil Liberties Union, of which I have been a member of the board for almost 20 years. In that connection I have fought on many civil liberties issues and have participated in many briefs amicus in defense of the bill of rights.

My interest in education, in labor problems, and in the problems of women made me an early member of the American Association of University Women, of which I am now second vice president. I am also a member of the national board of the Young Women's Catholic Association, a director of the Women's City Club of New York, the Association for the Aid of Crippled Children, and the Committee of Women in World Affairs. I was also for many years on the board of the Consumers' League of New York and was for a time its president. I am also a member of numerous other women's organizations.

I am, and always have been, an independent, liberal Rooseveltian Democrat, devoted to and actively working for such causes as the improvement of the living and working conditions of labor and the preservation of civil liberties. To the latter cause especially I have given much time and attention and have made speeches on that subject for many years in various parts of the country. At times I have espoused unpopular causes in that connection and have probably made some enemies of those who disagreed with my views.

I am, and always have been, an ardent, outspoken American citizen, yielding to no one in my admiration of the great privileges this country offers to all its sons and daughters, and determined to do all I can to maintain those privileges inviolate forever. I am, and always have been, unalterably opposed to anyone who advocates the overthrow of our Government by force or violence, or who otherwise engages in subversive activities or entertains subversive ideas.

I am not content to rely on these general denials and observations, however, and I therefore proceed to deal more specifically with the charges against me. In substance, as I understand it, it is claimed that it can be established by documentary proof that I have been at some time a member of 28 or more Communist-front organizations and therefore stand convicted under the doctrine of guilt by association.

Thus far I have not been confronted with this documentary proof and as I am totally unaware of the contents of most of the documents, I am in no position to make any categorical denials or assertions regarding such statements as they may contain. Here and now, however, I can and do state, with the absolute confidence borne of my personal and positive knowledge, that there does not exist and never has existed any genuine document that proves, or even tends to prove, that I have ever knowingly joined or sponsored or participated in the activities of any organization known to me to be even slightly subversive.

Frankness and caution admonish me to avoid creating false impressions or otherwise putting myself in the position of the lady who protested too much. I cannot and do not deny that my name may have been used, even at times with my consent, in connection with organizations that later proved to be subversive but which, at the time, seemed to be engaged in activities or dedicated to objectives which I could and did approve. Nevertheless I challenge and defy anyone to prove that I ever joined, or sponsored, or continued to identify myself with any organizations or individuals I knew, or had reason to believe, were subversive.

I do not even know the names of all the 28 or more Communist-front organizations I am supposed to have joined. I have taken the list of organizations from the published reports in the press. The names may not be quite accurate, and the list is apparently incomplete, or else my arithmetic is wrong. It is impossible for me to identify some of the names and events described in those charges. I have done the best I could, however, in the brief time since hearing of them and have searched my files, and my own memory in respect to each one. If any further organizations are alluded to today I shall ask the committee's indulgence for time to investigate and make my replies thereon at a later date.

Senator TYDINGS. That will be granted.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much.

First, let me deny acquaintance with practically every one of the persons mentioned in the charges as being "familiar company" to me, "collaborator," or "fellow red." I do not know and have never to my knowledge laid eyes on Bernard J. Stern, Albert Maltz, Anna Louise Strong, William Gropper, Langston Hughes, Hewlett Johnson, Ben Gold, Lee Pressmen, Whittaker Chambers, Howard Fast, Saul Mills, Ella Winter, John Howard Lawson, Henry H. Collins, Rockwell Kent, Lewis Merrill, Mervyn Rathborne, Dirk J. Struick, Harry Bridges, Paul P. Crosbie, Benjamin J. Davis, Charles Krumbein, Morris V. Schappes, Simon W. Gerson, Louis Weinstock, Irving Potash, Helen Selden, or Josephine Herbst.

I once heard Paul Robeson sing at a concert. Harry F. Ward was, in the thirties—before its Communist purge—chairman of the board of the American Civil Liberties Union and I of course knew him there. Corliss Lamont is still on its board. I met Carol King years ago, before she went "left," but I have seen hardly anything of her in many years. Arthur Kallet's name I vaguely remember, as I vaguely remember Consumer's Union, but he and it date back in my memory at least 15 years and, if he were a Communist then, I did not know it.

I may be pardoned for putting the other names mentioned in a different category. They are Mrs. Dean Acheson, Stanley Isaacs, Philip Jessup, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. I am proud to say I have had a slight acquaintance with them all.

To repeat, the rest are unknown to me, except as above mentioned, and the innuendoes as to my relationship with them absolutely false.

Now for the organizations themselves.

I begin with the League of Women Shoppers because my connection with that organization, which was set up to investigate labor disputes, is ancient history and it was also very short lived. Evelyn Preston Baldwin, wife of Roger Baldwin, and a close friend of mine, became its president at its founding in 1935 or thereabouts. I was a sponsor. We both withdrew a year or so later. I remember that I did so because I did not approve the way the investigations were being handled. If it was Communist then, neither of us knew about it.

The Political Prisoners' Bail Fund Committee is also ancient history.

I have no documentation on this organization in my files but I remember that I served as sponsor for a short time at the request of Roger Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin, who was a trustee of the fund, tells me that he and others set it up about 1925, to write bail in a great variety of worthy cases, some may possibly have involved Communists but most of them definitely did not. It was liquidated, he tells me, about 1934. He regarded it as wholly nonpartisan and non-Communist. It is significant that it is apparently not on any subversive list. It is described in the charges merely as subsidiary to the International Labor Defense, which is on the subversive list. The connection between them is not stated.

The Consumer's Union is also ancient history. I have never represented Consumer's Union. I had acted as attorney for Consumer's Research in its incorporation and for several years thereafter, prior to 1935, but I never acted for Consumer's Union. Consumer's Union came into existence, as I recall it, following a strike and split-up of the business into two organizations. They both test merchandise and give advice as to good buys. This is where I had my short acquaintance with Arthur Kallet. He was with Consumer's Research and, later, with Consumer's Union.

The Conference on Pan-American Democracy comes next. I find a letterhead in my file listing me as a sponsor of this organization, dated March 4, 1939, along with now Senator Paul A. Douglas, John Haynes Holmes, Quincy Howe, Stanley Isaacs, and Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, all friends of mine. I remember almost nothing about this organization except that I think I may have spoken before it in 1938 or thereabouts. I have never heard of it since. I certainly had no idea at that time that it was Communist, and I am sure my other sponsor friends had no such idea either.

Now for the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship. I was never a member of this organization, but I became a sponsor of it—along with many distinguished people—at the height of the war effort—in 1943, I think it was—when the Russians were making their stand before Stalingrad and many of us believed that friendship with the people of Russia was both possible and good. I withdrew my sponsorship some 3 years later, when I had become convinced that the organization was no longer being used for the purposes stated in its title. Not long ago a friend told me that my name had not been removed from the sponsor's list as I had requested, and I wrote demanding its removal. I quote that letter:

GENTLEMEN: I am advised that you are still carrying my name on your letterhead as a sponsor of your organization.

I became a sponsor in 1943 or 1944 when the Germans were at the gates of Stalingrad and the United States was deep in admiration of the great courage of the Russian people. Anything which looked toward genuine friendship between the peoples of our two countries was highly desirable. Since then, however, your policy, as I have had occasion to observe it in the press, has had less and less to do with development of genuine friendship between the peoples of our two countries and more and more to do with mere apologetics for the Russian Government, which you have supported no less consistently than you have attacked the United States. This is no way to build friendship and it makes a mockery of your name and alleged purposes. My sponsorship of the council as a genuine organ of friendship between the peoples has therefore long since lapsed.

I have previously requested you to remove my name from your list of sponsors and I must now insist that you do so.

Sincerely yours.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I wonder what the date of this letter is.

Miss KENYON. I have it here.

Senator TYDINGS. June 15, 1949.

Miss KENYON. I assume that my name has been removed by now, although I have no way of being sure. I have no apologies whatever for sponsoring this organization at the time I did and under those circumstances.

As indicative of the standing it had, it is significant that President Roosevelt himself sent a message of greeting to the council at its meeting on November 16, 1944, reading as follows:

I am grateful to you and all those who are celebrating American-Soviet Friendship Day for the words of support and confidence I have received. There is no better tribute we can hold out to our Allies than to continue working in ever-growing accord to establish a peace that will endure. The Dumbarton Oaks Conference was a step in this direction. Other steps will be taken. In line with this objective such meetings as you are holding in Madison Square Garden and in other great centers throughout the United States are of tremendous assistance and value.

It is also significant that President Truman followed it up by another greeting on November 14, 1945, reading as follows:

The President has asked me to extend to you every good wish for the success of the meeting and to assure you of his interest in all efforts to continue the good relations between this country and the Soviet Union.

As for the Red Dean of Canterbury, I certainly never welcomed him at Madison Square Garden or anywhere else.

I never met him. I surmise that the fact that my name remained on the sponsor list longer than it should have is the explanation of this incident.

I have no recollection of sponsoring the dinner in question but, since it was given in honor of President Roosevelt, it would not seem inappropriate had I done so.

American Lawyers' Committee on American Relations with Spain: Now for the group connected with Spain. This committee was apparently working early in 1939 to lift the embargo on Spain, which was defeated by the combined efforts of revolutionary forces within that country plus Hitler and Mussolini. This organization is not on any subversive list that I can find, and I was on it.

Washington Committee To Lift the Spanish Embargo: As for the Washington committee I can find nothing on this in my files and I have no recollection whatsoever.

The Abraham Lincoln Brigade probably belongs in here too. I have no recollection or documentation for this whatever. Furthermore, if the petition which they say I signed really contained a charge that war hysteria was being whipped up by the Roosevelt administration, it is inconceivable that I could have signed it, since I myself was then passionately pro-ally and in process of trying to force our Government into greater and greater activity in their behalf rather than less. I refer to that matter later.

American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom: I have no recollection or documentation in respect to signing a petition in my files. I do have correspondence, however, showing that in 1940 I accepted membership on a citizens' committee to promote free public education. The letterhead lists many distinguished college presidents and professors, including Miss Park, the former president of Bryn Mawr, and Prof. Harold Urey. This organization is not on the Attorney General's list.

Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights: I can find nothing on this in my files, and I have no recollection of it, but I find a press clipping reporting a meeting held in New York February 15, 1940, at which Newbold Morris and Mary Woolley, former president of Mount Holyoke College, were listed as speakers.

Advisory Board of Film Audiences for Democracy, and Advisory Board of Films for Democracy: I can find nothing on either of these organizations in my files, and there is nothing in my memory. I may possibly have made a speech before them. Neither of them are on any subversive list that I can find.

Schappes Defense Committee; Daily Worker Letter on Simon W. Gerson; American Committee for Anti-Nazi Literature; Advisory Committee of the Citizens' Committee To Aid Striking Seamen; and Milk Consumers' Protective Committee: I can find nothing on any of these matters in my files and have no memory of them except a vague recollection of the Gerson and Schappes controversies. If I participated in either of them in any way I have completely forgotten it and I am certain that I never approved or endorsed Communist activities in those or any other matters.

Congress of American Women: This is one organization I know something about. It is the American affiliate of the Women's International Democratic Federation, a wholly Moscow controlled body over which I have been battling with Mme. Popova of the USSR at the United Nations for all the years since the creation of the Commission on the Status of Women. To charge me with membership in this organization is nothing short of fantastic.

This completes the roster of specific charges.

One general charge remains, my "constant adherence to the * * * party line," as evidenced by this alleged multiplicity of associations, actually boiled down to a handful and most of them before 1940. Well, how about it? Is this all I have done? Is this the whole of my life? Emphatically, no. I have done many other things, some of them strangely inconsistent with the party line, some of them in flat contradiction to it. Let's look at the record in the round and not just a distorted fragment.

In the early years of my life I knew very little and cared less about Communists. They were an utterly negligible factor in my life. During the thirties, however, as world tension increased, they began showing their hand, and by the end of that period, I, like others, had come to know and loathe their philosophy. The signing of the Hitler-Stalin pact in October 1939 suddenly made the issues startlingly clear. I voiced those issues in a letter I wrote to Alex Rose, secretary of the American Labor Party, under date of October 10, 1939, as a statement for him to use in conjunction with my candidacy as judge of the municipal court:

Senator TYDINGS. One minute, Judge Kenyon, please.

Miss KENYON. May I proceed, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. Just a second, please.

Miss KENYON. There are three particularly important paragraphs.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want to put the whole thing in the record?

Miss KENYON. Yes; but I would like to read now the significant paragraphs.

Senator TYDINGS. Go right ahead. This will be exhibit 50.

Miss KENYON (reading):

First, I regard with horror and loathing the Hitler-Stalin pact.

Second, I agree with you that any fusing of the brown and red dictatorships is a treacherous blow to world civilization.

Third, I also agree, insofar as I understand them, with the President's proposed changes in our present neutrality law. But frankly I have been far too busy lately trying to be as good a judge as possible to have given such legislation the careful study it requires.

Fourth, it is not easy for me to be neutral when I think of either Hitler or Stalin but I try not to lose my head and I continue to believe in the traditional American civil liberties. Above all I hope that we may keep at peace and still preserve American democracy.

Fifth, it goes without saying (or I should have thought it did) that I am not a Communist or anything even remotely resembling one. I am just an old-fashioned believer in democracy who gets awfully weary sometimes of all its ructions but would never, never give it up.

Senator TYDINGS. That is dated October 10, 1939?

Miss KENYON. Yes; that is right.

Events moved so quickly after that, by February 1940, we had been forced to form a liberal and labor committee, of which I was a member, vice president, to safeguard the American Labor Party and to fight the Communist attempt to capture it.

I have already presented you with that document, Mr. Chairman.

At the same time the American Civil Liberties Union found it necessary to purge from its own board all nonbelievers in civil liberties. This action barred from its governing councils anyone "who is a member of any political organization which supports totalitarian dictatorship in any country, or who by his public declarations indicates his support of such a principle." Within this category we include organizations in the United States supporting the totalitarian governments of the Soviet Union and of the Fascist and Nazi countries—such as the Communist Party and the German-American Bund and others; as well as native organizations with obvious antidemocratic objectives and practises. Needless to say, I was not one of those purged, and I am still a member of that board.

The Communist party line in 1940-41 was antiwar, anti-French and anti-British. But that was not my line. Being, on the contrary, passionately pro-French and pro-British I became increasingly anxious to aid them as the months passed by, first by all means short of war and later by war itself if need be.

I was one of the original members of the so-called William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. William Allen White in a telegram invited me to join, saying:

Here is a life and death struggle for every principle we cherish in America, for freedom of speech, of religion, of the ballot, and of every freedom that upholds the dignity of the human spirit. Here all the rights that the common man has fought for during a thousand years are menaced. Terrible as it may seem, the people of our country cannot avoid the consequences of Hitler's victory or of those who are or may be allied with him. A totalitarian victory would wipe out hope for a just and lasting peace.

I submit a copy of the complete telegram of William Allen White.

Senator TYDINGS. And the date of that is June 19, 1940?

Miss KENYON. June 19, 1940.

I think the telegram was sent a bit before that, but that was after the committee was organized.

I favored giving Great Britain overage destroyers, I favored lend-lease, selective service, et cetera, et cetera. I made many speeches during that period extolling freedom, urging aid to the Allies and criticizing the isolationists and the Communists alike for their opposition.

On May 26, 1941—a month before Hitler attacked Russia—I joined with other members of that committee in an open letter to the President of the United States, in effect inviting him to declare war on the dictators. It read in part:

We cannot close our eyes to the wholesale murder of liberty * * * The dictators have extended their world war and world revolution from continent to continent * * * The challenge is inescapable. We know that strong action, even armed action, will be required of us.

This was signed, among many others, by Mrs. J. Borden Harriman and Ambassador Lewis W. Douglas.

I am attaching a photostat of that letter.

Shall I proceed, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. You may proceed. That will be exhibit 51.

Miss KENYON. All right, thank you.

This history of my efforts during the crucial years 1940-41 hardly needs any gloss but it should give pause to those who dare to call me a Communist.

After Russia had been attacked we all changed our viewpoint slightly and many of us made earnest efforts to be friends with our new allies. I do not apologize for that impulse or effort. I think it was right and good.

However, we failed. When the war ended the cold war began and it is intensifying. I have been in the thick of it. Confronted with Madame Popova of the U. S. S. R. at the United Nations I have had a fight on my hands from the outset. At the first meeting of our Commission on the Status of Women held in February 1947, she sought preferential treatment for her particular pet organization, the Women's International Democratic Federation—of which the Congress of American Women is the United States affiliate. I battled her on eight different occasions during that first meeting on that one issue alone, practically single-handed since most of the other delegates did not yet know what it was all about. They know now, however. The reports and summary records of the Commission's proceedings tell the tale.

The struggle went on at subsequent commission meetings. It reached its peak at Beirut, Lebanon, last spring—see New York Times clipping of March 26, 1949, which I have here to present to you.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want to put that in the record at this point?

Miss KENYON. We only have the one copy.

Senator TYDINGS. Put that in the record at this point, if you have the original copy.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator McMAHON. Are you mentioned in that clipping?

Miss KENYON. Certainly. Madame Popova and I are it.

Senator TYDINGS. Just hold up for a moment, please.

Senator GREEN. I request that it be put in.

Senator TYDINGS. It has been requested, Judge Kenyon, if you do not mind, if you identify the article by the paper in which it appeared, and the date under which it appeared, and read the article into the record.

Miss KENYON. You want me to read it now?

Senator TYDINGS. If you please.

Miss KENYON. There are two of them.

Senator TYDINGS. Two?

Miss KENYON. One is dated March 26, 1949, and the other is dated December 16, 1948.

Shall I read the first one first?

Senator TYDINGS. I think it would be wiser if you were to read the first one first.

Do you have a copy of the first one?

Miss KENYON. I have, but not of the second one.

This, Mr. Chairman, appeared in the New York Times under date of Thursday, December 16, 1948, and this is a speech I made in New York City.

The headline says: "Dorothy Kenyon says women's equality with men in Russia is one of slavery."

"Women in Russia undoubtedly have more equality in a greater variety of jobs than do American women, but it is an equality of slavery," Dorothy Kenyon, United States delegate to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women, declared here yesterday.

At a luncheon of the Women's City Club of New York at the New Weston Hotel, Miss Kenyon charged that statements by Prof. A. P. Pavlov and other Soviet Union delegates at recent United Nations sessions that women in the United States and Great Britain were living in slavery were for political consumption abroad. She said non-Russian delegates were placed on the defensive, and she intended to take the offensive at the next commission meeting.

"The Russians have made a lot of noise about equality, but I wonder whether women there are any more in the driver's seat than they are in this country," she said. "I have never been able to discover any Soviet woman, except for Alexandra Kollontay, for many years their Minister to Sweden, in a position of real power."

Pointing out there never had been a woman member of the Politburo and that there was now none either on the central committee of the Communist Party, she said the Russians made much propaganda of the fact that 21 percent of the Supreme Soviet is made up of women. But she contended that this was of no significance, as the body sits only a few days a year for unanimous approval of Government proposals. In newspaper pictures of Moscow celebrations, she declared, "there are not even women used as window-dressing."

Although she said the United States should place more women in the Cabinet and have more Representatives in Congress, Miss Kenyon pointed out that at least here they were not prevented from running for office. But in Russia, she declared, "not one of our Russian sisters has run for election as we know it," but are merely handpicked if the Communist Party chooses them to run.

"If women are to achieve recognition as equal citizens the world over, we had better admit our difficulties and team up to help each other meet them," she declared. "Paper participation in government is too flimsy a foundation to advance the principles of democracy or of women's rights."

Shall I read the next one now, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. What is the committee's pleasure?

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes, read the next one.

Miss KENYON. This is a little long.

It was before I went to Lebanon.

Senator TYDINGS. Identify the article, please.

Miss KENYON. This appeared in the New York Times under date of Saturday, March 26, 1949.

The headlines are "United States, Soviet women clash on rights of wives of foreigners under Russian restrictions."

Then, it says:

BEIRUT, LEBANON, March 25.—A long and bitter attack on the United States by Soviet delegate Elizaveta A. Popova was strongly opposed here today by other delegates of the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women. These delegates included Judge Dorothy Kenyon of the United States who pleaded that the commission be permitted to get on with its work.

The Soviet representative's criticism of alleged racial discrimination and other faults of United States society followed Judge Kenyon's presentation of a proposal for the convention to guarantee women's freedom to choose their nationality. The aim of the proposal is to adjust the tangle of legislation that endangers women's status through international marriage, she said.

Judge Kenyon again brought into the foreground the reason for the Soviet opposition, which had caused a crisis previously in the commission's transactions—the Russian refusal to permit Soviet citizens married to foreigners to reside abroad with their husbands.

Describing this policy as an outrageous limitation on the rights of women, Judge Kenyon said that in addition to the Russian wives of British subjects there were now 350 Russian wives of United States citizens who could not leave Russia with their husbands and 65 Russian husbands of American girls who were equally restricted.

The principal business of the present meeting has been to lay the ground-work for a convention and the implementation of treaties to disentangle the maze of conflicting regulations of various countries on the subject of a woman's nationality after marriage to a man of another nationality.

The United Nations Secretariat has prepared elaborate studies of the law and treaties. However, the Soviet delegate rejected the whole project before discussion of any data had begun. She said:

"This is not a matter for the Commission on the Status of Women to study. Our problem is discrimination against women. Why was this problem brought to our attention at all?"

She then charged discrimination in the United States and gave no further attention to the nationality issue. She said that 15 States of the United States prohibited mixed marriages between Negroes and whites, that 5 prohibited marriages with Malays and 5 with Indians, and demanded to know where the principle of women's freedom of choice existed in the United States.

She added that in some States officials were punished for issuing licenses for mixed marriages and that in Mississippi any propaganda for mixed marriages or even equality was prohibited.

Judge Kenyon indicated that only recognition of a woman's right to choose her own nationality as freely as man would be the solution. This view was opposed later by a spokesman for the Catholic Feminine League who pleaded for the principle of unity of the family. She said that a man and a woman were not equal in all things, though equal in dignity, and that they had different functions in society.

The commission adopted a resolution calling for investigation by the United Nations of the application to women throughout the world of penal and police procedure. This is expected to be opposed by Russia since it would involve an investigation of penal labor camps.

That is the conclusion of that, Mr. Chairman.

May I proceed?

Senator TYDINGS. You may proceed.

Miss KENYON. The culmination of it was when, after bitter debate over many things, including equal pay for equal work, I finally demanded of Mme. Popova whether women received equal pay for equal work in the Soviet slave labor camps.

The issue was always slavery versus freedom. I raised the point over and over again in writing, speeches, at meetings, even over the Voice of America.

Eventually Moscow answered back. Maria Sharikova, assistant chairman of the Moscow Soviet on the rights of women is reported on January 5, 1949, to have said:

Dorothy Kenyon, in endeavoring to conceal her reactionary stand has engaged in slandering the Soviet people, in particular Soviet women. In a radio broadcast over the Voice of America, she talks a lot of irresponsible drivel attempting to deny the political, economic, and social equality enjoyed by the women of the U. S. S. R., at the same time painting a glowing picture of the position of women in Britain and the United States, when she knows full well what their position really is. "I am shocked at this shameful downright lie, completely unsupported by the thinnest fact." As it happens, Dorothy Kenyon could not quote facts for that would at once disprove her assertions.

Dorothy Kenyon had engaged in slandering the "freest women on earth, the women of the U. S. S. R." However, as any of the thousands of visitors to the U. S. S. R. can witness, "the slander indulged in by Dorothy Kenyon can hood-wink no one."

Mr. Chairman, I offer that entire gem in evidence as exhibit 52. That is a State Department release quoting that release from Moscow in toto.

This is my defense. What does it add up to? With all the mistakes and errors of judgment which the best of us can and do commit only too frequently, I submit that the record proves without question that I am a lover of democracy, of individual freedom and of human rights for everybody, a battler, perhaps a little bit too much of a battler sometimes, for the rights of the little fellow, the under dog, the fellow who gets forgotten or frightened or shunned because of unpopular views; but who is a human being just the same and entitled to be treated like one. The converse of these things; dictatorship, cruelty, oppression, and slavery are to me intolerable. I cannot live in their air, I must fight back. This is not perhaps a very wise or prudent way to live but it is my way. It has got me into hot water before and probably will again. But my faith in people and my impulse to fight for them is my religion and it is the light by which I live. I also believe that it is America. There is not a Communist bone in my body.

This is a matter of grave consequence to me. Literally overnight, whatever personal and professional reputation and standing I may have acquired after many years in private practice and some in public office, they have been seriously jeopardized, if not destroyed by the widespread dissemination of charges of Communistic leanings or proclivities that are utterly false. The truth may never catch up with the lie, but insofar as I can, I desire to regain as much of what I have lost as possible and I have faith that this subcommittee will see that justice is done. Of course, I am more than willing to attempt to answer any questions the members of this subcommittee, or anyone permitted by the subcommittee, may care to ask. I conclude with an expression of my appreciation of the opportunity and privilege afforded me so promptly, to answer these charges at this public hearing.

Senator TRINOS. I will ask our guests, no matter what the testimony may be, whether it pleases them or displeases them, to kindly refrain from any applause or any other demonstration, because if we permit it in one case, we will have to permit it in another, and we are trying to conduct a very careful investigation and we would appreciate if those who come, no matter what your impulses may be, would not give us any demonstration.

Senator Hickenlooper, would you like to ask the witness any questions?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would like to canvass the situation a little bit with Judge Kenyon.

I want to say, at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I told the committee that while I thought it was perfectly proper to have Judge Kenyon come here and make such a statement as she cared to make, that I felt that no adequate or satisfactory canvass of the situation surrounding the accusations of Judge Kenyon's membership in these organizations which have been declared subversive by various public bodies, could be had without full and complete access, prior access to the investigative files in connection with Judge Kenyon.

The committee has not seen fit to produce those investigating files for my perusal at this point, so that I feel that any examination at this time, while perhaps eventually adequate, I cannot be certain that it has a sufficient background of all the facts upon which to base questions, but I do have some questions I would like to ask Judge Kenyon if I may.

In the first place, I would like to canvass some of these organizations, and I may say, Mr. Chairman, that my questions are based entirely upon my understanding that Senator McCarthy did not charge Judge Kenyon with being personally subversive or with being a Communist. I believe the charges went to the point of charging her with membership in a substantial number of organizations which have been declared subversive by various public bodies.

Senator TYDINGS. May I interrupt?

Senator GREEN. May I reply to that?

Senator TYDINGS. Let me read the resolution.

Senator GREEN. May I reply to that point?

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May you reply? I am stating my understanding.

Senator GREEN. I think you have misunderstood the purpose of the resolution, which was read at the beginning of this hearing.

The purpose of the resolution is to authorize and direct us to investigate charges of disloyalty, so the charges that were made against Miss Kenyon were charges of disloyalty. That is what she directed her answers to, and it seems to me that further questions ought to be directed to that point.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do I understand that the Senator—

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute. There is evidently a dispute here. Let the chairman read the resolution himself, and he will take no further part in it:

That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State.

Proceed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. If the subcommittee is to be limited to the very artful interpretation that is now apparently put on the resolution, then I certainly should be handicapped and completely limited in the questions I think should be asked in the general public interest of examining this matter.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead with your question.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Judge, I believe that you were alleged to have been a member of the Consumers National Federation Conference Committee, or the Consumers National Federation, which was cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944, and in 1943, by the California Committee on Un-American Activities; and by the New York City Council Committee on Investigating the Municipal Civil Service Commission.

I have a photostat, alleging that it is copied——

Miss KENYON. Give me the name again, Senator, because I have not heard that name before.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Consumers National Federation. I have a photostat of your name among the list of individual sponsors of that organization.

Miss KENYON. And the date?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. December 11 and 12, 1937, apparently this document was published. You may see it if you like.

Miss KENYON. I would be very happy to, yes.

This, Mr. Chairman, is not one of the organizations which was in the public print that I had, that was released last week. I remember nothing about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The list of names is on the second page.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

I will tell you, Senator, what I remember, if I have got the name correct, because there are an awful lot of names that are very confusing, and it is difficult to tell.

I have a recollection of a group concerned with consumers' problems that was formed around the middle of the thirties, about this date, probably, and that I went and made a speech at one of their meetings, and that I was probably perhaps connected with for a little while and later I decided that I did not like the tone or complexion or company that I was keeping, and I got out very early and washed my hands of it and never had anything to do with it for many, many years.

I do not know what my files may show, but that is my recollection.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any recollection of that particular organization, or your sponsorship?

Miss KENYON. That is what I say I think I am talking about—that organization. That is my recollection—of one where I did not like the company. I went and made a speech and did not like the company I was keeping and after a very few months, I got out and had nothing further to do with it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall whether you got out by writing a letter of resignation, or just not going?

Miss KENYON. I cannot recall anything about that. I only know, Senator, my recollection is I washed my hands of it long ago, because I suspected the people. I will be very glad to look it up in my files and see if I can find anything further.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. As far as you recall, you attended just one meeting of the organization?

Miss KENYON. That is right. That is what I remember—making a speech on consumers' problems, a very good speech and they liked it, and I think they asked me to be a sponsor. That was my misfortune.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, in New York City?

Miss KENYON. I think I made a speech there. That was not one of the names given by Senator McCarthy last week, this is a new one on me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a photostat, alleged to be a copy of the list of sponsoring people, and you are listed as Dorothy Kenyon, former justice, New York City. This organization was cited as a Communist front by the Committee on Un-American Activities in 1942 and 1944; by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, in their report in 1948; cited as subversive and un-American by the special committee of the House Committee on Appropriations, April 21, 1943.

Miss KENYON. What is that? I beg your pardon, I do not want to interrupt.

What did you say; what was the date allegedly of my participation?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You understand, I have no first-hand knowledge, and these are alleged to be photostatic copies of the documents.

Miss KENYON. I understand.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. This is dated, according to the photostat, January 17, 1940. Your name appears on the second page of the photostat, if you care to see it—you may.

Miss KENYON. Wait a minute. I am afraid I am confused about this. What is the name of that organization?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom.

Miss KENYON. Oh, I beg your pardon. It is one of the ones I mentioned, Senator, and I have a statement in my file. I just read my statement in respect to that. I said that what I did, according to my record, was to accept membership on a citizens' committee to promote free public education. The letterhead lists many distinguished college presidents, including Miss Park, former president of Bryn Mawr, and Professor Urey.

I also believe I am correct in saying that the organization is not on the Attorney General's list. It had an astounding number of presidents of colleges on it—most impressive.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you look at this alleged photostat and see if you are referring specifically to that organization whose name appears at the top? There are some of these organizations having similar names.

Miss KENYON. "President Marion Park, Bryn Mawr College; Prof. Harold Urey." This is the same one, yes. There are lots of other college presidents there too—very fine gentlemen.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you withdraw from this organization?

Miss KENYON. I had nothing to do with it, sir, according to my records, except to serve for a short period on this Committee to Promote Free Public Education—just one single ad hoc committee for one specific job. I don't know what we did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are not connected with it now, then?

Miss KENYON. I never have been since 1940, if that is the date on it. I was only connected with it then to that extent.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have another photostat of an alleged program of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights. This is Monday, February 12, 1940. The photostat is alleged to be of a list of members of the general committee. This organization is cited as a Communist front, which was succeeded by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. That citation was by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in their report March 20, 1944; also cited by the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities, report No. 115, September 2, 1947; cited as a Communist front by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, report, 1948.

Do you recall that organization?

Miss KENYON. Yes. I have mentioned that already, to say that all my records showed, and it must be the same meeting that you are talking about—was a meeting held in New York. I thought it was February 15, 1940, and Newbold Morris, who is not mayor of New York, and Mary Woolley, former president of Mount Holyoke College, were listed as the speakers in this clipping that I had.

Senator TYDINGS. Who is Newbold Morris, so we will know who he is.

Miss KENYON. He was president of the city council for 12 years when Mayor LaGuardia was president. He ran last fall for mayor against Mayor O'Dwyer. He is a liberal too.

Senator GREEN. In order that the record may be complete, on what ticket did Mr. Morris run for mayor?

Miss KENYON. Well, Senator, I think he ran on the Republican ticket. That is probably why I voted for O'Dwyer.

Excuse me, Senator Hickenlooper.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I notice it is the occasional Republican who belongs to one of these organizations that can be pointed to.

Mr. KIENDL. I am on your side on that, Senator.

Miss KENYON. Guilty by association.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is this organization still in existence that you know of?

Miss KENYON. What, this Inalienable Rights?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. This Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights.

Miss KENYON. I haven't the faintest idea. I can't even remember it. All I can find was this clipping in my files, 1940.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now the testimonial dinner in honor of Ferdinand C. Smith, on September 20, 1944, at the Hotel Commodore, in New York. I have a photostat alleging to be a copy of the list of sponsors containing your name. Were you a sponsor of that organization?

Miss KENYON. I haven't any recollection. That is also a new one on me. It wasn't included in the list that Senator McCarthy gave last year. When was that, and what was the man's name?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. September 20, 1944, testimonial dinner in honor of Ferdinand C. Smith at the Hotel Commodore in New York. You may see this, if it will refresh your memory.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much. Was he a Negro?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know. The allegation was made, I believe, that he is a prominent Communist.

Miss KENYON. Do you mean at the dinner?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know about at the dinner.

Miss KENYON. Excuse me a moment. I don't remember anything about this. I haven't any recollection of it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Your name is on the second page.

Miss KENYON. Yes, "in recognition of his outstanding service to labor, the Negro people, and the Nation."

I may have fallen for the fact that he is a member of the Negro race. That was a mistake like LaGuardia's occasional mistakes. It was a beaut.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall attending the dinner?

Miss KENYON. I don't know the individual. I don't recall having attended the dinner. I don't go to dinners if I can help myself.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The American Committee for Anti-Nazi Literature, suite 302, 20 Vesey Street, New York City. The photostat is alleged to be a copy of a letter, or photostat of the letterhead of that organization, upon which your name appears as a sponsor.

Miss KENYON. What is the date? May I see it?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. March 24, 1939. You may see it, of course.

Miss KENYON. I reported on this in my statement. I said I could find absolutely nothing in my files in regard to it, sir. I see a number of friends of mine along here on this sponsor list, including Prof. John Dewey. I just sponsored a dinner for him this fall. And Lillian Wald, who is also on the board of the American Civil Liberties Union, and Professor Maelver.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any recollection of it?

Miss KENYON. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And you are not now a member of it, nor a sponsor?

Miss KENYON. Certainly not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have an alleged photostatic copy of a clipping of the Daily Worker of February 10, 1944, containing a story which I shall show you, headed as follows: "Leading citizens laud Isaacs' on Gerson," and it is alleged to be a letter of which they claim you were one of the signers. In this news story, a letter to Mr. Isaacs lauding the appointment of S. W. Gerson, former Daily Worker reporter, as an assistant on Mr. Isaacs' staff.

They print your name as one of the signers of that letter.

Miss KENYON. A Daily Worker clipping, you say? I never see that sheet.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that I could find nothing in my record in respect to Gerson, or any letter or any action of mine in respect to it, and I have no recollection of anything except the Gerson controversy itself, which I remember, but the thing that seems to me extraordinary is that if my memory is right, that Gerson incident was in 1937 and this is dated 1944. It may not be a very good paper, but news 7 years old seems a little stale. I would suspect it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know, Judge. You are the one who either has the recollection or does not have the recollection, and I am merely asking whether you have any recollection or whether you did sign such a letter or not.

Miss KENYON. I have no recollection, and this seems to me incredible.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have heard that term before.

Miss KENYON. I did not mean to plagiarize.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In spite of the general sentiment, there is no monopoly on the term.

Miss KENYON. It is like "warmongering."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now I have a photostat of an alleged news story in the Daily Worker of February 21, 1940, in which your name appears as the signer of a protest to President Roosevelt and Attorney General Jackson, protesting the attacks upon the Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade and condemning the war hysteria now being whipped up by the Roosevelt administration. I show you the photostat. I have no knowledge of it whatsoever.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much. I have already commented on that. I will just take a look at it now.

So far as I know, I have already referred to this, to say that I have absolutely no recollection of having done anything of the sort, and I will say this time it is simply preposterous in relation to my record, which was almost that of warmongering at that time. It is undoubtedly a complete and absolute falsehood.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I take it that you are quite positive that you did not sign such a protest?

Miss KENYON. I am as positive as I can be.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The National Citizens Political Action Committee. Do you recall that organization?

Miss KENYON. I believe that that was the organization of which Sidney Hillman was the head, and I was very happy to be a member of the PAC. I regarded him as a great labor leader and a great citizen and American. I don't need to look at the documentation on that, Mr. Chairman.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You well remember that organization?

Miss KENYON. Quite.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a photostat here of a page of the Daily Worker of February 10, 1944, headed "American women leaders greet colleagues in U. S. S. R."

Miss KENYON. Has that a picture of Dorothy Thompson in the middle of the page?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It has a picture of Miss Thompson.

Miss KENYON. I remember that very well indeed. I am proud to say I did send greetings along with Dorothy Thompson and a lot of other fine women to the brave women of Russia, who at that time were our allies and were putting up a wonderful fight. Dorothy Thompson and I both remember it very well, and we are very proud of the fact that we did it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was at the National Council of Soviet-American Friendship; is that true?

Miss KENYON. I don't know anything about that. We just sent greetings as individuals. I did not belong to that organization.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You did not?

Miss KENYON. No. I understood we were invited as individuals to join in a Christmas greeting and we did—a lot of us. I think Mrs. Ogden Reid, of the Herald Tribune, was on it too.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you recall the Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee in your State; do you not?

Miss KENYON. Yes, Senator. I have very little recollection of it myself. I mostly got it from Mr. Baldwin.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have here an alleged photostatic copy of a letterhead dated January 18, 1935, of the Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee, 154 Nassau Street, room 1200, New York City, and your name is printed on the side of this alleged photostat as one of the sponsors. Is that correct?

Miss KENYON. I believe so; yes. Mr. Baldwin's name appears there as trustee; is that correct?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Baldwin is the first named as trustee.

Miss KENYON. Perhaps I had better look at it.

Yes, that is the one. I see Heywood Brown's name there too.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How long were you a member of that organization?

Miss KENYON. It died in 1934 or 1935. This must have been its death agony, I guess. That is what Mr. Baldwin told me. I have no recollection of it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are not a member of it at this time?

Miss KENYON. It liquidated 15 years ago, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It was cited as subversive and Communist June 1, 1948, and September 21, 1948. It was called a legal arm of the Communist Party by Attorney General Francis Biddle, according to the Congressional Record of September 24, 1942. It was cited as "It is essentially the legal defense arm of the Communist Party of the United States" by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, reports, January 3, 1939; also cited in reports, January 3, 1940, and March 29, 1944, and again by the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities in 1947. I have no knowledge as to whether or not it is still in existence, but those are the citations.

Miss KENYON. Senator, I believe you have confused it with the International Labor Defense. I think what you have been reading about is the record of the International Labor Defense, with which I never had anything to do, and it was, so far as I know, the arm of the Communist Party.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Political Prisoners Bail Fund Committee is alleged to be a subsidiary of the International Labor Defense, which has been characterized as I have just given you by those reports.

Miss KENYON. Yes, but I gave you Roger Baldwin's report, which is to the contrary, and there is no evidence that it is a subsidiary that I know of, and I have Mr. Baldwin's statement to the contrary. That is the best I can do in respect to that, Senator.

So far as I am concerned, I have forgotten every single thing about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a photostat of a letter headed "Lawyers Committee on American Relations With Spain." This is dated March 5, 1938. Your name is carried on the photostat, apparently in a list of members. At the bottom of the list it says "(partial list)."

Miss KENYON. Will you give me the name again? I think I have covered it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Lawyers Committee on American Relations With Spain.

Miss KENYON. Yes, I covered that and said that I belonged to that. That was in 1938-39, and the purpose of that was, we were working to get the embargo against the Government of Spain lifted. If you recall the situation at that time, the policy of nonintervention I believe was in effect, and was practiced by everybody except Hitler and Mussolini, and I have a good deal of good company in that list. I also could not find that organization on any subversive list. It must have gone out of existence.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you will find that it was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 10, 1944, pages 168-169, as "When it was the policy of the Communist Party to organize much of its main propaganda around the civil war in Spain" the above "Communist lawyers' front organization" supported this movement.

It was cited as a Communist front, I believe, by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, in their report, 1948, page 335.

Cited, I believe, also by the New York City Council committee investigating the municipal civil service commission.

Miss KENYON. I have told you that I was a member of it in 1939, for that one specific purpose. There are a great many very fine American citizens also included on that list. I had no knowledge whatsoever that it was Communist at the time, and I am not sure of it yet.

I have had nothing to do with it since 1939.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It is not in existence, so far as you know, at this time?

Miss KENYON. I understood it was formed for that one purpose, and then it went out of existence.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a photostatic copy of an alleged political advertisement in the New York Times of October 9, 1944, entitled "An Open Letter to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey" in connection with the Morris U. Schappes' conviction and asking the Governor to pardon Mr. Schappes. Your name is listed in this alleged photostat of the advertisement as one of the signers of the open letter.

Miss KENYON. I covered that in my statement. I will be very glad to look at it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think there is a pencil mark right there at your name.

Miss KENYON. I have absolutely no recollection of that whatever, Senator. That is one of the matters which I tried to see if I could find something on to refresh my recollection. I found absolutely nothing. I remember a long debate in regard to this Schappes case, and I think the American Civil Liberties Union had the matter under advisement in respect to a number of possible aspects of civil liberties in connection with the matter. Of course, in connection with civil liberties, as you know, we are always having cases come before us where it is charged that there has been some violation of civil liberties, and it is one of the basic tenets of the American Civil Liberties Union that every person is entitled to civil liberties, even if we hate his ideas.

I have no recollection of this or of myself having taken any action whatsoever. If I did take any action, it would have been entirely because of some civil liberties question which I believed was involved. Frankly, I don't think I took any action at all. I think I just chewed the rag the way a lot of others did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, the inclusion of your name in that advertisement as one of the sponsors was entirely without your consent or approval; would you say?

Miss KENYON. No, I can't be sure of that. I simply say I cannot remember. If it was included, it was only included because of some civil liberties aspect of the matter so far as I was concerned, but I have no recollection.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Schappes Defense Committee has been listed by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 20, 1944, as a front organization with a strictly Communist objective, namely, the defense of a self-admitted Communist who was convicted of perjury in the courts of New York. It was listed as a front organization, I am informed, by the California Committee on Un-American Activities in its report in 1948, page 55.

Miss KENYON. Mr. Senator, I take it that you are not charging that I was a member of that committee, but simply that I signed the letter. Is that correct?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Miss Kenyon, I am charging nothing.

Miss KENYON. I beg your pardon.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am asking for information.

Miss KENYON. Yes, yes. To clarify, let me say I know I never was a member of the committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not allege that this photostat shows any membership on anything, except it is alleged that you were a signer of the so-called open letter to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey as contained in a political advertisement of that date.

Miss KENYON. And that I may have done, although I doubt it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall the Washington Committee To Lift the Spanish Embargo?

Miss KENYON. No. I mentioned that, and I said I could find absolutely nothing whatsoever about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a photostatic copy of an alleged list of sponsors, I presume, of this organization; I don't know. It is headed "These Americans say: 'Lift the Embargo Against Republican Spain.'". It is a booklet of the Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo, an auxiliary of North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy.

Under the heading "Lawyers" is listed "Judge Dorothy Kenyon."

Miss KENYON. Well, I was fighting for that cause. I wanted the embargo lifted.

This is one of the causes, Senator, for which I fought. It says, "These Americans say: 'Lift the Embargo Against Republican Spain.'". They say they want the embargo lifted. I did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You signed that?

Miss KENYON. That was 1939, was it not?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe it so.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then I have a photostat of an alleged page in the New York Times of January 31, 1949, entitled "An Open Letter to the Government and the People of the United States," demanding that they lift the embargo now.

Miss KENYON. You mean 1939, not 1949.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did I say 1949? I'm sorry; 1939. And at the bottom of this is a list of names, in which your name appears.

Miss KENYON. I suppose that is the same thing, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know.

Miss KENYON. There are an awful lot of bishops on this. This is what I was for. I see some very respectable lawyers of New York on there. Harold Riegelman's name is there.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Washington Committee to Lift the Spanish Embargo, I am informed, was cited as one of a number of front organizations set up during the Spanish civil war by the Communist Party in the United States and through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation. That citation is by the Special Committee On Un-American Activities, report March 29, 1944, pages 137 and 138.

Cited as a Communist front by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, report, 1947, page 210, according to the information I have.

Miss KENYON. I certainly had no idea it was Communist, and I am sure those other Republican New York lawyers did not know it either.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Can't you find any Democratic lawyers on that list?

Miss KENYON. I think my counsel will be glad to.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Here is a photostatic copy, allegedly, of a letterhead of Films For Democracy, 342 Madison Avenue, New York. Listed on the side as a member of the advisory board is the name of Dorothy Kenyon.

Miss KENYON. I have reported on that already. I will be glad to see the exhibit.

I have absolutely no recollection. I see Stanley Innes' name here. I thought perhaps I might have made a speech before it, but I don't know.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you say the inclusion of your name on the list of advisers was without your consent or authorization?

Miss KENYON. No. I wouldn't know. I wouldn't have any idea about it. This was in 1938, and I couldn't tell you about that. I have no recollection whatever. I should have thought that I had perhaps made a speech before the group.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And from that they put your name on the list?

Miss KENYON. They might very well have. I am inclined to think that they did in a number of cases.

I see Senator Capper here. I think I had some good company, and if it was Communist then, I certainly did not know it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I might suggest that on some of these lists you had some very bad company as well as good company.

Miss KENYON. You are quite correct. We know that now. We did not all know as much then.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not reading any other names on the list. This is a matter that concerns you, Judge Kenyon.

Miss KENYON. Yes, I understand, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Films for Democracy was cited as a Communist-front organization by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report March 29, 1944, and as a Communist Front organization which merged with another front, Film Audiences, to become Film Audiences for Democracy. It was cited in the year 1939 by the California Committee on Un-American Activities, report of 1948, according to the information I have.

Miss KENYON. I also referred to that in my statement, saying that I had absolutely no record of it or memory of it. I take it from what you say that one was merged with the other.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know. I am merely quoting from the report.

Miss KENYON. And the letterhead on which my name appears was dated, as you say, January 5, 1938?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There is a date, January 5, 1938.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Later, according to the information I have, it was merged with another organization to become an organization known as Film Audiences for Democracy, in 1939.

Miss KENYON. That I know nothing about.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have an alleged photostat of a letter of Film Audiences for Democracy, 342 Madison Avenue, New York. I do not have the date on this one, but on the advisory board, on the side of this letterhead, is the name of Dorothy Kenyon. That is the merged organization.

Miss KENYON. I know nothing whatever about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I take it, then, that your name was put on there without your consent or approval.

Miss KENYON. I have no recollection, Senator, whether it was or not. I doubt that I ever had anything to do with it, but I cannot be sure. I have led a reasonably full life, and this was a long time ago.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then you might have been a member of this?

Miss KENYON. It is possible I might have, but if I did I will repeat again that I had no ideas that it was Communist then, and I haven't any idea what it is now.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in their report of March 20, 1944, cited it as a Communist front. I have the citation book here if there is any question about the citation. And the California Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report in 1948, said "The Communist fronts, Film Audiences and Films for Democracy, merged in 1939 to form a new front, Film Audiences for Democracy."

I am told the New York City Council Committee Investigating the Municipal Civil Service Commission cited it as "an organization of Communist complexion."

Do you remember whether you canvassed the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom?

Miss KENYON. I think we discussed that previously, did we not? Yes, that's right. I have mentioned it, you have it, I mentioned it, and now you mention it again.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you a member of that organization?

Miss KENYON. I told you that I, in 1940, accepted membership in an ad hoc Citizens Committee to Promote Free Public Education. I have never heard of it since.

That is the one which had all of the college presidents on it, if you will recall.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There was a meeting, I am told, according to this photostat which I have here and which I will hand you, sponsored, I believe, by that organization on April 13, 1940, and under the heading "These people sponsored this meeting" is the name of Dorothy Kenyon.

Miss KENYON. I have no recollection, but I may have.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You would not say that you did not? You would not positively state that you did not sponsor it?

Miss KENYON. That meeting?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That particular meeting.

Miss KENYON. I may have. It was, I believe, in that same year that I was accepting membership on this committee. It would not be inconsistent if I did. I repeat that I had no idea at that time that it was Communist. I saw Alvin Johnson's name there, and I am sure he did not think it was Communist either.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report for June 15, 1942, and also on March 29, 1944, as a Communist front which defended Communist teachers. The California Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report in 1948, says:

This Communist front was established on Lincoln's birthday in 1939. The activities of this group were always in behalf of communism. It has followed the Communist Party line as it switched and squirmed in support of the foreign policy of Soviet Russia.

It was cited as subversive and un-American by the Special Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations report, April 21, 1943.

I have a photostat, allegedly, of the letterhead of the Citizens' Committee to Aid Striking Seamen, 277 West Twenty-second Street, New York City, with a letter which is apparently a form letter photographed on this letterhead. On the side, under the heading "Advisory Committee", among others, appears the name of Dorothy Kenyon. This letter is dated January 28, 1937. Were you a member of that organization?

Miss KENYON. I have already reported on that. I could find absolutely nothing in my files, and I have absolutely no recollection. I have been sympathetic in a number of strikes, and it is perfectly possible that I may have sympathized with this. I know nothing about it whatsoever.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities in December 1944, in a report in appendix IX, I believe—there is a typographical bobble here—cited it as a Communist front.

Miss KENYON. At that time?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The report was made in December 1944. The date of the letter that I have is 1937.

Miss KENYON. I certainly did not know that it was Communist if it was Communist, nor am I sure that I was on it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not know whether you were or not, Judge. I merely showed you the photostat with the name "Dorothy Kenyon" on the side as a member of the advisory committee.

I have a photostat of a letterhead of the Conference on Pan American Democracy, with offices at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. It is dated November 16, 1938, and in the list of sponsors printed on the left-hand side of the letterhead is the name of Dorothy Kenyon.

Miss KENYON. I have covered that already in my statement.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just to refresh my recollection, were you one of the sponsors of the organization?

Miss KENYON. Yes. I said that. I found the letterhead in my file dated March 4, 1939, and I remember making a speech before that organization, I think in 1938. On the letterhead was the name of Senator Paul H. Douglas, Quincy Howe, Stanley Isaacs, and Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, all good friends of mine. I didn't know the Communists on it, if there were some.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe it is alleged there were some on it.

Miss KENYON. I believe those gentlemen that I named were not Communists or even considered so by this committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you still a member of that organization?

Miss KENYON. I have never heard of it in 10 or more years.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you ever withdraw from it?

Miss KENYON. According to this letterhead, I was a sponsor in 1939.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. 1938 is the date of this letter.

Miss KENYON. I'm sorry. The letter I have in my files is 1939. I'm sorry.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then if this photostat is an accurate reproduction, you were a sponsor in 1938, and also according to your own letterhead in 1939?

Miss KENYON. That's right. I told you it was in my file, which brought me up a whole year longer than what you have.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When was the last time you had any connection at all with this organization?

Miss KENYON. So far as I know, March 4, 1939. I have never heard of it since. I have difficulty remembering even this connection with it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Attorney General Tom Clark's letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released June 1, 1948, and September 21, 1948, cited it as subversive and Communist. It was cited as Communist front by the Special Committee on un-American Activities in its report March 29, 1944; also cited in the report of June 25, 1942.

The California Committee on un-American Activities, in its report, 1947, cited it as a Communist front, and it was cited as subversive and un-American by the Special Committee of the House Committee on Appropriations in its report of April 21, 1943.

Miss KENYON. I do not think I need repeat my position.

Senator TYDINGS. We want to go along, if you will permit us, to, for quite some time yet, but obviously there will be other members of the committee who will want to ask you some questions, and I am wondering whether it would be convenient for you to stay over tonight and come tomorrow to finish up.

Miss KENYON. Could we possible finish tonight, Senator? I do earn my bread and butter practicing law, and I have had several days just knocked right out.

Senator TYDINGS. We will proceed, then.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you discussed the New York League of Women Shoppers, and your association with that. I have what is alleged to be a photostatic copy of their letterhead of January 25, 1940, in which you are listed, among others, as one of the sponsors. Is that correct?

Miss KENYON. No, that is absolutely not so, because I disagreed violently with them in about 1936 or 1937 and withdrew with a bang. I remember that very well indeed, so they probably just continued to carry my name on the letterhead, which I am sorry to say many organizations appear to have done.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you withdraw in writing?

Miss KENYON. I think I probably did. I know I had a great row with them. I could find nothing in my files, but I don't keep files forever and ever.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At about what time did you withdraw from that organization?

Miss KENYON. That was 1937, I think—maybe it was earlier than that. No, I think it was founded about 1935, and I think it was 1936 or 1937 when I withdrew as a sponsor. I was never a member.

I didn't approve of the way they handled things, and I told them so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then their use of your name on their letterhead as late as January 25, 1940, was completely without your consent and unauthorized?

Miss KENYON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. This organization was listed in 1944 by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist-controlled front by indisputable documentary evidence obtained from the files of the Communist Party in Philadelphia, according to the citation, and it was cited by the California Committee on Un-American Activities in 1943 as one of the Communist-inspired and therefore Communist-dominated and controlled consumer organizations.

Miss KENYON. That was my understanding, too, and that is one of the reasons I withdrew from it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I merely wanted to get these things completely cleared up for the record.

I have a photostat of a letterhead of the Milk Consumers Protective Committee, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York, New York. The date of this is supposed to be April 23, 1940, according to the photostat, and under the heading "advisory board" is the name Dorothy Kenyon. Do you recall the Milk Consumers Protective Committee?

Miss KENYON. I covered that in my statement. I have absolutely no recollection of any such thing, and I can find absolutely nothing in my files.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that you cannot recall now whether or not you ever were a member of it, or a member of the advisory board?

Miss KENYON. That's right; that's right. It sounds so utterly foreign to me that I would say I could not possibly have been, but you do sometimes have a lapse of memory, especially about unimportant things.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think it is very apparent that a number of these organizations have been free with your name, Judge Kenyon. They have taken rather unusual liberties.

Miss KENYON. I think so too, Senator. It is unfortunate to be a liberal and a fighter for causes. It is probably better not to belong to anything.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall the organization called the Associated Blind, Inc.?

Miss KENTON. This is completely new.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Among the list of sponsors on this letter-head is "Honorable Dorothy Kenyon, Justice." I am merely asking you about the organization.

Miss KENTON. This, of course, is completely new, and I remember absolutely nothing about it. I don't know anything about it at all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You have no recollection of the organization?

Miss KENTON. No. I would say I had never heard of it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is that the fact, that you have never heard of it, so far as you remember?

Miss KENTON. That is right, yes. I haven't any recollection whatsoever of such a name.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Therefore the inclusion of your name as a sponsor of that organization would have been without your authority or consent?

Miss KENTON. I would say so; I would say so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. This organization is cited as a Communist-front organization by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in December 1944.

I have a photostat of an alleged program of the American Russian Institute, or I should say it appears to be an invitation to a dinner given by the American Russian Institute, a dinner and presentation of its first annual award to Franklin D. Roosevelt for outstanding service in furthering American-Soviet relations, given on Tuesday, May 7, 1946, at 6:30 o'clock in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Pennsylvania, in New York. On the list of sponsors—a partial list, it says—appears the name "Dorothy Kenyon." Do you recall that dinner of that organization?

Miss KENTON. I also covered that in my remarks. I do not recall the dinner, but I did say that, being a Rooseveltian, a devoted Rooseveltian, it might not have been strange if I had sponsored such a dinner in his honor.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The American Russian Institute for Cultural Relations With the Soviet Union was cited by the California Committee on Un-American Activities in its report in 1948.

Miss KENTON. Are you talking about the same organization, Senator, or is this another one?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It says "American Russian Institute for Cultural Relations With the Soviet Union." Perhaps I had better look it up in the citations.

Senator TYDINGS. While Senator Hickenlooper is looking that up, do some of these organizations have a parent body with branches in the various States, some of those that have been enumerated, like the Maryland Division or the California Division, or is there one organization that covers the country with a mantle? Do they have State chapters?

Miss KENTON. Of what?

Senator TYDINGS. Any of these organizations.

Miss KENTON. Do you mean, do I know?

Senator TYDINGS. Do you know?

Miss KENTON. No.

Senator TYDINGS. The reason I asked you is that there was put in evidence yesterday in one of the cases an exhibit where they had a Maryland chapter, and I was wondering whether or not they had chapters over the country in other States, because—and I don't say this is a fact, but I think it is a logical inference—one of the chapters might have a connotation that the parent body might not have, and vice versa, for that matter, so I think that when we go into the State findings on any of them we ought to know whether there are State chapters there. We don't know exactly what is being referred to.

Miss KENYON. Unfortunately I know so little about these organizations that have been mentioned that I am not the authority to tell you what their organization is.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Of course, the only reason these organizations are brought up is that your name appears on all of them as a sponsor or adviser or something of that kind, and I merely wanted to probe that situation a little.

Miss KENYON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think perhaps I should not press this for the moment, because this program says "The American Russian Institute cordially invites," et cetera, and the citation refers to the organization "American Russian Institute for Cultural Relations With the Soviet Union." That is the citation of its Communist activities. There is some addition to the name as contained in the program. It may not be the same, and I shall therefore pass it up.

The organization known as "Descendants of the American Revolution"—are you familiar with that?

Miss KENYON. Yes. That is not on this list. I have, however, a memory of that which is very clear because that, again, was one of the organizations that I never would become a member of. I was associated with them at the start and I didn't like them, and I just dropped them as fast as I could.

The idea was a very nice idea, and I think it was Helen Hall, of New York, who told me that some Quaker lady whose name I forgot had thought up the idea of having some Descendants of the American Revolution who might have a slightly different program from that of the D. A. R. It sounded to me like an interesting idea. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, as I recall, was interested and was an adviser, and also, if I recall, Mary Simkhovitch, the very fine woman in New York who was for long the head of Greenwich House. We explored the idea, and I may have been on that advisory committee for a little while, but very soon I saw a little bit of some other people who were working in it and, as I say, I didn't like them at all and I got out as delicately but as fast as I could. That was all back in the early, or the middle of the 1930's, I would have said. I remember the idea intrigued me, but I did not like the people who were trying to put it into effect. They struggled to get me to join.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The photostat which I have lists "Dorothy Kenyon, prominent attorney" as a member of the advisory board.

Miss KENYON. As I say, I may have been on the advisory board for a year, along with John Haynes Holmes and Mary Simkhovitch, but I got out very fast. What is the date on that?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There is no date that I notice.

Miss KENYON. It was the middle 1930's, I think. Oh, yes, they are both on there. Isn't that wonderful! My memory was good.

That idea did interest me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And that was when, did you say?

Miss KENYON. It was around the middle 1930's, I would have said. I am not too clear about that. As I say, I haven't had a chance to look it up. I do have the recollection.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Your memory is good about that organization in the 1930's?

Miss KENYON. Yes, I remember that very much, because I was really interested in that idea. Most of these others I know nothing about because I had nothing to do with them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Descendants of the American Revolution are described by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of June 1942, as—

A Communist-front organization set up as a radical imitation of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The Descendants have uniformly adhered to the line of the Communist Party.

It was cited as a Communist front by the California Committee on Un-American Activities in its report in 1948; cited as "subversive and un-American" by the Special Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations in its report of April 21, 1943.

Miss KENYON. My feeling was sound. I might say that quite a number of my ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War—on the right side.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the New York Journal-American of Sunday, March 12, 1950, under a story with a byline by Howard Rushmore, you are quoted—and I shall show you the entire story—

Miss KENYON. Yes; thank you very much.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. As saying, "Perhaps I was a sucker," when letterheads listed your name among the sponsors of Communist-front organizations dating from 1935 until 1949 and, "Denied in many instances that the use of her name had been authorized on stationery of organizations listed as Communist by Congress or the Attorney General," and, "Declared McCarthy was attempting 'to make people afraid of supporting popular ideas.'"

I wonder if that statement that "Perhaps I was a sucker" when letterheads listed her name among sponsors of the Communist organizations is an accurate statement.

Miss KENYON. I may have said that perhaps in certain instances I was a sucker, as who has not been, and I remember LaGuardia's statement that when he made a mistake, it was a "beaut," and I may have made one or two of those myself. When I have made a mistake, however, I think it has always been from generous motives, and never because of selfish political motivations.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have a copy of this?

Miss KENYON. I have it right here. My counsel did not let me read it until this moment.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are welcome to look at this, but if you have a copy of it we might as well keep this file together.

I have here a news story, Judge Kenyon, taken from the Times Record of Troy, N. Y., Tuesday evening, January 17, 1950, headed

"Hiss trial seen example of civil liberties hysteria"; subheading "Dorothy Kenyon, former judge, speaks at annual YWCA dinner." The story is as follows, and is under date of January 17, 1950:

The current perjury trial of Alger Hiss was cited last night by former New York City Municipal Court Judge Dorothy Kenyon as "a perfect example of a sacrifice to the hysteria created by the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities." Speaking before a large gathering at a membership dinner at the Troy YWCA, Judge Kenyon claimed, "Lawyers agree that there is not one shred of respectable evidence to prove that Hiss did what he is charged with doing." She added that in spite of this, Mr. Hiss "will be lucky if he can get a hung jury in his second trial."

Now, for the purpose of my question, Judge, I do not intend to read any more of this. I expect to offer the entire story in evidence, and you may read it all if you want to, in evidence or anything else. But for the purpose of my question I will ask you, is that a substantially accurate statement of what you said in that speech?

Miss KENYON. There is one sentence in there which is not correct, where I am quoted as saying that lawyers agreed there was no evidence—did you say?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I shall read the quotation again, and I will be glad to hand you the story.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The quotation here is as follows:

Judge Kenyon claimed "lawyers agree there is not one shred of respectable evidence to prove that Hiss did what he is charged with doing." She added that in spite of this Mr. Hiss "will be lucky if he can get a hung jury in his second trial."

My question is as to the accuracy of the alleged quotation, which is alleged in the story to be a direct quote from your statement. I have no objection—in fact, it is perfectly all right with me if the whole story goes in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. Either way you want it.

Miss KENYON. It makes no difference to me, because I said everything except that one thing, as I recall it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It will be put in the record.

Miss KENYON. May I make a comment in respect to that?

Senator TYDINGS. You may.

Miss KENYON. I made the remark quoted in substantially those words, that it was a product of the hysteria created by the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. I was asked in the question period about the Hiss case, which many people have said too many things about already, and if I can very briefly summarize what I said about it, it was this: I did say that he would be lucky if he got a second hung jury. I also said, which is not here, that in the present condition of hysteria in the country it was almost impossible, it seemed to me, to find a jury who had not perhaps already gotten some preconceived idea of the issues, and therefore would be disqualified by having made up their minds in advance, and that I really thought it would be almost impossible to get what you would call a fair trial with a jury completely objective for at least 2 years in the present temper of the country.

In regard to this matter of evidence, what I said, in substance, was that there wasn't a shred of direct evidence except what Mr. Whittaker Chambers had said, plus the documents which also went back to Mr.

Chambers, because he had produced them. In fact, I think that is roughly what I said. There was some discussion of the whole subject on the part of the audience and myself. I think that there are a number of lawyers who agree with that position.

I do not know Mr. Hiss or Mr. Chambers or any of the parties involved.

Senator TYDINGS. The exhibit will be printed in the record.

[From Troy (N. Y.) Times Record, January 17, 1950]

HISS TRIAL SEEN EXAMPLE OF CIVIL LIBERTY HYSTERIA—DOROTHY KENYON, FORMER JUDGE, SPEAKS AT ANNUAL YWCA DINNER

The current perjury trial of Alger Hiss was cited last night by former New York City Municipal Court Judge Dorothy Kenyon as "a perfect example of a sacrifice to the hysteria created by the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities."

Speaking before a large gathering at a membership dinner at the Troy YWCA, Judge Kenyon claimed "lawyers agree there is not one shred of respectable evidence to prove that Hiss did what he is charged with doing." She added that in spite of this Mr. Hiss "will be lucky if he can get a hung jury in his second trial."

The case of the former State Department official came up during Judge Kenyon's discussion on the status of civil liberties in the United States and in the world. She charged that "under J. Parnell Thomas (former Republican Representative from New Jersey) the House Un-American Activities Committee made accusations based on the flimsiest hearsay."

The loyalty tests of Federal employees, the Feinberg law, and wire tapping also came in for criticism from Judge Kenyon, a practicing attorney, who is now serving on the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women.

She declared that the Federal loyalty tests "contain no elements of a fair trial" and pointed out that the accused employees "do not even know the nature of the charges which are brought against them."

Characterizing the Feinberg law, which was recently declared unconstitutional, as an "invitation to tattle on teacher," Judge Kenyon called it a violation of academic freedom. She expressed the hope that the law "which is certain to be drawn up to replace it" (the Feinberg law) will be drafted with more caution.

Judge Kenyon told the gathering that "the people of the United States will soon be presented with a United Nations covenant on human rights which will include a mechanism for enforcement." She said that Americans must decide if they are willing to guarantee these rights and submit our violations of them to the World Court.

"The example the United States sets in the world will decide whether the democratic ideal will stand or fall," she asserted.

"If we are going to win the battle of ideas we have to put into practice our ideals of civil liberties," Judge Kenyon said, concluding with a plea for America to "get over the hysteria and end the witch hunting."

Judge Kenyon was introduced by Mrs. Margaret Spencer, Rabbi Julius K. Gutmann of the Third Street Temple led the devotional services, and Mrs. Norman R. Clarke, executive director of the Troy YWCA, gave the invocation.

The program was under the direction of Mrs. Sterling P. Olmsted of the public affairs committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just as a matter of interest in your philosophy, which you have referred to in the past, Judge, I believe you graduated from what schools?

Miss KENYON. Smith College.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was in 1908?

Miss KENYON. Yes, that's right; and New York University Law School. Harvard was not open then to women, otherwise I would have done what my brothers did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall writing something for the Decennial Class Book of 1918?

Miss KENYON. 1918? I am afraid, Senator, you have the advantage of me. I haven't the faintest idea of what folly I may have committed at that point.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't think you would have been old enough to write in 1918.

Miss KENYON. Very sweet of you, but I was. I hope you did not mean mature.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am just wondering if you recall.

Miss KENYON. I don't recall one thing about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Before I have even read it?

Miss KENYON. I don't recall one thing.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It is interesting. You might desire to check it. It goes to the question of your philosophy. I am told, in the Decennial Class Book of 1918, in writing about yourself, you used these words: "Absolutely not a Republican, nor a Prohibitionist. She can't altogether agree with the Democrats, nor can she quite commit herself to Socialists, toward whom perhaps she most inclines. Six years of nothing at all, of polite visits, existence and travel. How it reads like the days before the Russian Revolution. Here comes a change, and with about as little ceremony, enter the radical, the woman economically independent, the wage earner, the advocate of international democracy. Having once started on the downward path, nothing but disillusion is apparently likely to stop me."

Do you recall writing any such sentiments as that?

Miss KENYON. I don't even know what it means. Do you? I understand that part about Prohibition and Republicans, but nothing else.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I confess to some confusion, and I thought perhaps you might be able to explain it.

Miss KENYON. I am afraid I thought I was funny.

Thank you very much for calling it to my attention.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I thought sometimes those historical things are interesting to go back and review.

Miss KENYON. My class was also antisuffrage if I remember aright.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The question involved, so far as I am concerned—I assure you that I haven't the least evidence, nor do I have any belief, that you are subversive in any way.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Or disloyal. I haven't approached that from that standpoint at all. Regardless of what other members of the committee may interpret as the statement Senator McCarthy made, I interpret the statement he made as suggesting that your membership or alleged membership in a great many organizations at least later or presently declared to be subversive is a matter for concern so far as the security risk goes in public service, especially in the State Department and its activities.

Senator McMAHON. Will the Senator yield at that point? I just wanted to quote from the record as to what the Senator did charge the witness with.

Miss KENYON. I have it here, and it was a little more than membership.

Senator McMAHON (reading):

I think it is important that the committee know that the Communist activities of Miss Kenyon are not only deep rooted but extend back through the years. Her sponsorship of the doctrines and philosophy of this ruthless and godless organization is not new.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much, Senator, and he also at one point, on page 168, said:

Here again we have this prominent State Department official, Judge Kenyon, crying aloud in her anguish for a fellow Red—and he adds—

I call anyone who gets $12,000 a year of the people's money very prominent—but of course I didn't get it—a fellow red.

I consider that I have the right to assume that I was charged with being a Communist, and therefore disloyal, and I don't want to get angry. I have tried very hard not to.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I assure you that I am not taking the position that you are a Communist, so far as my views of the matter are concerned, but I would like to ask you whether or not you are familiar with Secretary Acheson's criteria on security risks as he has laid them down before committees of Congress and, I understand, published them.

Miss KENYON. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you familiar with that?

Miss KENYON. No, I don't believe I know them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Assuming that he has laid down the criteria, among others, that membership in organizations that have been declared to be subversive by official bodies is a matter for serious question and examination of the person as a security risk before public employment is given them—I say assuming that; if I am incorrect in that statement I can be corrected—before you took public employment as a representative of this country on the United Nations, did any official discuss with you the allegations of your membership in organizations that had been declared to be subversive?

Miss KENYON. Never. They have come and talked to me about other people.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the event, and this is a hypothetical situation, a supposition that I am making, the files in connection with information on your activities disclose, prior to the time of your employment or representation of this country, allegations of memberships in a substantial number of organizations that had been declared to be subversive by various public bodies, such as the Attorney General, the House Un-American Activities Committee, or other organizations of that sort, what is your personal opinion as to whether or not you should have been interviewed along that line?

I am assuming, for the purpose of this question, and making no allegation one way or the other, that there were repeated allegations in your file of membership in organizations that had been declared subversive. Do you think that you should have been talked to about this matter for some explanation or inquiry as to how your name happened to appear on these lists as sponsor and otherwise?

Miss KENYON. Well, Senator, I appreciate your asking me my opinion as to how the State Department should have handled this and other cases of dangerous persons. I would think, myself, in the first place, of the organizations that have been named here, membership in them is practically not charged to me at all. I have been charged with sponsoring a number of organizations, some of which I am perfectly certain I never did sponsor. The ones that I think I did boiled down to a handful that were probably at the time I belonged not Communist at all, because I am sure you know about the infiltration of Communists into various organizations, and I would have thought that it would have been proper for the State Department, or any other governmental body, in considering taking someone on their staff, or whatever that they should look at their record in the round, and look at all their activities, and not just at a tiny little bit of a group, and I have recited a number of my activities here today. There are many others, during most of my life, which I have not troubled the committee with going into, because I did not want to take your time or bore you. I therefore simply hit the high spots of the things which were inconsistent with the so-called Communist line, and if you were to look into all my activities, I think you might think yourself, without further questioning of me, that I was a good security risk.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Judge Kenyon, the question I asked you—

Miss KENYON. I am sure I have been looked into by everything.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The question that I asked you—perhaps I didn't make it clear, and I merely asked for your opinion.

Miss KENYON. Yes; I understand.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the light of the criteria laid down by the Secretary of State himself, in which he said that membership in organizations which had been declared to be subversive, or which were declared to be subversive by official bodies, was at least a cause for serious examination of the background and security risk potential of the individual who is considered for public office. In that light of those criteria, and then assuming for the sake of this question that in your files there appeared numerous cases where you were alleged to have been a sponsor or a member of a number of organizations, whether it is 20 or 25 or whatever number, but a substantial number—

Miss KENYON. It boils down nearer to six or eight.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am talking about the allegation. I am not talking about your actual membership. I am talking about the allegations that you were a member of a substantial number of these organizations. Wouldn't you think that in keeping with the criteria laid down for examination someone officially should have talked to you about this matter? Shouldn't it have raised some question? Shouldn't they have said, "We will go and see Judge Kenyon. We will give her an opportunity to tell us about these things."

Here are these allegations. Wouldn't you think that would be a perfectly normal thing in carrying out the investigating procedure before appointment as a public official?

Miss KENYON. It might have been done, Senator. I have no doubt that very serious consideration was given to my text, but what is gained by talking to a person and asking them whether they are subversive or are in favor of overthrowing the Government by force and violence, when you know perfectly well the answer that you will get does not seem to me very substantial? I think the things which they doubtless did do were to talk to people with whom I had been associated in various activities, and to get their views on me, which was considerably more intelligent than to come and talk to me. What do you think I would have said?

Senator HICKENLOOPER, I would have said some of the things I have been saying to you today.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am minded to ask the question, Judge Kenyon—

Miss KENYON. It is the only way I can answer it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Because you so vigorously and so very properly and so quickly demanded to be heard in this case, when the charges were made by Senator McCarthy, and I would think that normally it would therefore be your reaction that of course the State Department should have come to you and let you present your case in this matter if these things appeared in the file. It would seem to me to be perfectly consistent.

Miss KENYON. I understand you now, Senator, and I would say this. You are now, instead of asking me whether I think this was something the State Department should have done, talking about it in terms of what I would have liked in respect to my own reputation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am asking you for your judgment. You are a very able woman, a woman of experience; you are a jurist. Your opinion, I think, is valuable.

Miss KENYON. I would have been very happy had they come and had I been able to answer and to tell them that most of these things I had had nothing whatsoever to do with. I didn't know at the time that there was a case like this building up against me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Don't you think it was a matter—

Miss KENYON. I have learned a lot lately.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That you might well have known about, that they should have talked to you about and told you about?

Miss KENYON. I would have liked it had they come to me; yes, indeed. I would have been delighted, and I would have given them another piece of my mind.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. With the reservation, Mr. Chairman, that I still feel and insist that, inasmuch as this is one of the cases involved in this matter, the investigative file must be available to this committee and that I don't consider this to be any kind of a complete questioning of the witness without the background of those files, I have nothing more to say at this time.

Senator TYDINGS. Judge, I would like to ask you one or two questions.

Have you ever been an employee of the State Department?

Miss KENYON. My answer would be that I don't think so. I am not sure what you call a United States delegate to the United Nations. I had always described myself as a piece worker—p-i-e-c-e worker—for the State Department. I do not think that that position is considered an employee. I am not sure, Senator. You are asking me a technical question. That is my only connection ever with the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. The next question I would like to ask you is, What was your first notice of the charges that Senator McCarthy had brought here concerning you?

Miss KENYON. Wednesday.

Senator TYDINGS. In the newspapers?

Miss KENYON. At 12 o'clock a reporter called me up, and from then until 1 a. m. reporters called me up.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you have any notice that your name was going to be called into question before this committee before the reporter called you up?

Miss KENYON. I never had the faintest inkling. I was horribly busy. I had professional engagements all last week and this and next week; and tomorrow is income-tax day, and I do some income-tax work; and I was submerged with things and never once thought about Congress.

Senator TYDINGS. There has been no evidence here that anyone who has made any charge against you has actually seen the files in the State Department, so you, in answering these charges, are in the same position so far as the committee knows as was the witness who brought the original charges. They were brought, so far as we know, without any seeing of the State Department files themselves, and consequently you are here without us having seen the State Department files.

Miss KENYON. We are all in the same boat.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to ask you this: When you joined any of these organizations, those that you have particularly identified yourself with and have given your reason for joining, how did you come to join them? Did you organize these things, or were you invited by someone you knew to join?

Miss KENYON. I was always invited. I have always been very busy with my law practice and then, of course, with my governmental work during those years of the thirties. Perhaps Government work isn't quite as trying as practicing law. I seem to have had a little more time in the late thirties when I was a Government official for extra-curricular activities, and perhaps that is a pity. But in any event, you know, I got around, I spoke, and then I have always cared very much, as I stated, for the under dog; and the American Civil Liberties Union, of course, has dealt with under dogs; so people came to me and told me about projects.

Senator TYDINGS. What character of people suggested that you join any of these organizations?

Miss KENYON. Well, they were just people that I knew.

Senator TYDINGS. Were they prominent people in the community of well-known reputation, or were they people that were of shady reputation, or Communists, or pro-Communists, so far as you know, looking back on this record?

Miss KENYON. I would have said, for the most part, many of them were friends of mine who do have reputations, but I also know a lot of little people who don't have reputations in that sense of the word. and some of these little groups that have been talked about I surmise were perhaps in the beginning just a group of little people in some neighborhood in New York who had heard me speak and told me about their idea, and would I help them—maybe would I go on the advisory committee while they were trying to organize this thing, because I don't entirely deal in the world of Park Avenue and Wall Street.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not mean in the economic sense. I meant in the citizenship sense. Were any of these people who invited you to join, so far as you knew them, or so far as you know now, members of the Communist Party, or allied with the Communist Party, or identified with Communist movements per se?

Miss KENYON. At the time when they came to me, I had no idea that they were Communists, if they were. I have had no idea whatsoever in respect to it. As I grew a little older in the thirties I worked out a policy that I was cooperative and friendly toward most people, but in respect to Communists, while I would support their civil liberties, my policy was isolationism, and I kept away from them and tried to keep them away from me.

Senator TYDINGS. I have lots of other questions, but I am going to defer to my two committeemen so you may not stay here if we can get through. Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. Miss Kenyon, you have many times in reply to a question referred to your filing system and having found nothing in your files. I think perhaps it would be just as well for you to say a few words as to what this filing system was. Was it your habit to open a file for a new organization you joined, and things like that?

Miss KENYON. Yes, Senator. I would be very glad to answer that question. It sounds a little formidable to call it a filing system; but, of course, you know I have my law office; and we, of course, have my legal files; and I have file clerks.

When it has come to the question of these nonlegal matters, but extracurricular activities, so to speak, my organizational matters, my various secretaries from time to time have tried to get order in them, and I have a file of associations. Where I have a great deal to do with them, the files with respect to them become very voluminous, and then I have miscellaneous association files. When there are specific things which become important enough to have a file by themselves, they get a file; and then, as I say, in the "miscellaneous" comes in what I would call the cats and dogs, the things that maybe I have just contact with for a very short period of time.

I did not, Senator, keep—unfortunately, if I did, I would have to pay much more rent than I do now—and I cannot keep, all my files from the beginning of time, because every now and then we burst at the seams and I either have to throw out some old ones or buy some new filing cabinets or do both, and my office in New York is not a very big one. It is jammed with files. Every now and then we have to have a house cleaning, and out go a lot of little innocent lambs.

I had a file on this Political Rail Fund thing. We had a card for it. But it ended, you see, in 1934 or 1935, and there wasn't any file. We had thrown it out. So I was stuck. All I could do was to ask Roger Baldwin.

Senator GREEN. As a rule you have a file of one kind or other for any organization of which you are actively a member?

Miss KENYON. That's right, and we have cards for them.

Senator GREEN. And, when you say you haven't found any reference to it, you infer that in all probability it was just a passing interest or some minor activity like a speech or something of that kind?

Miss KENYON. That is precisely it. I also have a speech file, but it does not go back to the thirties.

Senator GREEN. My distinguished colleague asked you about a good many associations and organizations on which your name appeared in some publication, such as an invitation to a dinner or something like that, and it was based on the theory of guilt by association.

Miss KENYON. Yes.

Senator GREEN. Because that is the only purpose it seems to me it could have, and he quoted the Secretary of State as referring to that as one of the criteria which might be used in determining an applicant or an employee's loyalty, although the Secretary of State used that only as one of a number—

Miss KENYON. A number of criteria?

Senator GREEN. Yes; that the thought should be applied.

I think it would be just as well, or I would be glad, at any rate, to hear your views on this theory of guilt by association. It always seemed to me as though that was one of the fundamental differences between the totalitarian and the democratic form of government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, so long as the Senator has predicated his question on his assumption of what I said, may I clear it up?

Senator GREEN. I will be glad to have you do so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I did not say the Secretary of State had set these up as criteria of loyalty. I used the term "security risk." There is a vast difference between security risk and either proof of or allegation of disloyalty. There is a vast difference between them. A bad security risk may be loyal intentionally.

Senator GREEN. I am glad the Senator understands the difference, because the resolution under which we are acting specifies disloyalty and not security risk, so I assumed that those who are charged in these hearings and before this committee were being charged with disloyalty. It seems to me it is a logical conclusion.

However, about this theory of guilt by association, I know you must have very definite ideas, and I will be glad to hear them.

Miss KENYON. Thank you, Senator. I want to be very brief.

Of course, guilt by association alone seems to me a violation of due process, which is in our Constitution as one of the civil liberties which I have fought for. The associations themselves, the organizations themselves—and I hold no brief for any of these; I am prepared to believe they are all devilish—nevertheless they themselves have never been found subversive by a court of law or by any process other than an administrative edict; and administrative edicts or fiat or whatever you call them sound to me like Mr. Hitler and Mr. Stalin; therefore, I think that the terming of an organization subversive is in itself a violation of civil liberty.

And then from that to jump to the fact that a person who is a sponsor or a member or participates in one tiny little project for a short period of time is therefore tarred with the same brush and is therefore himself or herself subversive seems to me a non-sequitur. Very frequently it just is not true.

Therefore it seems to me that due process is violated, and maybe it is a bill of attainder and maybe it is an ex post facto law. I am prepared to say that it is completely contradictory to the democratic process.

Senator GREEN. I thought that was your view, and I am glad to hear you state it so clearly.

Miss KENYON. I hope you read the New York Times editorial on "The Right To Join."

Senator GREEN. I did not. Perhaps this will be a good substitute. There is just one other question: You were furnished with a good many lists on which appeared disreputable people as well as people of the highest repute. I have before me a document relating to you which contains people I do not think any of whom are disreputable, all of the highest repute.

Miss KENYON. Oh, Senator, thank you.

Senator GREEN. And I think it would be well if it appeared in the record now. It is headed "For release upon completion of testimony by Judge Dorothy Kenyon before Subcommittee of Senate Foreign Relations Committee, March 14, 1950."

I don't know whether you care to read it and place it in the record. You are the only witness here; I suppose, unless you are overcome by modesty, you may do it.

Miss KENYON. Senator, you embarrass me. Might my counsel read it for me? If I know what it is, I would prefer not to read it myself.

Senator TYDINGS. Counsel will read the document.

Mr. KIENDL. The document reads as follows:

The following is a statement made public today by New York Attorney C. C. Burlingham and other prominent New York lawyers.

"The charges against Dorothy Kenyon made by Senator McCarthy, of Wisconsin, in his testimony before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs are so fantastically false that here in New York where we all know Miss Kenyon they might well be ignored, but as the charges have been spread through the press of the entire Nation we who have known Miss Kenyon for years feel in duty-bound to declare and spread the truth as widely as possible.

"Miss Kenyon was admitted to the New York Bar in 1917. She is an able and experienced lawyer and served as Justice of the municipal court by appointment of Mayor LaGuardia. She has served the city of New York with distinction in other official capacities and as a member of numerous boards and commissions of a public nature. She has attained a high reputation for her ability and her character. She is independent and liberal.

"We assert of our own knowledge that she has never had the slightest sympathy with communism in any of its forms. It is a matter of public record that long before World War II she warned of the loss of freedom in the totalitarian states. No citizen of New York is a more loyal American."

That is signed by: Ernest Angell, C. C. Burlingham, John W. Davis, Lloyd Garrison, Edward S. Greenbaum, Nicholas Kelley, William H. Davis, Newbold Morris, Robert Moses, Robert P. Patterson, A. J. G. Priest, Whitney North Seymour, and Ordway Tead.

Senator GREEN. Thank you.

Miss KENYON. Thank you very much, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. No questions.

Senator TYDINGS. Miss Kenyon, we are very much obliged to you for coming down here and testifying. We will try and not call you back unless you get in the headlines again.

Miss KENYON. Unless I get in hot water.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to announce before we adjourn that I would like to have an executive committee meeting of the subcommittee in room G-23 in the Capitol tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock. I hope all members will be present. It is important that they all be there promptly so we can dispatch some pending business.

(Whereupon, at 5:15 p. m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene upon the call of the Chair.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

MONDAY, MARCH 20, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 281,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 14, 1950, at 10:20 a. m. in room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings, Green, McMahon, and Hickenlooper. Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee), Tobey, Wiley, and McCarthy.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will please come to order.

Dr. Jessup, would you care to take the stand?

Hold up your right hand, first.

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in the pending matter before this committee, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Ambassador JESSUP. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, sir.

TESTIMONY OF HON. PHILIP C. JESSUP, AMBASSADOR AT LARGE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Senator TYDINGS. Dr. Jessup, you are familiar, I assume with why this committee is sitting.

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. I likewise assume that you are familiar with the statement made by Senator McCarthy concerning you, sometime ago, during the process of these hearings?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You have read it?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you prepared to make an answer to that, today?

Ambassador JESSUP. I should like to do so, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You may proceed in your own way.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chairman, my name, as I think may be known, is Philip C. Jessup. I reside in Norfolk, Conn., and my present position is Ambassador at Large of the United States.

Senator TYDINGS. Dr. Jessup, you might, for about a minute or two, give us a little biography as to how long you have been in the State Department, and so forth, so that when you take up the record, those of the people here who are not familiar with that, will have that in mind.

Ambassador JESSUP. I have included that in my statement, with just a little prefatory paragraph, if I may.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all right, sir.

Ambassador JESSUP. I wanted to say, sir, that I greatly appreciate the opportunity that your committee has given me to appear before you in connection with the charges and insinuations which have been made against me by Senator McCarthy. On March 8 Senator McCarthy made the following statement to this committee which I quote from pages 71 and 72 of the record:

Although I shall discuss the unusual affinity of Mr. Phillip C. Jessup of the State Department for Communist causes later in this inquiry, I think it pertinent to note that this gentleman now formulating top-flight policy in the Far East affecting half the civilized world was also a sponsor of the American-Russian Institute.

That is the end of the quotation.

Mr. Chairman, no one can be loyal to communism and also loyal to the United States. This attack on me by Senator McCarthy is obviously intended to give the impression that I am disloyal to the United States. When Senator McCarthy made that statement, I was in Pakistan completing an official mission throughout the countries of Asia. This mission was carried out as part of the effort this country is making to strengthen the free and democratic forces in Asia and the capacity of free Asia to resist subversive or antidemocratic forces.

During the course of this mission it was my duty to speak on behalf of the Government of the United States to the chiefs of state, prime ministers, foreign ministers, and other high officials of almost all of the countries of that area. In the course of that mission I also made various public statements in an attempt to make clear to the peoples of the east that the solution of their problems does not lie in the false hopes dangled before them by the agents of Communist greed and imperialism.

For example, at New Delhi, on February 23, 1950, I issued this statement to the press, and I should like to read that extract:

Since the end of the Second World War, history has recorded the extension of a new imperialism that has brought more than a dozen countries under the domination of a single expanding power. The device used by this expanding power in extending its imperialism is to hold out the glittering promises of communism as a beacon light for the rescue of peoples who are suffering from economic underdevelopment or who are trying to remove the shackles of the old traditional kinds of colonialism. However, where communism gains control, it becomes immediately apparent that the peoples are not allowed to determine their own future, but must conform to a single policy laid down in Moscow.

* * * Communism is hostile to what the Asian people want to do and what we want to help them to do—which is to develop the stability of their new countries and to develop their resources and their technical skills so that they are not subject to penetration, either through ignorance or distress or because they succumb to the false promises of the Communists.

That is the end of the quotation from that statement I made at New Delhi.

If Senator McCarthy's innuendoes were true, the representatives of the foreign governments with whom I spoke would be entitled to believe that my statements to them were deceitful and fraudulent. They would be entitled to believe that no confidence should be placed in the declarations which I made on behalf of our Government. If it were true that the President and the Secretary of State had sent on such a mission a person who was a traitor to his own Government they might well feel that they could place no confidence in the statements made by any of the representatives of the United States abroad.

It may be relatively unimportant whether the character of a single American citizen is blackened and his name is brought into disrepute, but in the present serious situation of international relations throughout the world today it is a question of the utmost gravity when an official holding the rank of Ambassador at Large of the United States of America is held up before the eyes of the rest of the world as a liar and traitor. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that Senator McCarthy has not used those words. But if his insinuations were true, these words would certainly be appropriate.

It is impossible for anyone to estimate the harmful effect that these innuendoes have had on the success of my mission and the foreign policy of the United States. It is clear that if these insinuations remain unanswered, they will further weaken the United States in its conflict with world communism. For that reason I flew back from Europe and asked this opportunity to be heard by this committee.

It is obvious that an individual holding the high position of Senator of the United States would not venture in this way to undermine the position of the United States in its relations with the rest of the world unless there was some reason for doing so. I have tried to figure out what the reason behind this attack might be.

I suppose that if I chose to follow the tactics which you gentlemen have witnessed in recent weeks, I would start with the hypothesis that this action was Communist inspired. It so happens that, so far as I know, the only other attack upon my integrity during the course of my trip in Asia was made by the Peiping Communist organs, and by Izvestia, the official publication of the Soviet Union in Moscow.

On March 3, Izvestia attacked me in the following manner:

At a press conference arranged on February 23 in Delhi, Jessup set out to obtain a change of view in Indian public opinion. Jessup brought into action all kinds of means: Flattery and the publicizing of American "assistance to backward regions" and most of all, of course, slanderous fabrications against the U. S. S. R. * * * In general, Jessup tried with all his might but he had little success. The imperialistic aggressive character of the policy of the United States throughout the world, and in Asia in particular, is so evident that no hypocritical speeches and anti-Communist philippics could hide it.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to place before the committee copies of other Communist attacks upon me. I have them with me, and would like to deliver them before you in a few moments.

Senator TYDINGS. They will be inserted in the record at this point.

Press Review:

Wen Hui Pao January 11 carries following comment entitled "another devilish scheme": "Ambassador-at-large Jessup, executor of American aggressive policy in Far East, is conducting series of secret meetings in Japan with MacArthur.

"What is secret? It is one known to all, a 'secret' filled with devilish designs. They are attempting to conclude unilaterally peace treaty with Japan, and at same time 'American-Japanese alliance.' American imperialism intends to place Japan under its perpetual enslavement, and use Japan as base for aggression of Far East, principally China.

"Let us listen to dream-like babbling of Jessup. He says that U. S. has not abandoned, and does not propose to abandon, China or other Far East countries, and that U. S. will continue to oppose acts of Communists in seeking overthrow of existing governments with brutal force. Such is way Jessup slanders overthrow by Chinese people of traitorous reactionary group."

But Chinese people, too, have not abandoned, nor do they propose to abandon, mission against imperialism, feudalism, and bureaucratic capitalism. Though this mission has been basically consummated, China will continue to raise high her vigilance, and continue to oppose and deal blows to imperialism attempts for enslavement of Far East.

Press review:

Wen Hui Pao, January 12, carries following editorial headed "Watch Americans New Intrigue in Far East."

"Phillip C. Jessup, American Ambassador at Large, Chief of American State Department's Far East Policy Study Group, and responsible executor of American policy of aggression in Far East, arrived in Japan about week ago and has since been engaged in series of secret conferences with MacArthur, American reactionary leader who now rules Japan.

"According to Jessup's open announcement and to information given out by Americans' own news agency, problem of peace treaty with Japan together with other problems related to Far East (including problem of Taiwan) constitute object of these secret conferences.

"What is termed problem of peace treaty with Japan is nothing but attempt by American imperialists to conclude unilateral peace treaty with Japan to exclusion of Soviet Union and China, to lay foundation for future formulation of U. S.-Japanese alliance. In other words, America will use U. S.-Japanese alliance to turn Japan into American base of aggression in Far East, and use unilateral peace as means of carrying out prolonged occupation of Japan as well as fostering Japanese reactionary forces."

Sino-Thai relations: Peking Radio Attack on Thailand
Editorial January 25

KUANG HUA PAO (Tending to pro-Communist)

We Chinese overseas are, of course, fully aware of the denials from the Thai Parliamentary Secretary to the Foreign Ministry, the Foreign Minister, Premier Phibun and the Publicity Department, following the UP report quoting Peking Radio broadcasts concerning the Thai government's oppression of Chinese.

Speaking conscientiously, since the very beginning of Sino-Thai relations Thai people have very rarely gone to China but a great number of Chinese have immigrated into this country, especially during recent years. The Chinese have favors to seek from Thailand, while the Thai have nothing to obtain from China. Therefore, the Thai authorities take no interest in Chinese problems, and chatter freely without fear because they assume they have support. Such "denials" of the UP report are an example.

If the problems of overseas Chinese are to be solved, instead of laying blame on others we should help ourselves first by stabilizing the political condition, so that the rich may invest their money at home and the poor may contribute their services to the nation. If overseas Chinese can change the health and thicket to prosperous cities in behalf of others, why not rebuild our own home in China?

If this is realized, there would be more Chinese going home than going abroad, and such matters as a "protest" will be unnecessary since every Chinese overseas is pleased to go back to his motherland.

Imperialism: Bangkok Conference and "Pacific Pact"
Editorial January 26

CHUANMIN PAO (Communist)

The U. S. Imperialist Far East Diplomatic Conference has been scheduled to open from February 13-17 in Bangkok. This important conference in which the U. S. Imperialist Far East aggressive plan is to be revised should not be overlooked. Jessup, head of this conference, is one of the authors of the aggressive Far East policy of the U. S. State Department.

From the United States, he has been to Tokyo, Taiwan, Hongkong and Manila. During a two-day stay in Taiwan, he had secret talks with the bandit Chiang; in Manila, he did not quit until Quirino promised to accept the U. S. Imperialist "point four" and to convert the Philippines into the "showroom of the Far East."

There should be no doubt of the purpose of the conference since Jessup has to go round for secret talks with rulers of various Far Eastern nations long before the conference takes place. For example, according to informed quarters in the Philippines, Quirino not only gave assurance of his "cooperation" with the United States in its defense plan, but also expressed his "welcome" to the assurance from American officials that the U. S. will retain adequate forces in the Far East. Whereas any nation in the Far East needs only to express "welcome" and give assurances of "cooperation" with American Imperialists for what they required, the deal surely is successful and mutually beneficial.

There is cited below an English translation of an editorial, A Few Words to Jessup, which appeared January 31, 1950, in the SENG HWO PAO, a Chinese Communist newspaper published daily in Djakarta.

A FEW WORDS TO JESSUP

The American Ambassador-at-Large, Philip C. Jessup, the day before yesterday arrived in Djakarta from Vietnam. He intends to stay here five days. He conferred with Hatta. The subject of discussion was kept a secret. What medicine he is offering for sale only he himself knows.

But the secret medicine he is selling is after all no great mystery—it is only a quack medicine!

The medicine Jessup is selling was offered in Japan, South Korea, Taiwan, Philippines, Vietnam, Singapore and now in Indonesia. It is reported that it will be brought to Rangoon and Bangkok. In the Bangkok American Foreign Service Officers Conference special instructions will be given for the sale of "anti communism" medicine.

Well, has this "anti communism" medicine trade of Jessup had any success? No, it is a failure!

The cause of his failure is his misunderstanding of the main problem: The chief aspiration of all Asiatics at present is, as pointed out by Nehru, "Colonialism, Quit Asia! The Asiatics must be fully independent." But Jessup apparently does not realize this. On the other hand, he is applying the "colonialism whip" harder and harder.

As evidence, let us look at Vietnam. The fact that the U. S. is going to recognize Bao Dai is a clear proof of its motive. Vietnam is a puppet of France. This can be seen from the transfer of sovereignty agreement signed on December 30, 1949. In that agreement it was said down!

Bangkok Conference to Plan New Schemes.

Peking, in Mandarin, to China and Overseas, February 13, 1950, 1230 GMT—R. (Anonymous Commentary on "American Ambassador Jessup's So-Called Far Eastern Tour of Inspection".)

"In the middle of this month, the conference of American far eastern diplomatic personnel will meet in Bangkok, the capital of Thailand, to discuss the over-all American plan for aggression in the Far East.

"Some time ago, the American imperialists had made intensive plans for this conference. The head of this conference, American Ambassador Jessup, left America last year on Dec. 22 for the Far East to carry out his nefarious schemes.

"Within the last month, Jessup has been to Japan, South Korea, Okinawa, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Philippines, Viet Nam, Indonesia, Singapore, and Burma.

"Every time Jessup reached a place, he held secret meetings with the local leaders on the so-called conditions for anti-Communism.

"MEETINGS IN TAIWAN

"On Jan. 15, when Jessup arrived in Taiwan, he met with the head of the Kuomintang, Chiang Kai-shek, Wu Kuo-chen, Yen Hsi-shan, and Chen Cheng for secret talks. The Kuomintang CENTRAL NEWS reports that Jessup exchanged views with the bandit Chiang on the Far Eastern situation and the world problem of anti-Communism. They discussed * * *, the military aspects of the defense of Taiwan, and other military problems relating to politics and economics.

"When Jessup arrived in the east, on Jan. 18, he issued a statement on the policy for the Far East and Asia. In this statement, he openly stated the points which the American imperialists opposed their enemy, the peoples of Asia.

"The American imperialists have a clear policy for the Far East. That is to say, America will continue to use force and other similar measures to oppress the people's liberation movement in Asia. She will support reactionary control in the countries, so that she can compromise the nation's independence and make them into American colonial territories and protectorates.

"ARRIVAL IN INDOCHINA

"On Jan. 27, after Jessup's arrival in Hanoi, Indochina, he personally called upon the puppet king of Viet Nam, Bao Dai, and the puppet premier, Nguyen Phan Long. He also delivered American Secretary of State Acheson's letter of congratulations to Bao Dai.

"This letter stated: 'America is willing to establish close relations; that is to say, is willing to recognize the puppet Bao Dai regime.'

"Not long afterwards, on Feb. 7, the American Government recognized the Bao Dai regime forthwith. At the same time, under Jessup's direction, American arms flowed to Indochina for Bao Dai.

"After staying in Viet Nam for a few days, Jessup arrived in the capital of Indonesia on Jan. 20. The reactionary leaders of Indonesia, Sukarno, Hatta, etc., held secret talks with him. At this time American arms were shipped to Indonesia for Sukarno and his group to oppose the liberation movement of the people of Indonesia.

"After Jessup had left Jakarta and had arrived in Singapore, he made a broadcast speech on the evening of Feb. 6 in which he exposed the American imperialists' plans for aggression in the Far East. He insisted that the western nations had the right to drastic steps in Southeast Asia.

"POINT 4 PROGRAM

"Jessup brought up Truman's plan for economic penetration known as the so-called point 4 program. He said that this plan could bring universal prosperity to all peoples. This so-called coprosperity is not Jessup's new invention; this scheme for aggression was long ago loudly proclaimed by the Japanese Fascists, such as the so-called joint prosperity, greater East Asia coprosperity sphere, etc.

"The people of Asia know the meaning of these words. On the morning of Feb. 8, Jessup enplaned for Rangoon, Burma, the last point of aggression before his arrival in Bangkok.

"From reviewing the past two months of Jessup's secret negotiations in the different parts of Asia, we can see what the Bangkok conference is like. There is no doubt that this conference is to discuss American imperialist aggression in Asia.

"Because of the great victory of the Chinese people, the struggle of the people of Asia for democracy and independence has been growing daily. American imperialists have received a serious blow. The American imperialists in order to overcome their losses in Asia and the Far East are planning new schemes to enslave the peoples of Asia. The Bangkok conference has been convened for this purpose. But the people of China and the other countries of Asia are growing exceedingly powerful. They know that imperialism is only a bluff, and all its schemes will fall."

Bangkok Parley to Plan Pacific Union.

Moscow, in English, to Southeast Asia, Feb. 13, 1950, 1600 GMT-L.

(Commentary on the Conference of the U. S. diplomats, which opens in Bangkok on Feb. 14.)

(Summary.)

The conference of U. S. diplomats opens in Bangkok today. U. S. intelligence agents and spies, agents of Wall Street in Southeast Asia who have taken the guise of diplomats are meeting together. Judging by reports from the foreign press, the conference is to discuss the plan of struggle against the Chinese People's Republic and the national liberation movement in Asia.

The New York Herald Tribune has reported that immediately after the proclamation of the Chinese People's Republic the State Department decided to draw up what is called "a positive policy" with regard to China and the other countries of the Far East and Southeast Asia. A special commission was set up under Dr. Jessup to work out concrete steps. The paper also revealed that the main task before the commission was to work out a general plan of combat in Asia.

The U. S. militarists are laying the ground for large-scale intervention in Asia, and they are doing it under the guise of economic aid to the underdeveloped and dependent countries, as formulated in Truman's Point Four program. They are thus trying to stem the rising tide of the national liberation movement in order to turn the territories of the Far East and Southeast Asia into U. S. colonies and into military bases for fighting against the Chinese People's Republic and for unleashing a new World War.

TOUR OF JESSUP

Shortly after Jessup's arrival in Tokyo, there was held a conference of U. S. Chiefs of Staff. This conference discussed MacArthur's plan for converting Japan into an advance outpost of the U. S. strategic defenses; that is, of U. S. aggression in the Pacific. In this connection, the conference considered the question of including Japan as a member of the so-called Pacific Union. The U. S. sponsors of this aggressive union intend Japan to play the role of gendarme to strangle the national liberation movement. However, the foremost task of the Japanese militarists is to render aid to the Kuomintang remnants on Taiwan. This help is already being given.

As has been reported in the American press, Jessup spent his time on Taiwan making a thorough revision of Kuomintang finances and in holding a number of secret conferences with the representatives of the Kuomintang clique. Apart from Chiang Kai-shek, Jessup met other puppets and reactionaries, the U. S. agents in Southeast Asia and the Pacific. He also conferred with the heads of the colonial administrations of Britain, France, and the Netherlands, assuring them all of U. S. active help and support.

Speaking at a press conference in Singapore, Jessup said that urgent measures would have to be taken to stem the advance of communism in southeast Asia. And so to halt the further spread of the national liberation movement, the U. S. imperialists are now feverishly searching around for new bases and new agents. They are putting their stakes on the Japanese militarists. They are trying to breathe new life into the political corpse of Chiang Kai-shek, to muster all the reactionary forces of the Far East and Southeast Asia together in an aggressive Pacific Union.

But all these attempts are in vain. Jessup made a broadcast at Singapore in which he made the admission that his stay in Asia had been a disappointment. Ever more energetic action is being taken by the peoples of the colonial and dependent countries against the Anglo-U. S. imperialists and their hirelings and puppets. China has liberated herself, she is an independent country. The imperialists are being thrown out of Viet Nam.

The peoples of Malaya and Burma are rising in a struggle for liberation. The mighty national liberation movement of the peoples of Asia is mounting day by day, and Jessup could not but feel it. The New York Herald Tribune has had to admit that the situation in the Far East is so bad that it would be absurd to suggest that a few arms, aircraft, capital investments, or diplomatic ruses could save the position. That really is so; nothing can help the U. S. imperialists now.

OFFICIAL TRANSLATION BY THE DIVISION OF RESEARCH FOR EUROPE, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF STATE, OF AN ARTICLE APPEARING IN THE SOVIET NEWSPAPER IZVESTIA, MARCH, 3, 1950, CONCERNING AMBASSADOR JESSUP'S RECENT TRIP IN THE FAR EAST

TAKEN FROM IZVESTIA, MARCH 3, 1950

After the conclusion in Bangkok of a conference of American diplomatic representatives in the countries of Asia and the Pacific Ocean, the director of this conference, the representative of the United States Department of State, Jessup, made a trip to India, Pakistan and Afghanistan. The aim of this journey does not present a secret to anyone. Jessup's task is to convince the governments of these countries to enter into a Pacific aggressive block whose creation was planned at the conference at Bangkok.

It must be said that if, before the conference in Bangkok and in the conference itself, Jessup took measures to keep the aggressive intentions of the United States secret, then on arriving in Delhi he himself destroyed the fruits of his previous efforts. It is evident that the unsatisfactory results of the conference in Bangkok and the information received by Jessup that the idea of a Pacific block does not provoke enthusiasm in the countries of Asia, forced him to increase pressure on the ruling circles of India and Pakistan. At a press conference arranged on February 23 in Delhi, Jessup set out to obtain a change of view in Indian public opinion. Jessup brought into action all kinds of means: flattery, and publicizing of the American "assistance to backward regions" and most of all, of course, slanderous fabrications against the U. S. S. R. With these weapons Jessup began a campaign against the opinion which, according to his own admission, had formed itself in India that the U. S. is striving for world domination, that it "carries on a struggle for power" over the peoples of Asia and would like to create numerous new military bases, in particular, in the Nepal and Kashmir. In general, Jessup tried with all his might but he had little success. The imperialistic aggressive character of the policy of the United States throughout the world, and in Asia in particular, is so evident that no hypocritical speeches and anti-communist phillipics could hide it. This is seen according to the reaction to the visits of Jessup to India which has appeared even in the bourgeois Indian press. Here are some of those reactions:

The paper Searchlight: "The supposition that the Americans are welcomed in Southeast Asia as liberators is idiotic and shameless * * *. We have suffered much from colonial mastery and we do not want the start of a war at our doorstep."

The paper Indian News Chronicle: "The accusation of 'Soviet Imperialism' would be more convincing if it was Soviet and not French troops who are occupying Indochina, if it were Soviet and not English forces who are occupying Malaya. The accusation about 'Soviet intervention' would be more convincing if it were Soviet and not American planes given to Chiang Kai-shek who are bombing the civilian population of Shanghai * * * the only foreign domination which is known by the people of Asia—that is, the domination of the Western Powers."

This declaration of an Indian newspaper scores a target right in the face of the American imperialists and their partners in Colonial looting. Mr. Jessup has difficulty in finding people who would openly agree to defend American policy in Asia and as far as touching the secret combinations which are being organized by Jessup in the capitals of Asiatic countries, they will inevitably fall as has often happened with a foreign policy of American ruling circles.

(Signed) OBSERVER.

Ambassador JESSUP. So you see, while I was on this mission, I was attacked by two sources, Izvestia and Senator McCarthy. Anyone who believes in the concept of guilt by association might draw some startling conclusions from this fact. However, I do not believe in the concept of guilt by association.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, at that point, might I ask Mr. Jessup a question?

Senator TYDINGS. Would you like to let him finish and then interrogate him, so we won't be charged with heckling; or would you like to do it now?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I shall bow to the suggestion of the chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. I think he should finish his statement.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you, sir.

As the Attorney General stated in a letter to Seth W. Richardson, Chairman, Loyalty Review Board, Civil Service Commission, dated November 24, 1947, "Guilt by association has never been one of the principles of American jurisprudence."

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I do believe that anyone who, without adequate proof, levels a charge of conscious or ignorant support of communism at a Member of the United States Senate, or at an official of the United States Government, is irresponsible. I have no evidence that Senator McCarthy was motivated by a desire to assist the international Communist movement, even though his words and actions have had that effect. I therefore reject this first possibility concerning the reasons for the insinuations made against me.

A second possibility might be that such an attempt to discredit the position of the United States in its relations with the other free countries of the world was inspired by sheer partisanship. It is hard to believe that anyone holding the position of a Member of either House of Congress of the United States would so subordinate the interests of his country to sheer partisan advantage. I am sure no one of our major parties would do so. I shall therefore pass on to a third possibility.

The third possibility might be that the person bringing these charges had made a careful investigation and was convinced they were true and so serious that they ought to be made public even before the individual concerned had been asked for his side of the story.

Are these charges and insinuations true? Senator McCarthy asserts that I was a "sponsor" of the American-Russian Institute. It is true that my name appears on a list of the sponsors of a dinner given by the American-Russian Institute, but not as a sponsor of the organization itself. The dinner in question was one given on May 7, 1946, on the occasion of the presentation of its first annual award to Franklin D. Roosevelt, which was accepted on behalf of his family. Senator McCarthy pointed out that the names of Howard Fast, Saul Mills, Ella Winter, John Howard Lawson, and Langston Hughes also appeared on this list. He did not point out that approximately 100 people were named on this list of sponsors and that it also included such names as H. V. Kaltenborn; George Fielding Eliot; Dean Christian Gauss, of Princeton; and Mary Emma Wooley, former president of Holyoke. The entire list of them is already in evidence as an exhibit of this committee, and the committee can make its own judgment as to the caliber and variety of the people who are on it. A search of my files has failed to reveal any information concerning this incident, nor do I remember attending the dinner. From approximately February to June of the year 1946 I was seriously ill in a hospital in New York City, so it is unlikely that I attended.

I do recall, however, that I was asked by Mr. William Lancaster, a prominent New York lawyer, to permit my name to be used as a sponsor of a dinner which was to be held on October 19, 1944. I had met Mr. Lancaster particularly through his activities on the Foreign Policy Association, at a time when Gen. Frank McCoy was president and Senator Alexander Smith and I were members of the board. I accepted that invitation in 1944 but was unable to attend the dinner. I shall be glad to make the entire list of approximately 250 sponsors available to the committee.

It is, however, utterly irrelevant to the charges or insinuations that I or anyone else agreed to sponsor dinners of the American-Russian Institute of New York City in 1944 or 1946. There was no reason why a loyal American should not have done so. The Attorney General expressly excluded the American-Russian Institute of New York from the first lists of subversive publications which were published and did not include it until April 21, 1949. The committee may be interested in knowing that I turned down invitations to speak at dinners held by this organization in both 1948 and 1949.

During the course of my life I have participated in many organizations. These organizations have been of a type that one would normally associate with a person of my outlook and interests. They include the American Philosophical Society, founded by Benjamin Franklin; the Foreign Policy Association; the American Society of International Law; the Sigma Phi Society; the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; the American Bar Association; and the American Legion. From 1933 to 1946 I was closely associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations. I am proud of my association with that organization, which was founded by a group of leading businessmen and scholars in Honolulu sometime in the midtwenties for the purpose of increasing knowledge and friendship among the peoples of the Pacific area. Despite the controversy which has occasionally surrounded it, that organization continued to discharge the functions for which it was created. Although there is still much to be done in increasing the knowledge of the American people about countries of the Pacific area, the institute has made a real contribution to the advance which has been made in this field during the last 25 years.

I first became associated with it in 1933, when the late Newton D. Baker was its chairman. It is necessary to explain that the Institute of Pacific Relations is an international organization composed of national councils in countries touching upon or having close interests in the Pacific area. My first contact with the organization was to attend in 1933 one of the periodic international conferences which have been held by the organization. In those meetings leaders of business and banking, former high officials of government, journalists, labor leaders, researchers, and teachers from all of the Pacific countries have met for a common study of the problems of the area. Many of the leading figures whom I have since met in the United Nations I first met through my connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations, including Mrs. Pandit, presently Indian Ambassador to the United States, and Dr. Hu Shih, the great Chinese philosopher who was former Chinese Ambassador in Washington. As indicative of the type of personnel attending these conferences, I should also like to refer to the one held in Hot Springs, Va., in 1945, at which I was chairman of the American delegation and Admiral Thomas C. Hart, later United States Senator from Connecticut, was vice chairman.

I was a member of the board of trustees of the American council of the institute from about 1933 until my resignation because of health and the pressure of other work in 1946. I was chairman of the board of trustees of the American council during 1939 and 1940. I was the chairman of the Pacific council from 1939 to 1942. I have also at various times served as a member of the executive committee of the American council and in 1944 as chairman of the research advisory committee. I was succeeded as chairman of the American council by the late Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University, who, in turn, was succeeded by Robert G. Sproul, president of the University of California, and now by Gerard Swope, honorary president of the General Electric Co. Throughout my connection with the institute, the board of trustees has included leaders of American business, finance, and academic and public life.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would assume that anyone who was interested in inquiring into what I had done and what I have stood for would be interested in my entire life and background. An inquiry into my background would have shown that my ancestors came to this country from England in the seventeenth century and settled on Long Island and in Pennsylvania and New England. My great-grandfather, Judge William Jessup, of Montrose, Pa., was a delegate to the Republican convention of 1860, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. He was chairman of the committee which drafted the platform upon which Lincoln was elected. A great-grandfather on my mother's side, John M. Butler, as a Pennsylvania delegate, cast his vote for Lincoln at that same convention. My father was a lawyer in New York City and a lay leader in the Presbyterian Church. On my mother's side my forebears were Irish and also among the early settlers of this country.

While the Bolshevik revolution was gaining control in Russia, I was serving as a private in the One Hundred and Seventh Infantry in the AEF in France. Shortly after the armistice I returned to Hamilton College in central New York to finish my education, which had been interrupted by my enlistment in the Army.

Now, one hears in these days that some individuals have been misled during their college years to espouse radical doctrines, including the Communist philosophy. If I had developed any radical tendencies in that period, they presumably would have been revealed in my immediately subsequent activities. Actually, on leaving college I took a position as assistant to the president of the First National Bank of Utica, N. Y. I remained with the bank for 2 years, subsequently becoming assistant cashier. During those 2 years in Utica, I was also superintendent of the Sunday school of the First Presbyterian Church and commander of a local post of the American Legion. I am still a member of the American Legion.

In July 1921 I married Lois Walcott Kellogg, whose ancestors were also of English and Dutch pioneer stock and whose mother was a sister of the late Frederic C. Walcott, United States Senator from Connecticut.

During my service in the Army I had developed an overwhelming desire to devote my life to promoting the cause of international peace, and with this purpose in mind I resigned my position at the bank soon after my marriage and entered the Columbia University Law School. At this stage, as later in my life, I had the privilege of securing the advice of the late Elihu Root, who had lived on the campus of Hamilton College and whom I came to know there. After 2 years at Columbia, I transferred to Yale University and received my bachelor of laws degree there in 1924. Immediately afterward I secured a position as assistant to the Solicitor in the Department of State and served in this capacity for a year before going back to Columbia as lecturer in international law. I have been on the Columbia faculty ever since. I am now on leave from my present position as Hamilton Fish professor of international law and diplomacy.

In 1925-26, when the Senate of the United States was considering again the question of American accession to the World Court, I served as personal research assistant to the late Senator Irving Lenroot, of Wisconsin.

In 1929 Mr. Elihu Root was asked by Secretary of State Kellogg to represent the United States at a Conference of Jurists in Geneva, at which the question of United States accession to the Statute of the World Court was considered. Mr. Root, whose views about Russian communism are certainly a matter of public record, invited me to go along with him as his assistant. I am proud to say that I continued to enjoy Mr. Root's confidence and friendship until his death in 1937. Not long after I had accompanied him to the Conference of Jurists, he authorized me to write his biography, and I spent a good deal of my time between 1931 and 1937 on its preparation. The biography was published in 1937, and covers the wide range of American law, business, politics, and diplomacy which filled the life of that very great American statesman and leader both of the American bar and the Republican Party.' In 1930, Mr. Harry Guggenheim, who had just been appointed by President Hoover as United States Ambassador to Cuba, invited me to go to Cuba with him as his personal legal adviser. I served with him there for about 9 months.

After several years back at Columbia, I was called back into public service by Governor, now Senator, Herbert H. Lehman, who in 1943 asked me to come to Washington as Chief of the Division of Training and Personnel in the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Operations which he was then organizing. In December of that year, I served as Assistant Secretary General of the First Conference of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, commonly known as UNRRA, and in 1944 I served in a similar capacity at the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference at Bretton Woods.

Meanwhile, during a period from 1942 to 1945, I was the associate director of the Naval School of Military Government and Administration, established at Columbia University at the request of the United States Navy Department. In that school we trained some 500 officers for service in occupied areas in the Pacific area. During part of that time, I was also serving as consultant to the Navy Department in Washington, as a lecturer at the Army School of Military Government at the University of Virginia, and as a lecturer in the Navy War College at Newport. I had previously lectured at the Navy War College in 1931, 1939, and 1941. I might add that since the war I have also delivered two lectures at the National War College in Washington, and in 1948 was invited to become a member of the National War College staff. I was unable to accept this appointment because of my duties with the Department of State.

Just before the San Francisco Conference in 1945 the then Solicitor General, Mr. Charles Fahy, and I served, together with Mr. Green Hackworth, as members of a committee of jurists who prepared a preliminary draft of the statute of the International Court of Justice. I then served with the United States Delegation to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco as an assistant on judicial organization, and thereafter continued as a consultant to the Department of State. In 1947 I was appointed as the United States member of a UN committee on the codification and development of international law.

On January 3, 1948, I was appointed deputy United States representative on the Interim Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations. On April 14, 1948, my appointment as United States representative to the second special session of the United Nations General Assembly was confirmed by the United States Senate. On June 1, 1948, the Senate confirmed my appointment as deputy United States representative in the United Nations Security Council. On March 1, 1949, my appointments as United States Ambassador at Large and also as United States representative to the third regular session of the General Assembly were confirmed by the Senate, and last September 26 I was again confirmed by the Senate as a United States representative to the fourth regular session of the General Assembly.

So much for the record of my career. It does not read like the record of a Communist, a pro-Communist or a fellow traveler.

At the beginning of my statement I said that the insinuations which had been leveled against me had the effect of impairing the confidence of other government in the United States and its representatives. I made that statement because it would be impossible to reconcile the actions I have taken both in the course of my recent trip to Asia and in the course of the last 2 years with the Department of State with "an unusual affinity for Communist causes." I shall submit to the committee for insertion in the record, a collection of extracts from statements which I have made on the subject of communism. Merely by way of illustration I would like to read from a statement which I made in the Political Committee of the General Assembly last December in the debate on China, and I was speaking, sir, to the chairman of the committee. There I said:

* * * I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will be crystal clear that the United States policy is against imperialism everywhere. We flatly reject it for ourselves and we condemn it when practiced by any other state. We condemn it specifically as revealed in the Soviet-Russian continuation of Tsarist-Russian imperialism in the Far East. Our concern is that China, India, and all Asia be safeguarded against Soviet Russia or any other aggression.

That is the end of the quotation.

I believe that I should be judged not merely by what I have said but also by what I have done. I have already indicated that I have had the honor of representing the United States in the Security Council of the United Nations, in the Interim Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations, and in one special and two regular sessions of the General Assembly. The proceedings of these bodies are public and their records are published.

I shall submit, sir, for insertion in the record, official authenticated copies of sections of the proceedings of the organs of the United Nations in which I acted; and also, copies of statements which I have made to the press, and over the radio in the course of my Asian trips. I have these here for insertion.

Senator TYDINGS. They will be inserted in the record at this point, and I am not sure that you want the whole records, or just sections of it that are pertinent, or that pertain to you?

Ambassador JESSUP. I am quite content, sir, merely to have inserted in the record the excerpts which will be marked as showing particular passages in my statements dealing with the questions of international communism.

Senator TYDINGS. Those excerpts will be inserted in the record at this point, and should the committee desire, the whole record will be available for further examination.

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UN ON OCTOBER 4, 1948

The source of this speech can be found in the official records of the Security Council, three-hundred-and-sixty-first meeting, October 4, 1948 [No. 113], at pages 24-26

The Government of the United States believes in the purposes set forth in article 1 of the Charter and in the principles stated in article 2 of the Charter. It is because we believe in these purposes and principles that we have joined in referring this case to the Security Council. The representative of the U. S. S. R. made a number of references to the desirability of respecting signatures to international agreements. I would like to point out that the Charter of the United Nations is an international agreement and that it bears the signature of the U. S. S. R.

In accordance with our obligations under article 33 of that Charter, the Government of the United States, in agreement with the Governments of France and the United Kingdom has made every effort to remove the threat to the peace created by the U. S. S. R., through direct discussions with the Government of the Soviet Union. The systematic periodic evasion and repudiation of the promises by that Government has made further recourse to these direct discussions futile. Meanwhile, the U. S. S. R. continues, in violation of its obligations under the Charter, to apply force or the threat of force against the Governments of the United States, France, and the United Kingdom.

The representative of the Soviet Union has intimated, as his Government has already alleged, that the illegal U. S. S. R. blockade measures were imposed in retaliation for the lawful steps relating to currency taken by the Western Powers in the western zones but, as I shall explain later to the Security Council when we come to the substance of the question, the U. S. S. R. measures and the motive behind them were revealed some months before the currency measures of the Western Powers were put into effect.

Any such argument on the part of the U. S. S. R. will not succeed in obscuring the actual situation which confronted the Governments of the United States, France, and the United Kingdom and to which I have just referred. Faced with that situation, the three Governments were confronted with the following alternatives. One, they could have supinely bowed to the U. S. S. R. use of force; or two, they could in turn have resorted to force to meet the force of the U. S. S. R.; or three, they could have recognized the fact stated in article 24 of the Charter that the Security Council has "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security * * *".

The Governments of the United States, France, and the United Kingdom chose that third alternative. It was the only alternative consistent with the obligations of a member of the United Nations. It was a recognition of the conviction of the three Governments that the United Nations is and will remain the cornerstone on which the structure of peace must be built.

The Government of the U. S. S. R. has been loud in its protestations of support for the United Nations. If these protestations had been sincere they would have welcomed an opportunity to invoke the assistance of the Security Council in bringing about a termination of the present serious situation in order that all questions and issues between them and the Governments of the United States, France, and the United Kingdom might be solved by peaceful means. The Government of the U. S. S. R. has not taken that course. It repudiates the machinery of pacific settlement established by the United Nations. The U. S. S. R. denies that the United Nations is an organ to which the peoples of the world can turn for help in maintaining international peace and security.

Again, at this point, I would cite to the representative of the U. S. S. R. the great Latin maxim to which he has referred, pacta servanda sunt. The U. S. S. R., in repudiating the machinery of peaceful settlement, and repudiating its obligations under the Charter, is trying to secure for itself unilateral freedom to resort to force. It is evidently unwilling to have the Security Council and the public opinion of the world examine the record in this case. The Government of the United States, acting in accord with the Governments of France and the United Kingdom, is, on the other hand, ready and willing to have this Council of this great world organization examine the records and make its contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security.

If the U. S. S. R. wants peace, let it welcome a resort to the United Nations, the instrument of peace. If the U. S. S. R. intends to support the United Nations, let it accept the established procedures of the United Nations. We, for our part, do intend to support the United Nations, and we are therefore invoking it after the resort to direct discussion with the U. S. S. R. has failed to remove the threat to peace, resorting to it in the hope that the Security Council, in discharge of its responsibilities under the Charter, can make its contribution where other means have failed.

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UN OF OCTOBER 19, 1948, CONCERNING THE BERLIN QUESTION

[Source: Official records of the Security Council, three hundred and sixty-eighth meeting (No. 118), pp. 51-52]

There is an aspect of the blockade measures which I particularly wish to re-emphasize to the members of the Council. As I pointed out before, under a series of international agreements, the four occupying powers undertook responsibilities for the population of the sectors of Berlin committed to their charge. The blockade is a method used by the U. S. S. R. for the expansion of its power in utter disregard of these joint responsibilities and with a callous indifference to the effect of their measures on the population of the western sectors.

I would also remind the Council that it was not until a month after the blockade was imposed that the U. S. S. R. made its offer to supply food and coal to the western sectors. It was thus clear that it originally contemplated putting this pressure on the population, in an attempt to break their spirit and it was only after the success of the airlift was demonstrated that an attempt was made to counter the airlift with an offer of Soviet supplies.

This is the blockade which Mr. Vishinsky says is entirely mythical.

His contention that there is no blockade has been amply disproved by the facts. The Soviet interpretation will, in any event, be somewhat disputed by the 2½ million people who are the direct object of Soviet power politics, who are faced with a choice between accepting the real and potential hardships of the blockade or accepting Soviet political food and political coal and, hence, Soviet and Communist political domination. Their choice has been clear and unmistakable from the beginning. They have chosen hardship and freedom. This is a hopeful sign for the future peace and security of Europe, for the sake of which the four powers undertook the occupation of Germany. Let us not forget that at Potsdam it was declared that:

"The Allies will take in agreement together, now and in the future, the other measures necessary to assure that Germany never again will threaten her neighbors or the peace of the world. It is not the intention of the Allies to destroy or enslave the German people. It is the intention of the Allies that the German people be given the opportunity to prepare for the eventual reconstruction of their life on a democratic and peaceful basis."

That was agreed at Potsdam. The Government of the Soviet Union, using the harsh instrument of the blockade, has indeed chosen a strange way in Berlin to live up to its agreement to democratize German political life. Thanks to the airlift and to the support given to it by the Berliners, the Government of the Soviet Union has not succeeded in its purpose.

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UN ON OCTOBER 25, 1948, CONCERNING THE BERLIN QUESTION

[Source: Official records of the Security Council, three hundred and seventy-second meeting (No. 120), pp. 11-13]

I have listened in vain, as he was speaking, for any suggestion in his remarks that he too, like the representatives of the three western Governments, was approaching this draft resolution in a spirit of accommodation, in an effort to settle the problem of Berlin. On the contrary, he flatfootedly asserted that they would continue the threat of their blockade measures until the mark of the Soviet Zone was established as the sole currency, not by free agreement but under Soviet dictation.

The main issues which are before the Security Council have been made very clear in our proceedings. A resolution, which was eminently fair, has been put before us through the efforts of the six Governments which led to its formulation. It seems to me that we must now ask what the Soviet Union wants.

Does the Soviet Union want a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers to discuss Berlin, or the unification of Germany which has always been, and still is, the aim of the three western Governments, or to discuss the questions of Germany as a whole? The U. S. S. R. Government can have such a meeting without the threat of force. We have told them that before. We repeat that promise. We have indicated our acceptance of the principle in our approval of the draft resolution which is before us.

Does the Soviet Union want the Soviet zone mark established as the sole currency in Berlin under four-power control, as Premier Stalin himself suggested? They can have that without maintaining a blockade. We have told them so before, and we tell them so again.

Does the Soviet Union want assurance that we do not want to use the four-power control of the currency in Berlin to control the general economy of the Soviet zone outside Berlin? They can have such assurance without threat or violence. We have made that clear before. We make it clear again.

Does the Soviet Union want guarantees to prevent the use of transport facilities for black-market operations in currency in Berlin? They can have such guarantees without resorting to duress. Again, it is a matter which we have told them before we would do, and we are ready to say so again. If the U. S. S. R. Government will remove all the restrictions imposed on transportation, communications and commerce, subsequent to March 30, 1948, between the western zones and Berlin, the United States Government will undertake to provide the safeguards for the western mark B and the eastern mark of the Soviet zone and presented by the United States representative during the course of the Berlin discussions.

As I understood the representative of the Soviet Union in his remarks a few moments ago, he argued that the blockade measures which have been imposed by the U. S. S. R. were imposed to protect the economy of the Soviet zone against the western mark. However, as I have had occasion to point out to the Security Council before (three hundred sixty-third meeting), the blockade measures began in January, reached a focal point on March 30, and the western mark was not introduced until June 24. I think it necessary to point out again that the matter or restrictions on traffic has nothing to do with the question of safeguards to prevent movements of currency. The removal of the blockade restrictions imposed upon land and water communications by the U. S. S. R. would restore the normal channels of supply and transport which are now confined to the airlift. In effect, this would merely substitute the normal ground means of transport for the present air means.

The United States never intended to use currency as a means of adversely affecting the economy of the Soviet zone. The objective of currency reform is to improve economic life and not to destroy it. If, on the other hand, the Soviet Union wants to drive us out of Berlin—where we have an acknowledged right to be—that result they cannot get by maintaining their threat to the peace. We have stated that position over and over again, and that simple fact should now be clear. If the U. S. S. R. wants us to work out the technical details of the first four questions I put, under the duress of the maintenance of the blockade measures, instead of through the process of free negotiation, again the answer to the question is "No." In short, the Government of the Soviet Union can obtain all it says that it wants without maintaining the blockade. With the blockade, it can get neither what it says it wants nor what its actions seem to suggest it actually does want. It is the blockade which is the barrier, and it is the U. S. S. R. which can lift the blockade.

Even now, despite the fact that the Soviet Union has seen fit to indicate that it intends to block the efforts of the Security Council of the United Nations, if it wishes to end the threat to the peace which it created, the Berlin question can be settled on the basis of the program suggested in the draft resolution which is now before the Security Council. The three western Governments have indicated their acceptance of the principles contained in that resolution. If the Government of the U. S. S. R. would give reciprocal assurances that that program suggested in that resolution would be carried out, it can be done.

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL ON JANUARY 11, 1949

[Source: Official records of the Security Council, three-hundred-and-ninety-eighth meeting (No. 2), pp. 9-10]

When this question of Indonesia was being discussed in the Security Council in Paris, the Soviet Union, speaking both through its own representative and through the representative of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, followed its familiar procedure of endeavoring to cloak its own improper actions by seeking to place the blame on someone else. The representative of the U. S. S. R. (three hundred and ninety-first meeting) and the representative of the Ukrainian SSR (three hundred ninety-third meeting) both insinuated that the Government of the United States was in some way responsible for the action of the Netherlands in resorting to hostilities against the Indonesian Republic. It thus becomes necessary to point out again certain salient facts.

In the first place, it was the Government of the United States which took the initiative in convening an urgent meeting of the Security Council when it became apparent that the Netherlands was resorting to military action in Indonesia (8/1128). It was the Government of the U. S. S. R. which endeavored to prevent the Security Council from acting promptly by insisting that the Council meeting should be deferred for 3 days. Every other member of the Council attended the three hundred eighty-seventh meeting on December 20 except the two Soviet representatives.

The United States also took the initiative, in conjunction with the representatives of Colombia and Syria, in proposing a resolution (8/1142) to the Security Council to deal with the situation, but the U. S. S. R. representative refused to support this resolution (three hundred ninety-second meeting). He later tried to cover up this further attempt to block Security Council action by introducing a resolution of his own (8/1148 and 8/1148/Corr. 1) which he knew could not be adopted by the Council. More fundamental, however, than these obstructionist tactics in the Security Council, is the fact that the U. S. S. R. is fundamentally opposed to the Government of the Republic of Indonesia and has itself, through the Communist Party, which is, of course, its mouthpiece throughout the world, sought to undermine and overthrow this Government.

No one doubts that the Communists in Indonesia like the Communists throughout the world are responsive to and act in accordance with instructions from Moscow. The Communist revolt against the government of President Soekarno and Premier Hatta was itself an effort on the part of the Government of the U. S. S. R. to overthrow the Indonesian Republic. Furthermore, when the resumption of hostilities by the Netherlands Government against the Indonesian Republic took place, the official Communist Party line, as printed in the Communist press, instead of deploring this action, openly gloried that it was a punishment for the government of President Soekarno and Premier Hatta, which had successfully put down a Communist revolt.

The Communist line which, I repeat once more, means the line of the Soviet Government, accused that distinguished statesman of the Indonesian Republic, Mr. Hatta, of being a traitor to his country. At the very time when editorials were appearing to this effect in the Communist Party organs in Paris, the U. S. S. R. representative on the Security Council sought to cover up the actual policy of his Government by identifying himself with the Council's endeavors to secure the release of Mr. Hatta and other political prisoners (ninety-second meeting).

These are the facts, which are on the record and known to the world, and which reveal that the Government of the U. S. S. R. is not interested in supporting the Government of the Indonesian Republic or in restoring peace to Indonesia. On the contrary, it is following its familiar tactics which it has used in Korea, in Greece, in Berlin, and again, now, in Indonesia, and which have been described in the speeches of many representatives at the last session of the General Assembly—namely, seeking to overthrow a lawful democratic government and to undermine its authority. But the U. S. S. R. does not want an independent Indonesia; it wants an Indonesia under the domination and control of a Communist minority taking its orders from Moscow. Anywhere in the world when a Communist government climbs in through the window, independence is kicked out of the door.

The Government of the United States, on the contrary, has viewed with admiration the efforts of the Indonesian people, both in the Republic and elsewhere, to gain their independence, and it has steadfastly sought to support them.

The Government of the United States still takes that position, and it is for this reason that it has taken the lead in endeavoring in the Security Council and in the Committee of Good Offices to bring about a peaceful adjustment of the difficulties between the Indonesian Republic and the Netherlands Government, and to establish the United States of Indonesia as one of the fully sovereign and independent peoples of the world.

ANNEX B

EXCERPTS FROM SPEECH BEFORE NATIONAL FARM INSTITUTE, FEBRUARY 18, 1949

The North Atlantic Pact does not by-pass the United Nations. It is not a substitute for the United Nations. It will not weaken the United Nations.

If we did not intend to work through the United Nations we could boycott the Interim Committee or "Little Assembly." The Soviet Union has boycotted it.

If we did not intend to work through the United Nations we could have acted alone in Korea. Instead we took the matter to the United Nations, helped a United Nations Commission supervise elections in our zone and recognized the Korean Government only after the United Nations General Assembly had adopted a resolution which acknowledged that this was a proper thing to do. The Soviet Union would not let the Ukraine accept a place on the Korean Commission. It would not let the Commission operate in the Soviet-occupation zone. It supports a puppet Government in the northern part of Korea. Three days ago in the Security Council, the Soviet representative was repeating all their old arguments about Korea, in total disregard of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly.

If we did not intend to work through the United Nations, we would not have taken the Berlin case to the Security Council. The Soviet Union refused to admit that the United Nations or any organ of it could deal with the case. When the Security Council discussed the question, Vishinsky sat in sulky silence. When the Security Council voted, Vishinsky vetoed.

We, the United States cooperate in all the 13 specialized agencies of the United Nations. The Soviet Union joined only three of them; and this week, I regret to say, the Soviet Union withdrew from one of those three—the World Health Organization.

Look at the records of United Nations meetings—General Assembly, Security Council, Economic and Social Council, Trusteeship Council, Commissions and Committees—dealing with atomic energy, disarmament, the struggle for human rights, the struggle for peace in Indonesia, for peace in Palestine, for peace in Kashmir, for peace in the Balkans, and many other subjects, and you will find the proofs of United States cooperation in the work of the United Nations. The record is long, our record is good. No American need be ashamed of the record. Every American should be proud of it.

* * * I do not hesitate to say that the attitude of the Soviet Union is making it more difficult for the United Nations to do its job. The U. S. S. R. has not yet begun to cooperate with the United Nations. Behind its iron curtain it is manufacturing fear. Out in the open we along with 51 other countries are building peace. Make no mistake about it, we are going to win. But it is not going to be an easy job or a short one. Peace is not merely the end of a war. Peace has to be made and it also has to be kept. Nobody in the democratic world can ever be unemployed if he or she works for peace. You can work on it full time or part time—as a Government official or as a citizen. But we can't just sit around under a tree and expect peace to drop in our lap like a ripe piece of fruit.

One result of the Soviet attitude and policy has been to create and maintain a state of tension. That state of tension is, of course, greatest in those parts of the world which are closest to the Soviet Union and the Red Army. It is an incontestable and striking fact that in the United Nations General Assembly in Paris, the other countries of the world distrusted Soviet armaments and took comfort in American armaments. In the votes on resolutions dealing with atomic energy and disarmament they showed that this is the way they feel. We deserve that confidence because we have no aggressive intent. We must and we shall continue to deserve it. * * *

* * * What we have done and are doing is to join in a process of bringing the nations of the world closer together—in the United Nations itself and in groups of states which have common interests. So long as the smaller groups operate within the United Nations, inspired by its purposes and principles, we are moving forward. I don't believe any of us here want to move in any other direction. We may disagree among ourselves from time to time on the best road to take—Thank God we live in a country where we are free to disagree—but I think we will always agree on the objective which is peace and freedom.

In seeking that objective we will cooperate with every other country which is willing to act in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations. That includes the Soviet Union. We do not want any country to underestimate the seriousness with which we intend to support the peace system for which the United Nations stands. That, too, includes the Soviet Union.

"The primary purpose of these agreements," said President Truman, referring to the Rio and North Atlantic Pacts, "is to provide unmistakable proof of the joint determination of the free countries to resist armed attack from any quarter. Each country participating in these arrangements must contribute all it can to the common defense.

"If we can make it sufficiently clear, in advance, that any armed attack affecting our national security would be met with overwhelming force, the armed attack might never occur."

It would also be a great mistake for the Soviet Union or any other country to think that we are hoeing a lone row. We are using modern machinery to harvest the biggest crop in the world and there are more than 50 nations helping us. Any other country that wishes to join in the job is welcome. If they join with the rest of us, they will have the same satisfaction in looking in their pay envelopes and finding each week, each month, each year that peace pays and that it pays to work for it.

EXCERPT FROM SPEECH BEFORE THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE UNITED NATIONS, MARCH 12, 1949

Although the issues as they presented themselves to the two assemblies were not precisely comparable, of course, the striking isolation of the negative six votes of the Soviet bloc on issue after issue was clearly apparent. This development was taken to mean different things by various observers. One implication of this polarization, I believe, was that the major cleavage could no longer be looked upon merely as a conflict between the Soviet Union and the United States, nor as a conflict between the east and the west. It had become a cleavage between the Soviet bloc and the rest of the United Nations.

This cleavage represents a victory for no one. The interests of the United States are better served by a truly United Nations, than by one in which a dangerous chasm isolates an important part of the world. It was not our purpose to create this isolation, even for an illusory short-range tactical advantage; it was rather the inflexible and uncooperative character of the Soviet attitudes toward such issues as disarmament and the control of atomic energy which drove the wedge between the Soviet Union and the majority of the United Nations.

And those of you who were at Paris will recall that it was no "mechanical majority," as it has sometimes been called in propaganda. It is much more accurate to speak of a "mechanical minority." Within the majority, the democratic processes of accommodation, compromise, give-and-take, were operative. Perhaps it could with more justice be said that the United States underfulfilled its responsibilities of leadership than that it exercised an unduly dominant influence. However, I venture to assert that the action of the United States Delegation at the Paris Assembly fully recognized the responsibilities which rest upon this country.

In time, one may hope that the Soviet Union, influenced by this example of the successful accommodation of a variety of interests and viewpoints within the majority group, will come to appreciate more highly the mutual advantage of wholehearted participation in the work and deliberations of the United Nations. But in the meantime, this crystallization has had the effect of demonstrating that even under present adverse circumstances the United Nations can perform essential functions.

"For the very reason that the North Atlantic Treaty is subject to and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, it cannot constitute a threat to any other state whose policies and actions are also in conformity with the subject to that same Charter.

"It would be less than frank, however, to avoid stating the fact that the conclusion of this treaty has resulted from the fears which the policy of the Soviet Union has created.

"It is impossible to overlook the fundamental cleavage in the basic theory of the Soviet Union on the one hand and of the United States on the other. The Soviet Union officially stands on the proposition that war is inevitable.

"The Soviet Union is officially committed to a philosophy of conflict, which is alien to our thinking and to our ideals. Premier Stalin likes to quote the following passage from Lenin:

"We live * * * not only in a state but in a system of states, and the existence of the Soviet Republic side by side with the imperialist states for a long time is unthinkable. In the end either one or the other will conquer. And until that end comes, a series of the most terrible collisions between the Soviet Republic and the bourgeois states is inevitable."

"We also believe that we live in a system of states, but from this premise is drawn the opposite conclusion. Our conclusion is that it is unthinkable that the members of that system of states should not be able to find ways to live in peace with each other."

"* * * Unlike the Soviet Union, we do not want more territory or subject peoples."

"* * * The Soviet Union refuses to cooperate in improving the welfare of mankind and in insuring international peace and security."

"This opposition is not only obstructive but aggressively so. It not only is a challenge to the beliefs and aspirations of the free peoples but also a threat to their security and welfare. It is a challenge that must taken up, a threat that must be countered. There is no reason for hysteria. There is need for calm determination.

"Let us frankly acknowledge that many of the actions and much of the effort of the United States in international affairs in recent months have been directed toward countering the clear threat to ourselves and other free peoples. We could not have done otherwise without betraying all that we stand for."

"The United States has never been afraid to face the future. Times of peace and prosperity as well as those of danger and distress need forethought. If we did not plan ahead for peace, we would be less likely to reach the goal and less likely to retain the gains when they are made. It is Communist, and not American doctrine, that enmity and war are inevitable.

"Consistent with our faith and with our word pledged through the ratification of the United Nations Charter, we have cooperated in the efforts of the United Nations to work toward disarmament. Little progress has yet been made because the Soviet Union has refused to accept the conclusions of the majority in the Commission for Conventional Armaments regarding the essential features of an effective plan of regulation. The Soviet Union tried to shift the blame for this lack of progress, but the other members recognized their proposals as a mere propaganda maneuver and rejected them."

"One of the plain facts in the present situation is that the Soviet Union is contemptuous of weakness but respects strength. It was the strength of the west which led the Soviet Union to abandon the Berlin blockade and to make at least some moves toward agreement in the recent meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris. Our strength is made up of unity with the free peoples of the world; of industrial power; of military power; and of calm confidence in the soundness of our domestic system and our peaceful foreign policy."

"We had revealed that strength in several ways. There was the Berlin airlift. That great operation saved the people of Berlin from the starvation with which the Berlin blockade threatened them. I want to pay tribute to the men who organized it and operated it."

"Then there was the steady progress toward the organization of a Western German Government. Here the basic unity of purpose and of policy between France, the United Kingdom, and the United States was a most potent factor. That is a unity we must preserve, strengthen, and extend."

"We have other friends and allies for peace in all parts of the world. We are closely bound to our good neighbors south of the Rio Grande and have formalized that unity in the defensive pact of Rio de Janeiro, which was concluded within the framework of the United Nations Charter. We have similarly concluded the North Atlantic Treaty with eleven nations who form the North Atlantic community, again acting in conformity with the Charter. We are working closely with other members of the United Nations for our mutual benefit and strength to promote the common purpose of maintaining peace and the good life."

"These close associations are not and cannot be the result of domination and dictation. The Soviet Union believes in that method as did Hitler. We do not believe in it. There are always differences of opinion between the closest of friends. Those differences can be resolved by mutual understanding and accommodation because the common purpose is basic. When the Soviet Union comes to realize the soundness of that common purpose and the method of achieving it we stand ready to work equally with them. It must not be forgotten that we are as friendly to the Russian people as to other people. We are not trying to conquer Russia. We are not rivals for the domination of the world because we do not want to dominate the world. If their government will abandon the dream of world domination which throughout history has destroyed such blind dreamers, a full share in international cooperation will be theirs."

"The menace of aggressive Communism to the liberties and rights of free peoples is the immediate and pressing problem that must be overcome. We are confident that the concerted effort of the free nations will succeed in overcoming it. But we are well aware that this is not the only problem, nor in the long perspective of history perhaps, the most significant. We will not hesitate to do what is necessary to help the free nations preserve their independence and integrity."

EXCERPTS FROM "THE CONQUERING MARCH OF AN IDEA," ADDRESS DELIVERED BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP TO THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, ST. LOUIS, SEPTEMBER 6, 1940

"A very large part of international affairs and thus of the process of international accommodation concerns the relations between legal persons known as states. This is necessarily so. But it is no longer novel for the particular interest of the individual human being to break through the mass of interstate relationships."

"The Communists pervert the process by seeking to subvert governments, alleging an interest in the common man whom they blatantly ignore when they succeed in imposing the power of their small elite governing class."

"On the other hand, in countries shrouded by an iron curtain, or we may well say curtailed by an iron shroud, it is not news that an individual is deprived of life or liberty, is imprisoned and tortured. This is not novel; it is normal to their unhappy way of life. In that way of life the individual is nothing; the state, embodied in a small ruling clique, is everything. Even if an atrocity were news in our sense of the term, it could not be printed in those countries because there is no free press. These denials of the inherent rights of the human being reach the press only when they pierce the veil and reach the free world outside."

EXCERPTS FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN COMMITTEE ONE ON NOVEMBER 28, 1949, CONCERNING CHINA

[Source: United States Delegation press release No. 767; November 27, 1949]

EXCERPTS FROM STATEMENT IN THE POLITICAL COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, NOVEMBER 28, 1949, SUBJECT: CHINA

A charge by one member of the United Nations that another member is violating both a treaty and the Charter of the United Nations is a matter of serious concern to us all. This is particularly true in the present case because the alleged violation includes the charge of assisting in attempting the violent overthrow of a recognized government; and, most of all, because both China and the Soviet Union, as permanent members of the Security Council, are pledged to fulfill special responsibilities in maintaining international peace and security.

A due regard for the normal deliberative processes of the United Nations as well as for the opinion of the world community would have dictated that the member against which the charges have been leveled should make some response to them and should place its side of the case before this committee. We regret that it has not seen fit to do so and that the Soviet delegation and also the delegations of other eastern European states have refused to participate in the consideration of this case.

Equally serious although not equally well documented charges were made in this Assembly by the U. S. S. R. against the United States and United Kingdom in the discussion of the resolution on the essentials of peace just concluded in this committee. Both my delegation and that of the United Kingdom not only voted in favor of placing that item on the agenda for discussion and hearing but took their full part in the debate in answering the charges of the Soviet Union. In this we were fulfilling our duty to the United Nations in helping to make the Assembly, as Secretary of State Acheson in his opening speech in the Assembly urged that it should be, "a forum in which the international public interest can be fully expressed" through the participation of all members. Had we not done so—had we adopted the Soviet tactics and refused to participate—it is not difficult to imagine the inferences which the Soviet delegation would have drawn as to the truth of those charges made against us.

Unfortunately, the members of the United Nations must recall previous instances in which the Soviet Union adopted the same procedure of refusing to participate when an item which it regarded as unpleasant or disagreeable to it was brought up for consideration.

The United States cannot but deplore this selective participation in the work of the United Nations. Such an attitude seems the more regrettable when viewed in the light of the overwhelming judgment of this committee given only last Friday that one of "the essentials of peace" is full participation in this Organization, a judgment expressed by the terms of the resolution in a specific call upon "every member to participate fully in the work of the United Nations." The Soviet delegation, it will be recalled, explained its vote of abstention on this provision on the ground that it was already binding upon all members by the terms of the Charter.

During the past few weeks this Committee has been engaged in a sobering discussion of what constitutes the essentials of peace. Although the debate was initiated by the Soviet Union through an attack upon the western powers, the discussion soon became focused, as every consideration of the requirements of peace necessarily must, on the foreign policies and measures of the Soviet Union itself. In that debate the representatives of countries from all areas of the world, including one courageous example from eastern Europe itself, voiced the same basic concern and urged the same basic solution—the concern arising from what the distinguished delegate of Brazil termed the "unbridled imperialistic encroachments" of the Soviet Union, and the solution to be found in the fulfillment in good faith of the pledges and principles of the Charter.

The general charges made against the policies and activities of the U. S. S. R. in that debate find a further specific application in the complaint which the Chinese delegation has now laid before us. Although these charges focus upon one geographic area, the fundamental problem is the same. It is a problem of maintaining an independent, unified, and free country against what are charged to be aggressive encroachments of a foreign power.

At the time of the Russian occupation of Manchuria at the turn of the present century, the United States, in a note sent to the Russians and to other interested governments, exerted its influence to maintain "China's territorial and administrative entity." Shortly thereafter Russian pressure for a privileged position in Manchuria brought a similar response from my Government. In the succeeding years in the clashes between competing Russian and Japanese imperialisms in north China, the United States sought repeatedly to establish respect for China's integrity as the standard of conduct in the relations of these and all other countries with China.

United States aid to China during the last war and United States efforts in the postwar period, to bring about internal peace and to end the civil war, are well known. So, too, is United States insistence over Soviet objection that China be included as one of the great powers in the prosecution of the war and the organization of peace—leading to her role as one of the sponsoring powers of the United Nations at San Francisco, and one of the permanent members of the Security Council.

The continuing concern of my Government for the independence of China was recently reflected in an official statement issued August 5, calling attention to dangers of Soviet Russian imperialism in the Far East, reaffirming the basic principles which have traditionally guided United States policy and emphasizing the opposition of the United States to the "subjection of China to any foreign power" and to its "dismemberment by any foreign power, whether by open or clandestine means."

The evidence presented by the representative of China, and other reports that have come to the attention of my Government, raise most serious questions as to whether certain provisions of the Yalta agreement have in fact been carried out properly and in good faith by the Soviet Union during the last 4 years. Three months ago my Government officially called attention to the fact that Soviet Russian demands upon the Chinese Government in connection with the negotiation of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of 1945 exceeded the provisions of the Yalta agreement. Some of the evidence and of the reports create grave cause for concern that groundwork is in fact once again being laid for a further Russian attempt to dismember China.

The United Nations must be alert to see that the domination of China by one totalitarian power has not been displaced only to make way for the subjugation of that country to any other imperialism. The common efforts of the United Nations in rescuing China and Japan from the grasp of imperialist and militarist power must not be nullified by acquiescence in new imperialist conquest by more subtle devices than outright war.

"Because Soviet Russia has embarked upon the new international Communist imperialism, there is a tendency among cynics today to say that while we have fought and won a war the victory has availed us nothing. It is the common phrase that we are 'losing the peace.' Our freedom is not yet secure. But had we not won the war we would not be in a position today to carry on our fight to make freedom the common property of all mankind."

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP IN COMMITTEE ONE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, ON THE CHINESE SITUATION, DECEMBER 6, 1949

[Source: United States Delegation press release No. 771, December 6, 1949]

* * * I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will be crystal clear that the United States policy is against imperialism everywhere. We flatly reject it for ourselves and we condemn it when practiced by any other state. We condemn it specifically as revealed in the Soviet-Russian continuation of Tsarist-Russian imperialism in the Far East. Our concern is that China, India, and all Asia be safeguarded against Soviet Russia or any other aggression.

We believe that the joint resolution which we have cosponsored, supplemented by the Philippine amendment to the three-power resolution, is the most effective contribution the United Nations at this stage can make toward accomplishing this purpose. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we are certain that the adoption of such resolutions on the part of this committee would not be misunderstood by the representatives of the cominform states. It is true that they have remained silent in this committee during the current debate, but they have listened to all our discussions and they must therefore understand without any misunderstanding that the occasion of the joint draft resolution which my delegation has had the honor to cosponsor, is Soviet Russian action in the Far East which raises acute fears for the safety, independence, and integrity of China. Those of us, Mr. Chairman, who share those fears should unite our voices and our acts.

TEXT OF STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP TO THE FOURTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY, PLENARY SESSION, DECEMBER 7, 1949

Mr. Jessup (United States of America). One thing which stood out clearly in the debates in the First Committee on the item which now engages our attention was the strong friendship of the overwhelming majority of nations for China and their concern for its welfare and the welfare of the people of China. Those debates also revealed the determination of the overwhelming majority of the delegations represented, as shown in the adoption of the resolution on the promotion of the stability of international relations in the Far East, to do their part to maintain China's integrity and independence.

In sharp contrast to that attitude of the vast majority of the delegations in the First Committee was the attitude of the delegation of the Soviet Union and of the small group of delegations following its lead. The attitude of those delegations was the direct opposite of that which I have described. That attitude strengthens the justified suspicions of other nations regarding the Soviet policy and intentions toward China. That attitude revealed especially two things: First, a callous disregard for the interests of China and the Chinese people; and secondly, a renewed indication of the most regrettable Soviet unwillingness to co-operate in the work of the United Nations and to carry into effect the principles of our Charter. I think it is appropriate to review the actions of the delegation of the Soviet Union on the item which we are now considering.

The first action which it took was to oppose the placing of this item on the agenda, thus seeking to deprive the General Assembly of an opportunity even to study the matter. The second action, which it has repeated today, was an attempt to deny the right of the duly accredited representative of China to speak in the General Assembly. I think it has been the experience of all of us that the delegation of the Soviet Union is not unaware of the existence of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly. It has, on frequent occasions, invoked those rules.

If it had chosen, on this occasion, to abide by our rules of procedure, it would have found in rule 25 the exact way in which this point might have been raised in a regular fashion. It would have found in rule 25 that:

"Any representative to whose admission a Member has made objection shall be seated provisionally with the same rights as other representatives, until the Credentials Committee has reported and the General Assembly has given its decision."

The Soviet Union did not choose to follow the procedure laid down in our rules.

In the third place, the Soviet Union has failed to respond to the expressed willingness of the Chinese delegation to refer certain questions involved in this case to the International Court of Justice. In the fourth place, the Soviet Union refused to participate in the debates in the First Committee and, this afternoon, has said that it refuses to participate in the debates in this plenary meeting of the General Assembly.

I claim no special virtue for the policy of my Government, but I cite examples as the normal attitude of most Members of the United Nations. I refer to the question of willingness to discuss items on the agenda.

The Soviet Union placed on the agenda an item containing slanderous attacks upon the United Kingdom and the United States. Those attacks, the charges made therein, were repudiated, after full discussion, by a vote of fifty-three Members of this Assembly. But, in the first instance, when we were asked to consider placing this item on the agenda, our delegation and the delegation of the United Kingdom made no objection to the consideration of the item, because we believe that this is the forum in which charges, no matter how unfounded, should be discussed.

I would also say that my Government has not been afraid to have the record of United States policy in China in recent years examined by the world. The official United States publication telling this story was referred to by Mr. Vyshinsky himself, who stated that its frankness must be admired. If the Soviet Union admires frankness and open discussion of national policies, why does it not practice frankness? Why does it not publish or produce before the General Assembly the text of the Barter Agreement which the representative of China reported that the Soviet Union had concluded with the local authorities in Manchuria, an Agreement under which the Soviet Union sought an arrangement to take away from the people of China the food and other products of Manchuria which are essential to Chinese recovery? Why does it not publish or produce before the General Assembly the text of the reported monopolistic agreement which it has concluded for the exploitation of the resources of Manchuria? Why does it not publish or produce before this Assembly the text of the reported agreement under which it seeks to control, for fifty years, the monopolistic exploitation of the natural resources of Sinkiang? Why does it not publish or lay before us a record of any other such agreements for special rights and privileges which it may now be seeking to obtain or which it has already obtained in China?

If the Soviet Union had not been afraid to publish the facts concerning its policies and practices in the Far East, we could have had a basis on which to decide whether or not we are mistaken in our well-founded conclusions that the Soviet Russian policy in China today is part of a continuous story, a story which began in the days of Tsarist Russian imperialism and which still is characterized by the search for special monopolistic privileges, by encroachments and by attempted dismemberment of China.

Let us look at the votes of the Soviet Union delegation on the resolutions which came before the First Committee. The vote on the resolution to promote the stability of international relations in the Far East is most revealing. When this question was put to the vote, the Polish delegation—which, it is fair to say, more often than not reflects the view of the Soviet Union delegation—called for a separate vote on the title. And let me repeat the title: "to promote the stability of international relations in the Far East". Five negative votes were cast against the title. One can interpret those five negative votes only to mean the opposition of five delegations to stability in the Far East. Perhaps we should not be surprised, for such an attitude is indeed in accordance with their communistic creed of promoting turmoil and unrest. The five negative votes on the rest of the resolution to promote the stability of international relations in the Far East must raise more questions in our minds:

Can it be that the Soviet Union does not intend or wish to respect the political independence of China? Can it be that the Soviet Union does not intend or wish to respect the right of the Chinese people freely to choose their own political institutions or to maintain a government independent of foreign control? Do they not intend or wish to respect their treaties relating to China? Do they not intend or wish to refrain from seeking spheres of influence or the creation of puppet regimes, or from obtaining special monopoly rights in China?

These are the things which are set forth in this resolution which we call upon all States to adopt. These are the principles which are opposed by the Soviet Union delegation, and the four other delegations.

In my opening statement before the First Committee, I said that the failure to endorse this resolution might well be interpreted as indicating an intention to profit by the present situation in China for purposes of imperialist aggrandisement. What other conclusion can the world draw from the five votes cast against these fundamental principles?

Let us look on the affirmative side at the merits of this resolution. The very fact of the Soviet opposition attests indeed to its importance. That opposition is conclusive proof that this resolution is not, as one representative feared in his statement in the First Committee, a mere "song to the moon." The Soviet opposition is proof that the Soviet Union understands perfectly that this resolution, far from condoning the past actions of Soviet Russia in China, is occasioned by those very actions and reflects the acute fears of the international community of this Soviet Russian continuation of Czarist Russian imperialism in the Far East. This resolution is addressed to the real root of the international problem, to the real concern that the international community has regarding this situation.

The representative of Chile pointed out in the First Committee that the General Assembly is not now dealing with the question of the justice or injustice of the civil strife now raging in China. This resolution does not seek to deal with that issue. It does deal in an integral manner with the international aspects of this problem. This resolution is constructive because it is forward-looking. While it does not ignore the past, it does not content itself with a mere sifting of past events. It is a clear statement of the principles to which all nations must adhere at all times.

The second resolution which has been reported to the General Assembly from the First Committee is one in regard to which I do not intend to rehearse the discussions that took place in the Committee. These discussions have already been referred to. It is clear that, in the course of those discussions, certain misunderstandings arose among various delegations.

I have listened with interest to the suggestion just advanced by the representative of Ecuador, proposing, on behalf of the three sponsors of the original resolution, a new amendment which would incorporate a certain additional thought in their joint resolution. While it is true that this amendment does not go the whole way to meet the difficulties to which we called attention in the First Committee, we do feel that it goes part of the way, and we shall accordingly vote for the resolution introduced by Cuba, Ecuador and Peru if this amendment is adopted and incorporated in it.

In my statement before the First Committee, I pointed out that the conscience of the world has expressed itself in the past in multipartite declarations which have played a real part in the history of China's struggle for its integrity. The reality of these declarations has been proved, even though from time to time they have been flouted by aggressors. The enunciation by the Government of the United States in 1900 of the policy of promoting the maintenance of the independence and integrity of China served as a restraining influence on the conduct of all the powers in the ensuing years, despite the continuance of unsettled conditions in China. These principles were written into the Nine Power Treaty of 1922, which the representative of China himself stated gave to his country the opportunity for constructive development.

If the nations of the world had not, during the past fifty years, recorded these self-denying ordinances the devouring waves of Russian and Japanese imperialism might well have totally engulfed China. The proper place today for the reaffirmation of these principles is the General Assembly of the United Nations. The vote in the First Committee shows that the conscience of the world will again speak in the interests of China and the people of China.

I wish to point out also that the debate on the item which we are now considering is in reality a continuation of the debate which resulted in the adoption of the resolution on essentials of peace by a vote of 53 Members of the United Nations. The general charges made against the policies and activities of the Soviet Union in that debate find a further specific application in the matter we are now considering. Although our attention is now focussed upon one geographic area, the fundamental problem is unchanged. It is the problem of maintaining an independent, unified and free country against the aggressive encroachments of a foreign power. The resolution on essentials of peace applies to China as well as to all other parts of the world. That resolution and the resolution which is now before us to promote the stability of international relations in the Far East are closely linked. Together they constitute a code of conduct regarding the Far East. The United States pledges itself to abide by that code of conduct, and it expects all other nations to do likewise.

In joining with other delegations in sponsoring the resolution on the stability of international relations in the Far East the paramount consideration of my delegation and of my Government has been to promote the interests of the people of China. This is not a new policy of the United States. The record shows that this has consistently been our policy. That policy has received only one challenge, and that challenge was made by Mr. Vyshinsky when he was seeking to prevent the General Assembly from discharging its duty to discuss this item which had been placed on the agenda. Mr. Vyshinsky then charged that the proposal of this item was instigated by the United States for imperialistic reasons. It was not instigated by the United States. Moreover, the United States, unlike the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, has no imperialistic designs on China.

I wonder where are the evidences of United States imperialism in China which Mr. Vyshinsky may have had in mind. Surely they are not monopolistic agreements of the type which the Soviet Union has been concluding in China, for the United States has neither sought nor obtained such rights. I do not hesitate to say that the Chinese people will agree that there is nothing imperialistic in the continuation of our historic policy of aiding Chinese students and scholars by the allocation in recent years of 200 million dollars for the programme of exchanging students and teachers between the United States and China. I do not think that the Chinese people believe that it was a sign of American imperialism to distribute some 400,000 tons of rice and 180,000 tons of wheat and flour in Shanghai and Canton during the past two years. Nor will they maintain that it was American imperialism which led to the supplying of cotton to keep the textile mills of China in operation so that the workers would not be unemployed and so that they would have wages with which to buy food and clothing.

Charges of United States imperialism can hardly be levelled against the joint United States-Chinese rural reconstruction programme, which was launched in 1948 and continued as long as possible in Szechuan and Chekiang, to improve rural living conditions, increase foreign output, and improve the social and educational position of the Chinese farmer. We neither desire nor claim any monopoly in extending help to the people of China; we have not been alone in extending help. But not only in the last year and a half, but on earlier occasions, when the people of China were hungry the people of the United States have sent food. The rice alone which we sent in 1948 and 1949 meant that 10,000,000 Chinese had their rice bowls filled daily during that period. In view of the vast problems of that great population, what we have been able to do has been little enough, but in view of current food shortages in China, I submit that it contrasts favourably with the barter agreement recently concluded by the Soviet Union with local authorities in Manchuria, under which food would be taken from the rice bowls of the Chinese people for shipment to the Soviet Union.

We shall not cease our efforts on behalf of the people of China, nor shall we cease, in the field of international relations and through the United Nations, to work for the real interests of China itself, for its independence and its integrity.

The draft resolution on the promotion of the establishment of international relations in the Far East will unite the peoples of the free world in the promotion of this common objective.

The President. The Chair proposes to close the list of speakers in ten minutes from now.

Mr. Chaudhury, representative of Pakistan, will address the General Assembly on the amendment.

Mr. CHAUDHURY (Pakistan). When the tripartite draft resolution was being discussed in the First Committee my delegation abstained from voting for the very simple reason that the words, "that item," appearing in the operative part of the draft resolution had considerably limited the scope of the problem. It was limited to the extent that the entire draft resolution appeared to be an outcome of a prejudiced mind. But we greatly welcome the amendment which has now been submitted, which focuses the attention on the four fundamental principles that are contained in the five-power draft resolution reading as follows:

"1. To respect the political independence of China and to be guided by the principles of the United Nations in their relations with China;

"2. To respect the right of the people of China now and in the future to choose freely their political institutions and to maintain a government independent of foreign control;

"3. To respect existing treaties relating to China; and

"4. To refrain from (a) seeking to acquire spheres of influence or to create foreign controlled regimes within the territory of China; (b) seeking to obtain special rights or privileges within the territory of China."

"I wish to make a statement regarding United States policy in Asia and the whole Far East. These principles have been stated officially many times, but it is important that people throughout the world not lose sight of them.

"First: The United States opposes the Communist theory and practice of attempting to overthrow governments by violence or subversive action. We shall continue to oppose that vicious theory and practice by peaceful means throughout Asia and throughout the world.

"Second: We are opposed to imperialism in any form. We have always firmly rejected it in our own policy, and we oppose it wherever practiced."

"The interest of the United States in the independence of the countries of Asia is genuine and abiding. The history of the past 150 years proves this statement. Within our economic capacity, a major factor in determining the assistance we can render the people of Asia is the degree to which these peoples are prepared to support governments of their own choosing in opposition to Communist tyranny.

"The United States will continue to take its stand for freedom, because of our conviction that there lies the true interest not only of the peoples of Asia but also the United States and of all of the United Nations."

As a result of these fundamental beliefs, we are firmly opposed to all systems of government which seek to enslave the individual or to subordinate him to some supposed overriding interest of the state. That is why we opposed and will continue to oppose all forms of totalitarian dictatorship whether they take the form of the Nazi or Fascist regimes of Europe and of Japan which we and our allies defeated in the last war or whether they take the form of the current theories of communism.

Specifically, we are opposed to imperialism. By imperialism I mean the policy of attempting to subject and exploit other peoples for one's own benefit. Imperialism is thus the exact opposite of the policy which the United States followed in training the people of the Philippines for self-government and of granting them their full independence. It is the exact opposite of the policy followed by the United Kingdom in granting independence to India, Pakistan, Burma, and Ceylon and in developing here in Malaya a progressive program toward nationhood. It is the exact opposite of the policy which the Netherlands followed in helping to establish the United States of Indonesia and which France is following in perfecting the independence of Viet Nam, Cambodia, and Laos.

On the other hand, the new form of imperialism which we see in the world today is illustrated by the policy of the Cominform, the international agency of the Communist Party, which insists that the peoples who are brought under its control are not entitled to express their own views but must conform in every respect to the decisions laid down in Moscow. The official public pronouncements of the Communist leaders announce that nationalism in Asia is to be encouraged only as a step on the road to the subjection of the peoples of Asia to the alien rule of the Russian dictators who control the policies of the Cominform.

• • • I have had the privilege of being one of the representatives of my Government in many meetings of the United Nations. As the record proves and as the experience of everyone who has attended such meetings testifies, states which are closely with the Soviet Union must always take identical action with the Soviet Union. There is no room in that system for the expression of any separate point of view. The rigid control which exists over the individual in the Soviet-Russian system, which is the Communist system, extends also the relations of governments which form part of the Soviet bloc and which are therefore naturally and properly known as satellites.

It is precisely because of this fundamental difference in the theory of the free nations of the world and in the theory of the Soviet Union that many of the actions taken by the General Assembly of the United Nations are seen in their true significance.

EXCERPT FROM SPEECH BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP OVER NATIONAL RADIO STATION OF THAILAND

What I should like to discuss briefly is one of the great problems which both our countries face and which other free nations of the world face—the danger that a hostile power, through subversion, through infiltration of disloyal elements, may seek to overthrow the government and to establish an alien rule which will put an end to the independent existence of the state affected. That is the menace of international communism today and against that menace we stand firm.

EXCERPTS FROM STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY AMBASSADOR JESSUP AT UNITED STATES INFORMATION LIBRARY, 54 QUEENSBURY, NEW DELHI, FEBRUARY 23, 1950

Since the end of the Second World War, history has recorded the extension of a new imperialism that has brought more than a dozen countries under the domination of a single expanding power. The device used by this expanding power in extending its imperialism is to hold out the glittering promises of communism as a beacon light for the rescue of peoples who are suffering from economic underdevelopment or who are trying to remove the shackles of the old traditional kinds of colonialism. However, where communism gains control, it becomes immediately apparent that the people are not allowed to determine their own future but must conform to a single policy laid down in Moscow.

• • • Communism is hostile to what the Asian people want to do and what we want to help them to do—which is to develop the stability of their new countries and to develop their resources and their technical skills so that they are not subject to penetration, either through ignorance or distress or because they succumb to the false promises of the Communists.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you, sir.

Among the international matters with which I have been called upon to deal for the United States are those of Korea, where the efforts of the United Nations to unify and give independence to that country encountered boycott and obstruction from the Soviet Union, the lifting of the Berlin blockade, in which I had the good fortune to play a part, the attempts of the United Nations to preserve the independence of China, and the disposition of the Italian colonies in north Africa. Another case that I might mention is that of Indonesia, where it has been the aim of the United States to encourage the Indonesian national government, the government of which has shown its ability to cope with Indonesian communism.

I should like at this point to read just a few sentences from a statement which I made in Security Council of the United Nations on January 1, 1949, on this question of Indonesia. I said at that time:

No one doubts that the Communists in Indonesia, like the Communists throughout the world, are responsive to and act in accordance with instructions from Moscow. The Communist revolt against the Government of President Soekarno and Premier Hotta was, itself, an effort on the part of the Government of the U. S. S. R. to overthrow the Indonesian Republic.

Furthermore, when the resumption of hostilities by the Netherlands Government against the Indonesian Republic took place, the official Communist Party line, as printed in the Communist press, instead of deploring this action, openly gloated that it was a punishment for the Government of President Soekarno and Premier Hotta, which had successfully put down a Communist revolt.

And, I said further:

But, the U. S. S. R. does not want an independent Indonesia, it wants an Indonesia under the domination and control of a Communist minority, taking its orders from Moscow. Anywhere in the world, when a Communist government climbs in through the window, independence is kicked out of the door.

That is among the records which I have submitted for the committee, sir.

In these matters, as in others, the Soviet Union opposed the settlements supported by the United States and other members of the United Nations. I have defended the position of the United States and fought the obstructive tactics of the Soviet Union and its Communist satellites. It is not for me to judge whether I have done well. I do assert that it cannot be denied that the record reveals complete devotion to the interests of the United States and our way of life and uncompromising hostility to international communism and all that it stands for.

Although I believe, Mr. Chairman, I have made it clear from what I have already said, I wish to repeat categorically and without qualification that I am not a Communist and never have been a Communist. I am not and never have been a Communist sympathizer. I have never knowingly supported or promoted any movement or organization which I know had as its objective the furtherance of Communist objectives. Although I cannot claim to have any detailed knowledge of the process, I wholeheartedly support the efforts of those whose official responsibility it is to see that Communists or Communist sympathizers are kept out of our Government.

Mr. Chairman, as I have attempted conscientiously to review the record of my activities, I have perhaps been prejudiced by my own inner knowledge that Senator McCarthy's charges and insinuations are utterly false. But I submit that any sincere person would have concluded from a review of the record that it does not offer the slightest iota of proof that I have "an unusual affinity for Communist causes." I therefore conclude that Senator McCarthy's charges and insinuations are not only false but utterly irresponsible and under the circumstances reveal a shocking disregard for the interests of our country.

Mr. Chairman, if these insinuations affected me alone, they would perhaps not be a matter of any great importance, except to me, my family, and my friends. But these insinuations, and the manner in which they were put forward, have had an effect upon 150,000,000 Americans and all the people in the world who are striving for peace. I know I do not have to tell the members of this committee of the serious situation which exists in the world today. You know that the stakes are high. The United States is in the midst of a struggle for peace. We are opposed by the efforts of a diabolically clever and well-organized Communist organization which is seeking to destroy our democracy. If we are to succeed in our struggle, we must forego all partisanship and all partisan political adventures. If we are to succeed, we must show to our friends in the free world that we are not divided in our counsels, but that we are united in our determination to promote the cause of peace and to pursue the wisest policy which our united genius can devise. If we are to succeed, we must all dedicate ourselves to the cause of peace with devotion and unity of purpose. For my part, that is my one and only thought.

Thank you.

Senator TRYDINGS. Thank you, Dr. Jessup.

(Loud applause.)

Senator TRYDINGS. Please, no demonstration.

Any questions, Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I have some questions that I feel I should ask Mr. Jessup; but again, I want to make my position clear.

Over a week ago, Senator McCarthy publicly named nine names and at that time I requested that we immediately get the files so we would have whatever information, in fairness to the witnesses, or to the people who were named, and in fairness to this committee—that we immediately get the files on those nine people.

So far as I know, those files have not been secured. I have had no opportunity to look into the rounded-out information which may affect any of these people, and therefore I feel that any questions of mine, at this time, are utterly without any foundation of extensive knowledge of the allegations, or information, and I again renew my request that this committee do what the Senate ordered it to do, and that is, to secure these files.

I think an inexcusable delay has occurred in the securing of the files of the nine people who are named, not only in the interest of good investigation, but in the interest of the people who have been named, themselves.

Now, I also received a copy of a letter from Senator McCarthy, delivered by hand to my office just a few moments ago, in which he requested that he, as the moving party in this accusation, be allowed to confront the witness and to examine him and question him.

Has any action been taken on that, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TRYDINGS. It would be pretty hard to take action on the last request, because it did not reach me until about 10 minutes after 10 this morning; and, the chairman is not making policy for this committee. He has to have all five members present and ascertain what their wishes are.

The matter will be laid before the committee at the earliest possible moment when a meeting can be had.

Now, as long as we are talking about a list of names, the only detailed charge against Mr. Jessup that I recall is "that he has an unusual affinity for Communist causes."

There has been no supporting data offered by any witness to substantiate that charge.

In the second place, we are here because that is the only evidence that has been brought before this committee up to now concerning Dr. Jessup.

In the third place, on the Senate floor on the 20th of February 1950, over a month ago, over 4 weeks ago, Senator McCarthy outlined by number the cases of 81 individuals whom he asked the Senate committee to investigate. The individuals were not named. They were designated by number.

Up to this minute, none of those 81 names has been furnished by Senator McCarthy or anybody else, and how we can get the files of someone whose name we do not know is a matter of great conjecture to the chairman, as it must be to the other members of this committee.

I have asked repeatedly, publicly and privately and by letter, for these 81 names; and, I have not yet received an answer to my letter, except a telephone conversation which I had with the Senator when he received my letter of request; to wit, that they would be furnished today, Monday. Up to the present time, they have not come in my office, as the result of an inquiry I just made before I came up here, to make sure that that was the case.

Now, the nine names, of which Dr. Jessup, I believe, was one, were submitted only about 10 days ago. It is a matter of some difficulty for me to realize why we could get nine names submitted 9 days ago in public, and could not get the 81 names submitted almost a month ago; and, the names of the nine, as I understand it, are at least for the most part, if not entirely, not names that were mentioned in the debate in the Senate which caused us to be appointed and conduct this investigation.

Now, as to the files: I have asked the State Department to turn over the files to us in the cases that have been mentioned. I have likewise had a brief made of our rights under subpoena to obtain those files. The State Department has indicated a willingness to turn over these files, but as it will create a precedent they are moving very cautiously so that in other instances what is done here may not be seized upon, at the whim of everyone to get to the files in the future; and, if the committee will bear with me just a moment, I would like at this point to give some information about these files, so that there will be fuller understanding of the task of the committee, and why I have been proceeding in the manner outlined.

As I said, I had looked up and had prepared our authority to proceed to obtain these files, and I will now read the history of the actions by numerous executives dealing with files and similar information that had been requested by the Congress.

Who are the authorities that have established the soundness of the constitutional doctrine that the legislative branch may not subpoena the executive branch?

I. Presidents who established this doctrine in the first century of our national existence:

1796. George Washington refused papers to the House (Richardson, Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. I, pp. 194, 196—hereafter cited simply as Richardson).

In 1825, James Monroe refused papers to the House (reported in Richardson, vol. 2, p. 278).

In 1833, Andrew Jackson refused papers to the Senate (reported in Richardson, vol. 3, p. 36).

In 1835, Andrew Jackson refused papers to the Senate (reported in Richardson, vol. 3, pp. 132 and 133).

In 1843, John Tyler refused papers to the House (reported in Richardson, vol. 4, pp. 105 and 106, and 221 and 223).

In 1886, Grover Cleveland supported his Attorney General's refusal to comply with Senate resolution calling for papers.

II. Quotations of views expressed by various Presidents who served prior to the current period:

George Washington: * * * As it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office * * * forbids a compliance with your request.

(Reported by Richardson in vol. 1, pp. 194 and 196.)

George Washington's Farewell Address: * * * The habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism * * *.

(Richardson, vol. 1, p. 230.)

John Tyler: A mass of vague, incoherent, and personal matter would be made public at a vast consumption of time, money, and trouble without accomplishing or tending in any manner to accomplish, as it appears to me, any useful object connected with a sound and constitutional administration of the Government in any of its branches.

In my judgment, a compliance with the resolution which has been transmitted to me would be a surrender of duties and powers which the Constitution has conferred exclusively on the Executive; and, therefore, such compliance cannot be made by me nor by the heads of departments by my direction.

(Richardson, vol. 4, pp. 105-106.)

William Howard Taft, after his Presidency, and before his Chief Justiceship:

The President is required by the Constitution from time to time to give to Congress information on the state of the union * * * but this does not enable Congress or either House of Congress to elicit from him confidential information which he has acquired for the purpose of enabling him to discharge his constitutional duties, if he does not deem the disclosure of such information prudent or in the public interest.

(The Chief Magistrate, published in 1960, at p. 120.)

III. The views of a congressional committee: In 1870, the House Judiciary Committee reported to the House, supporting the constitutional doctrine here under discussion, saying:

The Executive is as independent as either House of Congress is independent of him, and they cannot call for the records of his action or the action of his officers against his consent, any more than he can call for any of the journals and records of the House or Senate. * * *

This mischief of the House calling for documents might easily be a very great one * * * Somebody must judge upon this point. It clearly cannot be the House or its committee * * *. The head of the executive department * * * must be the Judge * * *.

IV. Attorneys General have consistently taken this view and so advised Houses of Congress and the President.

The following include distinguished holders of the chief legal position in the Government, including Republicans of stature, and two Democrats of conservative reputation, one of them (McReynolds of Tennessee) subsequently a Justice of the Supreme Court, and the other (Gregory of Texas) one of the greatest holders of that office throughout the Nation's history particularly for his support of the Constitution and the American political system.

In 1904, Attorney General Knox, in a communication to the House of April 27, dealt with this point.

In 1908, Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General under Theodore Roosevelt, to the House on April 13th dealt with this point.

In 1912, Attorney General Wickersham, in a communication to the House dated March 18th.

In 1914, McReynolds to the President, in a communication dated August 28th.

In 1915, Gregory to the Senate, in a communication dated February 23d.

In 1920, Attorney General Sargent, in the Coolidge Cabinet, to the House Judiciary Committee, in a communication dated June 8th.

The above citations, besides appearing in the Congressional Record and committee hearings, appear in Opinions of the Attorney General, volume 40, pages 47 and 48.

V. Court discussion of the separation of powers:

(1) The United States Supreme Court, in Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S. 160, 190), said:

It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all the powers entrusted to Government, whether State or national, are divided into the three grand departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial—that the functions appropriate to each of these branches of Government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of this system that the persons entrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall by the law of its creation be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriate to its own department and no other.

(2) State courts agree. For example, Pennsylvania court in Appeal of Hartranft (85 Pa. 433, 445), reading:

* * * We had better at the outset recognize the fact that the executive department is a coordinate branch of the Government with power to judge what should or should not be done, within its own department, and what of its own doings and communications should or should not be kept secret, and that with it, in the exercise of these constitutional powers, the courts have no more right to interfere than has the executive, under like conditions, to interfere with the courts.

VI. Other court authorities supporting the constitutional doctrine are as follows:

Marbury v. Madison—these are mostly Supreme Court cases—reported in 1 Cranch 137, 169.

Totten v. United States, reported in 92 U. S. 105.

Vogel v. Grunaz, reported in 110 U. S. 311.

In reference to Quarles and Butler, 158 U. S. 532.

Boake v. Cominsore, 177 U. S. 459.

In reference to Huttman, 70 Fed. 609.

In reference to Lamberton, 124 Fed. 446

In reference to Valecia Condensed Milk Co., 240 Fed. 810.

Elrod v. Moss, 278 Fed. 123.

Arnstein v. United States, 206 Fed. 946.

Then there are others that I will not put in the record at the moment.

In view of this opinion which I have had for sometime, which I obtained shortly after my appointment, I wanted to get all of these records; and, realizing that the road to get them by force or by subpoena might be a stormy and a fruitless one, I have been trying to get the records without having a controversy over them.

The State Department, I believe, is willing to give me these records. I shall be disappointed if I do not get them. It will be contrary to the indications I have so far received; but I do realize that in the face of the precedents which support, in my opinion, the right of the Executive to withhold them, should he so desire, that we had better proceed in the manner best calculated to put the files in our hands, and I am very hopeful that before very many days go by, I hope today or tomorrow, or not later than Wednesday as a matter of conjecture, we will have access to the files and can go ahead with them.

However, I want the public to know, and the committee to know, that it will be a courtesy extended to us, and contrary to the legal precedents from George Washington down to date, if we do get them.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to make this observation: That you may have been informing the public as to the law or the precedents but you were not informing any member of this committee, including the Senator from Iowa, as to the precedents.

Senator TYDINGS. I believed that I ought to make this statement that I have because I want to get the files. I want the files of every case, every person or number that has been mentioned. There were 81 mentioned a month ago, and I hope we will get those today, together with all others, and I want to arrange at some place and time where we can look at these files and see whether these accusations and charges are true or false, but I do want the public to know—I do not believe I have to tell the committee; there are good lawyers here—that the precedents all seem, in my opinion, to favor the President's right to withhold them should he see fit. I have reason to believe we will get these files, but we won't get them if we are going at it the wrong way. I am trying to get results and not get into a controversy with the executive department.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The brief which the chairman has read has been, I think, discussed repeatedly on the floor of the Senate. These alleged precedents and others have been the subjects of discussions from time to time in the past, even in the short time that I have been a Member of the Senate.

Nevertheless the Senate, in adopting its resolution, and in view of the fact that these have been thoroughly discussed and threshed out with various opinions on the floor of the Senate, directed this subcommittee as follows in the last sentence of the resolution, Senate Resolution 231:

In the conduct of this study and investigation, the committee is directed to procure by subpoena and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of all the Government employees in the Department of State and such other agencies against whom charges have been heard.

Do I take it, Mr. Chairman, that this subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations is setting itself up as a judicial body to interpret the law and to overrule the direct mandate of the Senate of the United States to do this act?

Senator TYNINGS. Will you let me answer that? I was not present when this resolution was passed. After it had been passed and my committee had been appointed, I called to the attention of the full Foreign Relations Committee a great many ambiguities in the resolution, in my opinion, and I called this to the attention of the Senate on the floor. For example, if we want to go by the resolution, and stick strictly to it, as my colleague from Iowa seems to indicate would be wise, then the only thing we can investigate is the following:

is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State.

So far as the present witness before us is concerned, he has been charged with having an affinity for Communist causes. There has been no charge, other than that, that he has been disloyal to the United States. So, unless a charge is made that he is disloyal to the United States, if we are going to stick to this resolution and are going to be technical with all parts of it, I hardly know how to proceed with this witness.

Now I will in due time, to carry out the wishes of the Senate, should entreaties and requests to get the files fail, issue a subpoena, although my face, to be frank, will be a little red when I do it because I know in advance we have no power to enforce it. Nevertheless, I shall be true to the commitment which the Senate enforces upon the committee. But I hope, too, if we are going to be that strict about interpreting this resolution, that we will not forget that our job is to investigate whether persons who are disloyal to the United States have been employed by the Department of State, and in the latter part of the same resolution which Senator Hickenlooper just read, I will read that whole sentence:

In the conduct of this study and investigation, the committee is directed to procure by subpoena and examine the complete loyalty and employment files in the Department of State and such other agencies against whom charges have been heard.

Now Senator McCarthy, in his testimony under oath on the stand, said he was not making charges. He said he was only giving us information. Should we investigate all of the information that comes before us regardless of whether it contains a charge or not? For, in one case I have been handed 25 names with not even one sentence about any of them to show what the charge was.

If we are going to be technical, I would be delighted to have my friend from Iowa right here and now tell me what he thinks the scope of this investigation should be as outlined by the resolution which brings us into being.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will be delighted to tell the Senator that I think long since we should have secured the files of the nine people who have been specifically and publicly mentioned; that we have delayed overlong; that we have not been zealous or diligent in getting those files, and that any number of things could happen to those files. I do not say that they will or that they have happened. But this delay is certainly mysterious to me, and I see no reason why we should not immediately have got hold of the files, all of the files, on the nine people mentioned, in their interest as well as in the interest of expeditious investigation. That is one step, and if we take that we will occupy our time for a while and we will be getting at the heart and meat of this matter.

Senator TYDINGS. Should we investigate people against whom no charges have been filed?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think it is entirely within the committee to determine what people in the State Department should be investigated. If this is to be a highly technical investigation, with the refusal of this committee to look into specific cases as well as collateral cases, then it will be a fruitless investigation, as anyone can see.

Senator TYDINGS. We cannot subpoena any of the records except for the files of people against whom charges have been heard. That is what the resolution says.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There have been nine specifically mentioned, and if I understand the English language there have been some definite charges made against these people, and we have made no progress so far as I know in the acquisition of the files on these specific nine people. There is a start for us.

Senator TYDINGS. The resolution says:

In the conduct of this study and investigation the committee is directed to procure by subpoena—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That's plain.

Senator TYDINGS (continuing) :

and examine the complete loyalty files and records of all employees against whom charges have been heard.

With regard to Mr. Jessup, who comes before us this morning, the sole charge so far that I have heard is that he has an affinity for Communist organizations. I suppose that would be a charge. The Chairman said on the floor of the Senate, in answer to an interrogation I think from Senator Knowland, that he would extend the widest measure of interpretation to this resolution, and that he will do. So even the 25 cases against whom no charge has been made, being only a list of names which Senator McCarthy gave me, without a line or a syllable to tell us what the charge is, I have already asked for the records on, and I happen to know that the State Department at this very moment is trying to work out a procedure so that we can see the records. Their fear is that if they give them up now, every time in the future that somebody wants to use them, we will assume for purposes that best suit the individual so that they can be reviewed, this will be used as a precedent. There has been no breach of this precedent so far and there naturally is some concern among those who are responsible for the executive branch about making a precedent now.

But I want to conclude by saying this, that I expect to get the files. I have asked for the files as a gentleman and not as a sheriff, because I think the President of the United States is entitled to some respect whether he is a Democrat or Republican or what he may be, and I said on the floor of the Senate, when I was asked whether we would issue a subpoena that insofar as I was concerned I would not issue a subpoena until I had made a proper and decent request for the files, before resorting to any such action, which might be misinterpreted by the person against whom it was directed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this subcommittee must, at a time to be prescribed at the convenience of the State Department, go with hat in hand and stand outside of some door until they, in their own good time, will open that door and, under certain regulations, restrictions, and surveillance, watch over the deliberations of this committee and say, at certain points, "Uh-uh, you can't go any further than that; you must do this"? In other words, are we to investigate this under the direction of the State Department or are we to investigate it under the direction and the power and the authority of a Senate committee that is set up under a resolution?

Senator TYDINGS. You know just as well as I do that if the President refuses to give us these files there is no way in the world that we can get them. I am going to proceed upon the premise that we want the files, although I have some doubts about that in some quarters. Nevertheless, I want the files.

Senator McMAHON. I am not so sure, Mr. Chairman, that they want the files. What they want is a refusal of the files.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not going to say that, but that inference is clearly drawn. I am going to get those files if it is humanly possible for me to do it, and I am going to do it in a way that I think will bring success and not bring controversy and smear up this issue when it ought not to be smeared up but clarified.

I think we ought to give the witness now a chance to be interrogated by Senator Hickenlooper, and I will say that I will call a meeting of this committee at their earliest convenience to go into all the procedures that are now before us.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At the outset, Mr. Chairman, Senator McCarthy, who is in the room, just came up a moment ago and gave me some whispered information in my ear, and I said, "Have you got the papers there?" and he said "Yes, he had," so he brought them up. I was handed what is alleged to be—I have no personal knowledge of this at all—a receipt for a registered letter mailed Saturday afternoon, March 18, at 5:20 p. m. to Senator Tydings. It bears a Washington post office stamp showing the fees. Its register number is 342589.

It has a copy of a letter of March 18 addressed to Senator Millard Tydings, chairman, Foreign Relations Subcommittee, Washington, D. C., signed by Joe McCarthy, which is as follows:

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: Enclosed are the names which you as chairman of the subcommittee demanded that I furnish in connection with the 81 cases cited on the Senate floor. They are being submitted as part of the record in executive session. I believe you will find complete and detailed reports on each in the various files which I indicated to the committee the other day, namely State Department, Civil Service, and FBI. I would, however, like the right to present to the committee additional documentation in cases of bad security from time to time.

Attached to that—may I complete the exhibit, because I am going to offer this whole business here in the record——

Senator TYDINGS. The names too?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Senator McCarthy desires that I offer the names in executive session. I will hand them to the Chair, and he may do what he wishes.

Attached thereto is a list of 81 names. Then another letter attached to this file, a copy of a letter alleged to be signed by R. H. Hillenkoetter, rear admiral, Director of Central Intelligence, to Hon. Joseph McCarthy. Senator McCarthy has just whispered in my ear that he prefers that that not be made public, that copy of that letter. I shall hand the entire file to the chairman. The first page has the registered receipt for the letter containing the 81 names.

Senator TYDINGS. I am certainly glad to get them. It is exactly 1 month to the day since the 81 cases were brought before the attention of the Senate. This is the first time I have had the names in my hand, and I shall request, before the day is over, from appropriate officials in the State Department, to get these files available to the committee at the earliest possible date.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. One other thing, Mr. Chairman. I think it is very important, in the interests of complete examination of this matter at this moment and ineffective as I think any examination of this kind can be without full access to the files, that a decision be made on whether or not Senator McCarthy, who is the moving force in connection with Mr. Jessup, be permitted to interrogate Mr. Jessup at this time, when they can confront each other.

Senator TYDINGS. I am sorry; I did not get your request. I was conferring with Senator Green.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Personally I have no knowledge of these files. I say that I think it is very important that Senator McCarthy confront Mr. Jessup. He is here; Senator McCarthy is here. I know nothing about this matter. I have no particular or specific questions that I can ask Mr. Jessup. I don't know Mr. Jessup. I have never seen any information on him of any kind. I think it is very important that Senator McCarthy, who has generated this matter, be permitted to bring up whatever matters he has with Mr. Jessup. Mr. Jessup has come up here, I assume, at his own request, and I would like to urge that, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. We will lay this question before the committee and decide on procedure. I do not want to be precluded from passing on it in the committee. However, I think this is a fair observation, that Mr. Jessup did not know he was to be accused, I presume, until he heard about it through the press. Mr. Jessup was not invited to be here to cross-examine Senator McCarthy. The Constitution of the United States, in the bill of rights, says—and this is a pretty serious case—that every man accused of any offense is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him. I do not think it gives a comparable right to his accuser. So if we are going to go along in the democratic process, at least, I think Mr. Jessup might be entitled to interrogate Senator McCarthy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is utterly fair.

Senator TYDINGS. Further than that, the committee itself has had no opportunity to interrogate Senator McCarthy up to now. We did have some discussion about a collateral matter the first 2 days, when the chairman wanted to get the name of a man who was accused of attempting to fix the State Department records, but other than that, in the Kenyon and all the other cases, outside of asking for the date of a document or something of that sort, there has been no chance for the committee to ask Senator McCarthy any questions, and certainly the committee is going ahead asking Mr. Jessup questions when they have not even had a chance to ask Senator McCarthy any questions yet.

Senator MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to let Mr. Jessup ask me any questions he cares to.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute. We have not asked you as yet, Senator McCarthy. I think it would have been fair if these people against whom charges are brought might have been notified so that they might have at least been here and heard the charges against them. But that has not been done, and therefore I think we have got to be as fair to one side as we are to the other in this matter, and you yourself asked that you not be interrupted, finally, until you could complete your statement, and the committee sat more or less mute. Up to the present time it has had no chance to ask you questions and I would like to ask you several questions, particularly about the discrepancies that have appeared in various statements that you have made concerning the number of people who are card-carrying Communists now in the State Department, and known to the Secretary of State.

So far as I read your debate on the Senate floor and your charges before this committee, you have not charged a single person, so far as I can recall, with being a card-carrying Communist now in the State Department. Nevertheless, according to the press, those charges have been printed all over the United States and there has been no evidence before this committee from you, sir, or from anybody else, that assert any of the individuals named are card-carrying Communists or members of the Communist Party.

Go ahead, Senator Hickenlooper.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I take it that the committee at this time says that Senator McCarthy cannot confront Mr. Jessup.

Senator TYDINGS. Not until we pass on it as a committee, and one of your colleagues is absent. We want his version of what should be done. I will call a meeting this afternoon, if we can get the full committee together, and lay this matter before them. It is all one with me. I have no preconceived ideas, except that I am going to be fair to both sides so far as I am able.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think Senator Lodge, who had a very unfortunate situation at his home, will not be here today and perhaps not tomorrow. I do not know. I checked with his office this morning and they are not certain whether he will be here tomorrow. He is not in town today.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I have just a few questions, and I feel that I am moving utterly in the dark in this matter. I have no particular things to ask of Mr. Jessup that could possibly be generated by any previous information.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper, if you will pardon an interruption, it is now 5 minutes to 12. If it meets with your approval, the chairman would be glad to have a recess whenever you wish it, and meet again at 2 o'clock or 2:30, during which time you might confer with Senator McCarthy and get such data as he has, so that you can use those data to cross-examine Ambassador Jessup. I would be delighted to do that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I sort of reserve the right to make up my own mind on what questions I ask.

Senator TYDINGS. I am only suggesting it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And I would like to have the information on which to pass my own judgment on the questions I ask, rather than to be spoon-fed information from the State Department or from Senator McCarthy or anybody else.

Senator TYDINGS. I only said that because Senator McCarthy has been handing you information. I thought you might want time to get it all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Senator McCarthy did hand me some very definite information about the registered letter he sent you.

Senator TYDINGS. Also, in the Kenyon case, as I recall, he gave you a list of a great many propositions to put to Judge Kenyon.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And incidentally, in the Kenyon case, may I suggest that the day after Judge Kenyon was on the stand I learned some very pertinent information about Judge Kenyon which I think would have been very important had I known it at the time she was on the stand so I could have interrogated her about that particular matter, but I did not have access to any files, and I have some reason to believe that this information which I did not have is contained in Judge Kenyon's files, and therefore that examination was not only of the most cursory nature, but I had nothing particularly to go on.

Mr. Jessup, I apologize for attempting to interrupt you when I first sat down. I was about 7 minutes late here and I found the hearing was already under way.

On page 2 of your statement there is the matter that I wanted to mention at that time. You say in the next to the last paragraph, about the fourth line:

However, I do not believe in the concept of guilt by association.

I am using the mimeographed copy.

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, a little later on I think you discussed the legal philosophy of guilt by association as not necessarily being an accepted doctrine in American jurisprudence.

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are, of course, aware of the doctrine that is accepted generally in American jurisprudence, of circumstantial evidence; are you not?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And that comes pretty close to the doctrine, when it is used to convict, of guilt by association; does it not?

Ambassador JESSUP. I think there is quite a difference, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think there are some legalistic differences, yes, indeed; but circumstantial evidence is nevertheless, when it is used for conviction, evidence which is produced by circumstances rather than by actual proof or visible witnesses of the commission of the actual crime. Is that roughly the concept?

Ambassador JESSUP. I should think that would be sufficient, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So there would be elements of guilt by association in our concept of circumstantial evidence; would you agree with that?

Ambassador JESSUP. I think there is quite a difference between what is commonly called guilt by association and the doctrine of the admission of circumstantial evidence in a criminal trial.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I assure you, Dr. Jessup, that I shall avoid at all costs getting into a legalistic dispute with a law professor. I respect your judgment and ability and I do not feel that I can cope with you on the finer points of the law.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you believe that there is anything to the doctrine that I might describe as "risk through association"? We have heard a great deal about guilt by association, and that seems to come up every so often—guilt by association. But is there something to risk by association, especially where people are in sensitive positions of importance in the Government? Is it well to look into their associates to determine whether or not there is a risk involved in the positions those people hold?

Ambassador JESSUP. I stated, Senator, in my statement, and I would like to repeat that part:

Although I cannot claim to have any detailed knowledge of the process, I wholeheartedly support the efforts of those whose official responsibility it is to see that Communists or Communist sympathizers are kept out of our Government.

I understand that part of the process involves an investigation of the kind that you have referred to. What I would suggest, Senator, is that in connection with the so-called doctrine of guilt by association there seems to be a tendency to select the existence of one name, coupled with another name, in some list, in some undefined context, and to assume that that means that the coexistence of those names reflects the attitude and position of the person in question.

One might just as well say, in my opinion, that if one had a photograph of the GI's who shook hands with the Russian soldiers when the American and Russian Armies first met in Germany one might charge that the GI who was shaking hands with the Russian was guiltily associated with communism. I think there is nothing in that kind of attempt to associate persons or events which has any validity, and it is that which I object to, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then I take it that you discard any idea that the membership of an individual in one organization which is determined to be subversive or pro-Communist is, of course, not much evidence of that person's sympathy for the Communist or subversive cause?

Ambassador JESSUP. I think the important thing, Senator, is whether he knowingly belongs to an organization which is supporting Communist objectives and, with that knowledge, continues his support.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let us say that one case makes not a very strong case. Would you say that two or three instances where the individual is a member or a sponsor of organizations that have been declared to be subversive, or afterward are found to be subversive, were such as to strengthen a suspicion that this person has a leaning toward that kind of philosophy?

Ambassador JESSUP. I think not necessarily, Senator, and I think that was brought out in the testimony of Judge Kenyon.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you say 15 such cases would add cumulatively to the question as to whether or not that person had leanings toward the philosophy of these subversive organizations?

Ambassador JESSUP. Obviously, sir, that is cumulative, but I do not think it affects the principle.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And suppose twenty-five cases occurred where this person was a member of organizations either declared or found to be subversive. Would you think that that would be cumulative evidence which might raise a question for reasonable inquiry?

Ambassador JESSUP. I think it is necessary in those cases, Senator, to do two things: First, to find out whether the organization was publicly branded and known to be subversive at the time of the individual's contact with it, and in the second place, what was the nature of the contact of the individual with the organization. The fact that you had 25 or 50 such cases——

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I was going to suggest, suppose there were 56.

Ambassador JESSUP. I would say, sir, whether there were 25 or 56, unless one pays some attention to the other two factors which I have just referred to——

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But would you say that the fact of membership in a large number of organizations which either have been declared or have been found by official bodies to be Communist front, that the membership of an individual in a substantial number—let us say 25, or 30, or 40, or as many as 50—would be sufficient grounds to inquire, then, into the further activities of that individual or the organizations involved, in order to arrive at a proper judgment on the attitude of this individual?

Ambassador JESSUP. If you mean, sir, whether it would be the duty of those officially charged with examining into the loyalty of an individual to determine whether that person should be appointed to a position of trust or any position under the Government of the United States, I would say "yes". If it is merely the basis for making a public charge without an investigation of those facts, I say "no."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, then, putting another hypothetical question, if the record of such an individual did disclose membership in a large number of organizations which had been declared or found to be subversive, and if the persons in charge of the appointment of that individual, knowing that, then failed to make any further inquiry or examination into the attitude or other activities of this individual along those lines, would you say that they had failed to do what the preliminary information should properly indicate in connection with security risk matters?

Ambassador JESSUP. My understanding of an investigation of that kind, Senator, is that the investigator is to look into all affirmative and negative evidence. I assume that is done whether they find 1 case or 50 such cases. It is their duty to look into the question.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you consider membership in such organizations to be negative evidence as original evidence as a basis for further investigation?

Ambassador JESSUP. I should say that without an investigation of the facts to which I have referred it is still very slight evidence. In other words, as I have said before, it seems to me necessary to know whether at the time of this hypothetical association of an individual with an organization that organization was itself actually subversive, or was known to be such; and secondly, I think it is necessary to examine into the exact nature of the association of the individual with that organization.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Jessup, do you have any objection whatsoever, or any reservation, with respect to this subcommittee, as a subcommittee, fully examining all of the files and the information contained in Government departments with respect to you?

Ambassador JESSUP. So far as I personally am concerned, sir, everything in my record or anything which anybody has found out about me can be made public. So far as the question which has been discussed in this committee this morning, as to whether the executive department should turn over the files to the committee, that is a question with which I am not charged and on which I should not like to express any opinion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any personal objection to those files being turned over?

Ambassador JESSUP. As I have said, Senator, I have no objection to any information about my career being made public at any time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not even suggesting that any information be made public.

Ambassador JESSUP. So far as I am concerned, it can be made public.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The question I asked was, Do you have any objection to the turning over of the files?

Ambassador JESSUP. As I said, Senator, I am not concerned with the question of policy involved, as to whether the executive department should turn over its files to the Senate committee.

Senator TYDINGS. You said you had a statement there. Was that in answer to one of the questions?

Ambassador JESSUP. I merely wanted to add, in connection with what I have just said, Senator, a paragraph from a letter written by Mr. Peyton Ford, Assistant to the Attorney General, to Senator Elbert Thomas on March 6, 1950, which I think is pertinent, if I may. It is very short, Senator. He wrote:

It is characteristic of many front organizations that their purported purposes and programs are designed to appeal to loyal Americans and frequently it is behind a screen of respectability, loyalty, and even patriotism that subversive activities are carried on, often by only a few disloyal persons. In other instances a small minority subverts an organization of previously good purposes and having many members of unquestionable loyalty to the United States.

It is because I believe that is an accurate statement and a sound statement that I have made the comments which I have, indicating that the mere association is not a sound basis for condemning an individual.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Again I want to call your attention to the fact that I draw a sharp distinction between conviction based upon association and the question of risk indicated by investigation into association. There is a vast difference between risk, in my judgment, in public office—that is personnel risk—and conviction of any specific crime. I think it has been authoritatively testified to that the Communists have not carried cards in this country for better than 2 years. They are ordered not to. And positive proof of membership in the Communist Party, I am told, is a most difficult thing indeed to produce.

Ambassador JESSUP. May I just also say, Senator, that I wanted to make clear the distinction which exists in my own mind between the process of investigation of a person considered for appointment in the Government service and the question of public charges which are made without an opportunity for the individual to be confronted with the evidence and to answer in regard to what seem to me to be the pertinent facts.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On page 3 of your statement, with respect to the dinner on May 7, 1946, given by the American-Russian Institute—

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The only thing that I know about that is that that was quite an important dinner apparently; it was a dinner for the presentation of the First Annual Award to Franklin D. Roosevelt, which would be a matter of some importance, but I notice in your statement that you don't remember whether or not you attended that dinner. The thing that caught my eye was that on the rest of the page, and part of the next page, you remembered very distinctly attending meetings back, I believe, as far as 1943 and 1939 and 1933, I believe, is the earliest one. I thought it rather unusual that you wouldn't remember whether or not you attended a dinner that was given for an award of this kind in 1946.

Ambassador JESSUP. Well, may I say in regard to that, Senator, that as I pointed out in my statement, I searched my files to see if there were any information on this matter, and I couldn't find any. I also pointed out that I was very seriously ill in the hospital from February to June of that year, so that it was unlikely that I attended. Perhaps that was an understatement.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have an alleged photostat of a letterhead of the American Law Student's Association, Woolworth Building, room 530, New York, N. Y., in which you are listed as a Faculty Advisory Board member; that is, there is listed from Columbia University the name Prof. Philip Jessup. Were you a member of that organization?

Ambassador JESSUP. I have a very slight recollection of that organization. If I may refresh my recollection on it—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Ambassador JESSUP. What was the year of that supposed affiliation, Senator, if I may ask?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't have a date on this letterhead. I have an alleged photostat of a letterhead which you may look at.

Ambassador JESSUP. I did make an attempt to find out whether I had any such associaiton, and the best I could do in trying to find some record on it, or stimulating my memory, was this, that I recalled that perhaps 10 years ago some of the students at Columbia had asked me to serve on the Advisory Board of an association. It may have been this one. So far as I could tell from my files, the last contact I had with it was about February or March of 1940. I have no definite recollection about the organization or of my association with it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe the American Law Student's Association is listed as an affiliate of the American Youth Congress, which was cited as a Communist front by Attorney General Biddle on May 28, 1943, by the Special Committee of the House Committee on Appropriations April 1, 1943, and by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities on June 25, 1942, and on March 29, 1944, and also by the Massachusetts House Committee Report On Un-American Activities in 1938, which would put it more than 10 years ago.

Senator GREEN. That was not the organization with which Dr. Jessup was connected.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The organization, as I stated a moment ago, was affiliated with the American Youth Congress.

Ambassador JESSUP. As of what date, Senator, was it affiliated? Was that found?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not have the date upon which it was affiliated, but the American Youth Congress, I believe, was cited as a Communist-front organization by the Massachusetts House Committee Report on Un-American Activities in 1938.

Ambassador JESSUP. Do I understand that the American Law Student's Association is not in your citation?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The American Law Student's Association, I believe, was an affiliate of the American Youth Congress.

Ambassador JESSUP. But you have not indicated on what date it became affiliated, sir?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No.

Ambassador JESSUP. I see. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Might I ask, too, if the organization that was delineated as being subversive in Massachusetts was a local chapter or a national chapter? Was it the local organization, the State branch of that organization, or was it an indictment of the whole organization throughout the whole United States? Do you know?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not know.

Senator TYDINGS. I would not think an organization in Massachusetts or California or any of these State agencies would be in a position to indict an organization nationally. I would presume they would indict an organization in their own State, but it would be a little difficult to know how they would indict an organization that covers the United States.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I understand the American Law Student's Association was affiliated with the United Student's Peace Committee, 347 Madison Avenue, New York City. That is according to an exhibit, volume 12, page 7568 and 7569 of the Report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't know about those organizations. I don't know whether they existed at the time of my meager association with the American Law Student's Association.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. For whatever worth this may be, I believe the Daily Worker of February 27, 1937, on page 2, lists the American Law Student's Association as an affiliate of the American League Against War and Fascism. The American League Against War and Fascism has been cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities and by Attorney General Biddle.

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't read that paper, sir, so I wasn't aware of that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't either. I said that it is alleged that that was printed there.

The letter head which I have here, which I referred to a moment ago, containing the name of Prof. Philip C. Jessup on the faculty advisory board, bears the union label imprint of Local 209 of New York City, which I am informed is the Communist print shop of New York, the letterhead being printed in a Communist print shop. I can offer that in evidence, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. It will be printed in the record at this point.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, Mr. Jessup, on page 6 of your statement you are quoting some attitudes toward China. I would like to ask you, are you in complete agreement with the present policy of the State Department toward China as announced some 2 months ago with respect to the withdrawing of support from Chiang Kai-shek?

Senator TYDINGS. I am not going to interfere with this question, but I do not see what that has to do with the fact of whether disloyal persons are employed in the State Department or whether Mr. Jessup is a Communist or not, because I think in both parties there are a great many men who disagree or who agree.

Senator McMAHON. The Formosa beachhead was abandoned, and I suggest if they want to reestablish it with this committee you go ahead.

Senator TYDINGS. I suggest that if we go into all of the ramifications of our China policy we will be here until Christmas.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I just clear that up and say that I asked the question as a direct result of the statements made in Mr. Jessup's statement—

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In which he stated his philosophy toward China quite clearly, and I would like to inquire whether Mr. Jessup is in full accord with present announced State Department policy toward China as contained in a statement of a few weeks ago—I can't give you the exact date.

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't identify the particular statement, Senator, but I have no hesitation in saying that I am in complete accord with the policy of the United States toward China at the present time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is, the position the State Department has taken?

Ambassador JESSUP. The position of the State Department is the position of the United States with regard to international policy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then further with respect to your statement on page 6 with regard to China policy, were you in accord with the policies which General Marshall was sent to put into effect? In other words, as I understand them, the inclusion of some Communist members in a coalition government in China?

Ambassador JESSUP. Senator, if I may, I suggest that that is a rather misleading question.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't want it to be misleading.

Ambassador JESSUP. It assumes the nature of General Marshall's mission. I should like to point out that I had no connection with far eastern policy of the State Department at that time. The slight connection I had with the State Department at that time was solely in regard to matters having to do with the United Nations, its organization, and the codification and development of international law.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you acquainted with Mr. Owen Lattimore?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When was the last time you saw Mr. Lattimore?

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't remember, exactly. I should think perhaps a year or two ago. I don't remember the last time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When did you leave for China and the Far East on your last trip?

Ambassador JESSUP. I sailed from San Francisco on December 20.

My memory is refreshed now that Mr. Lattimore was in Washington at a meeting which I attended shortly before that time. That was then in last December which must have been the last time I saw him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you discuss China policy with Mr. Lattimore at that time?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir; with a large group of people who were at the Department at that time. I think there were about 30 of them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What was Mr. Lattimore's capacity at that time?

Ambassador JESSUP. Mr. Lattimore's capacity was—I don't know his exact title. He is on the faculty of Johns Hopkins University, I believe the director of a research institute there—

Senator TYDINGS. The William Hines Page chair.

Ambassador JESSUP. The William Hines Page chair.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was Mr. Lattimore at that time acting in the capacity of consultant to the State Department, do you know?

Ambassador JESSUP. I could not say definitely, sir, the actual composition of that group, which I would be glad to furnish to the committee. I haven't it all in mind. I remember it included Mr. Harold Stassen, among others. They were a group of citizens of the United States who had had contact with or had ideas about the Far East and were brought down to the State Department for a conference which, as I recall, lasted 2 days, so that we could have a general discussion of views about far eastern policy. They included some businessmen, bankers, one representative of missionary interests, and a number of academic people.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How long after that meeting was—

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Senator kindly to give us the ground for this line of examination? What has it to do with the loyalty of the witness? Is this guilt by association with Mr. Lattimore? If so, I think he should tell us why Mr. Lattimore is a person one should not associate with.

Senator TYDINGS. What do you say to that?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I say I shall pursue my own line of questioning unless the committee forbids me.

Senator TYDINGS. Objection overruled. The witness will proceed.

Senator GREEN. I have made no objection. I thought we might be enlightened as to the purpose of this line of questioning, if there were any.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How long after this meeting of the State Department was it before you left for China?

Ambassador JESSUP. I can't remember the exact date of that meeting. I think it was a matter of weeks.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Two or three weeks, would you say?

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't remember the exact date. I think it was early in December and I left Washington, I believe, on the 15th to begin my trip.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you have any conversations with Mr. Lattimore of any kind after that meeting and prior to your departure for China?

Ambassador JESSUP. I do not recall any.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you have a telephone conversation with Mr. Lattimore after that meeting in the State Department and before your departure for China?

Ambassador JESSUP. I don't recall any. It is possible. I don't recall any.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall whether you had a telephone conversation with Mr. Lattimore in which you asked him to accompany you to China?

Ambassador JESSUP. I never asked him to accompany me, I never suggested it, I never thought of it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At no time?

Ambassador JESSUP. At no time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then Mr. Lattimore could not have said to you that he thought it was better that he not accompany you on that trip?

Ambassador JESSUP. We had no such conversation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Jessup, I believe you were a character witness, were you not, for Mr. Alger Hiss?

Ambassador JESSUP. I was, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Character witnesses are witnesses who attempt to meet the matter of association, are they not? When one testifies as to the character of an individual, that is testimonial as to that individual's associations and general reputation, isn't that so?

Ambassador JESSUP. My understanding of the role of character witness, Senator, is that it is a very essential part of our jury system under which traditionally a person accused is entitled to have the testimony of persons who are familiar with him in regard to his reputation in the community.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you of the same opinion about Mr. Hiss that you were when you testified as a character witness for him at his trial?

Ambassador JESSUP. The testimony which I gave in his trial, sir, as you have properly pointed out, was as a character witness, in which I testified to the reputation. I see no reason to alter the statements which I made under oath as a witness in that case.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I was asking you whether your opinion at this time would permit you to give the same evidence now as you gave at that time.

Senator GREEN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. What is the objection?

Senator GREEN. I object on the ground it has nothing to do with the testimony that has been given.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's be as broad as we can. I think it is a little beside the point.

Ambassador JESSUP. I will be glad to answer that, Senator. I would like to say this about it. It seems to me that this line of questioning, perhaps unconsciously on the Senator's part, is designed to involve me in comments upon the charges which have been made against Mr. Hiss and for which he was tried. As the Senator well knows, it is a very important part of the principles of our system that comments by members of the bar particularly, about matters which are before a court, are not appropriate. I believe that that is an important part of our system. I have been a member of the bar for some 25 years, and I do not intend to engage in a public discussion of the charges which have been made against Mr. Hiss and which are still before the courts. It is for the court to pass upon those charges.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Jessup, did you join with a group of other Columbia University professors in addressing a letter to the editor of the New York Times on the subject of the atomic bomb, which letter appeared in that paper, I believe, on February 16, 1946?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir. I should like to get that letter here before you. That was a letter, sir, which was printed in the New York Times on February 16.

Senator GREEN. What year?

Ambassador JESSUP. 1946. I will be glad to submit a photostat of it for the record. The signers of that letter were a group of the Columbia University faculty. Their names were: Prof. L. C. Dunn, I. Edman, A. P. Evans, S. Hecht, P. C. Jessup, R. M. MacIver, Edgar Miller, F. C. Mills, George B. Pegram, I. L. Rabi, J. Schilt, C. S. Shoup.

I would like to point out, sir, that among those the names of Professor Pegram and Professor Rabi are particularly well known in connection with the matters of atomic energy, since both of them were leading physicists prominently associated with what was known as the Manhattan project, which was the project under which much of the work on the development of the atomic bomb went on during the war.

Professor Pegram, the dean of the faculty at Columbia, and Professor Rabi, Nobel prize winner and one of the leading physicists engaged in the atomic research program, are two of the signers.

I would like to call attention to the fact that this letter was written some 4 months before the Baruch proposals were made known. It was a conscientious effort on the part of this group of us at Columbia to make what seemed to us at the time a useful suggestion in regard to the procedures which should be followed in the discussion of control of the atomic bomb through the United Nations. I have a photostat of that letter and will be glad to submit it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I would like to read this letter into the record. This letter is as follows under the heading "Urge bomb-making vacation. Columbia professors ask declaration to aid UNO Commission."

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In view of the establishment of the UNO Commission on the Atomic bomb, we would like to suggest a declaration of policy of the following nature by the President of the United States in order that the discussions of the UNO Commission may proceed in an atmosphere of full good faith and of confidence in their successful outcome for international peace:

1. The United States will at once stop the production of bombs from material currently produced. This includes the preparation of subassemblies and all other procedures involved in the fabrication of bombs.

2. For 1 year, which would seem to be a reasonable time for the Commission to mature its plans and to secure action on them by the governments concerned, we will stop accumulating purified plutonium and uranium-235, which are the essential ingredients of atomic bombs. The plants which produce these materials will be kept merely in a stand-by condition. For this purpose they will run at the minimum rate compatible with maintaining them in good order, but they will not accumulate the resulting purified and fissionable products. As produced, these will be eliminated by appropriate means, such as dumping them into the ocean or returning them to their original mixture.

3. We are prepared to have the disposition of our present stockpile of bombs considered as one of the items in an agreement to be entered into by us and the other governments.

I have read the letter signed by the individuals whom you named a moment ago?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I hand it now to the reporter for inclusion as exhibit 53.

Now, Dr. Jessup, in the light of the fact that it has been very widely reported that Russian zeal in the production of atomic weapons has not abated at any time, do you still feel that we should stop the production of fissionable materials for a year and dump our accumulated materials into the ocean?

Ambassador JESSUP. I certainly do not, sir. That is a statement which was made in 1946 without the benefit of hindsight. It was the general hope at that time, I believe, of the Government of the United States as well as the American people, that it would be possible to reach an international agreement for the control of atomic energy, and the policy of the Government, as is well known, was to submit proposals to the United Nations with that end in view. We have since found out that the Soviet Union is not prepared to cooperate in any feasible scheme for the control of atomic energy. Obviously under these present circumstances a proposal made in February 1946 is inapplicable.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you acquainted with Mr. Frederick Vanderbilt Field?

Ambassador JESSUP. I am, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you work with him in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Ambassador JESSUP. I did, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did he remain on in that institute after you ceased your active associations or active participation in its affairs at your insistence and request?

Ambassador JESSUP. After I terminated my affiliation?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Ambassador JESSUP. I never insisted or requested that he should continue after I left.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you aware of what public declarations Mr. Field has made with regard to his affiliation or nonaffiliation with the Communist Party?

Ambassador JESSUP. I am not familiar with the text of them. I understand he is now an editorial writer on some Communist paper and I believe he has made some statements about his sympathy for Communist causes in the last few years.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you recall whether you were sponsor in May of 1939 at a meeting of the National Emergency Conference held in the Raleigh Hotel in Washington?

Ambassador JESSUP. If I may just look at my file notes, Senator, there appears to have been, as I have been able to find, something called a National Emergency Council for Democratic Rights. Is that the one you refer to? Would you repeat again, sir, the one you have in mind?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I was going to ask you about the National Emergency Conference. This was held on May 13 and 14, 1939, at the Raleigh Hotel, in Washington.

AMBASSADOR JESSUP. I have actually at the moment no recollection of that conference. I have seen a list which purports to be a list of sponsors of this meeting. It is a long list. I have very little recollection about it. My recollection is that it was a meeting called to consider certain bills then pending before Congress in regard to aliens, so-called antialien bills pending in the Congress.

I didn't attend that meeting. I understand—I know—my name is on the list, at least as it is reproduced, and I am willing to assume that I consented to have it put on that list. I can vaguely remember some of the matters which were under discussion at that time in connection with the legislation. My recollection is that some of the bills which were then before the Congress were amended before they were enacted by the Congress. I do not recall the particular details of the bills at this time which attracted my interest, or whether those were the provisions which were rejected or accepted by the Congress in the enactment of this legislation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I take it you are aware, then, that this organization has been declared a Communist-front organization by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Ambassador JESSUP. I am not informed, sir, as to whether, at the time this meeting was held, it had been publicly proclaimed a subversive organization or whether the later finding was a finding that at the time of this meeting it was subversive. I certainly had no knowledge at the time that it was subversive, if that was the case. I don't know whether it was or not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you a sponsor of the organization which you mentioned a while ago, the National Emergency Council for Democratic Rights, in the early part of 1940?

Ambassador JESSUP. So far as I know I was not individually a sponsor of that. I find my name is listed there. Whether they continued the list of the people who were sponsors of that meeting which we have just discussed or otherwise I don't recall. I don't recall the organization or any participation in it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not have the exact date, but I believe that has been listed as a Communist-front organization by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Ambassador JESSUP. I believe that was later. I would be glad to put into the record, if you wish, Mr. Chairman, a complete list of the sponsors. They are contained in the volume, Investigation of Un-American Propaganda Activities in the United States; Special Committee on Un-American Activities, House of Representatives, on page 1210.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, again with the statement that had I been able to see the files in this case I might not have asked the questions I did ask, or I might have asked me, I must say that I consider this is an utterly inadequate examination even from the standpoint of the questions asked or the questions that might not have been asked if a full foundation of this matter could be laid, and I again suggest that we cannot investigate these matters with fairness to the witness or fairness to this committee until the files, and especially the files of these nine publicly mentioned cases, are available for free and complete examination by the members of this committee.

Senator TYDINGS. The chairman will lay before the committee the full files as soon as he can get them. In the meantime the charges were made without access to the files, and rather than let people labor under these accusations without a chance to appear and answer them, we have given each one who has so far requested, demanded, or insisted upon a hearing the chance to come publicly in the same manner that the accusations were made and answer them.

However, the chairman will pursue his pursuit of the files with some optimism and hopes that he will soon have them available, but he does appreciate the difficulties in the way and he is trying to get the files by cooperation. In the event that a subpoena was issued at this or some later period in the proceedings, it is the fear of the chairman it will block the access to the files by the committee, and therefore what he wants is the files and is proceeding in the best way he knows how to get them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I just want to say that it is entirely possible and probable that when full information is available there will be other questions, and I hope that the witness will be available.

Senator TYDINGS. Maybe some of the charges might also be withdrawn when we have full access to the files.

Senator GREEN. Most unlikely.

Senator TYDINGS. I have two letters, addressed to Dr. Jessup but sent to me, which I should like to read into the record. They are short:

MY DEAR JESSUP: I am shocked and distressed by the attack on your integrity as a public servant.

Throughout your intimate service with me while I was Secretary of State you were clearly outstanding as a representative of the Government both as to your masterful presentations and the firmness of your opposition to all Soviet or Communist attacks or pressures. This was conspicuously the case during your handling on the Security Council of the Berlin blockade issue.

Both the Under Secretary, Mr. Lovett, and I counted you as a great source of strength to the State Department during those critical days.

Faithfully yours,

G. C. MARSHALL.

The second letter:

MY DEAR JESSUP: I am writing to tell you how much your university deplores the association of your name with the current loyalty investigation in the United States Senate.

Your long and distinguished record as a scholar and a public servant has won for you the respect of your colleagues and of the American people as well. No one who has known you can for a moment question the depth or sincerity of your devotion to the principles of Americanism. Your university associates and I are confident that any impression to the contrary will be quickly dispelled as the facts become known.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. Dr. Jessup, in the first place let me congratulate you on the way you have so thoroughly cleared whatever charges, so-called, have been made against you.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you.

Senator GREEN. There occurred to me as you testified two thoughts. One is, how fortunate you are that you are able to do this thing so easily from the high level of your reputation and friends who are glad to come to your assistance. What would have happened to you when you were unknown instead of known, if you had tried to recover from a similar charge? You would have had a shattered reputation under those circumstances. It is appalling, the harm that would have been done and the harm that may be done to younger men in the service under similar circumstances.

The other matter is this: The terrible effect on the success of our foreign policies when confidence in the State Department is shattered. You spoke briefly on that. I wish you would elaborate, if you will, a little on what effect this particular hearing or this particular series of hearings has on the success of our foreign policy abroad, or may have.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I just at that point suggest that I am not objecting to that question. I think it is a perfectly proper question for the Senator to ask, but he objected strenuously to my asking questions which did not go to the question of loyalty, in his words.

Senator GREEN. I did not object. The chairman stated I objected. All I wanted to know was the grounds on which the questions were asked, and you explained it was based on a portion of his statement. All I am asking him now is to elaborate what he stated too briefly in his original statement.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green is correct. The chairman put those words in his mouth.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think it is a very proper question to ask the witness.

Senator TYDINGS. Everybody agrees it is a proper question. The witness will proceed with his answer.

Ambassador JESSUP. Senator, one point which I tried to bring out in my statement was this, that when you have representatives of the United States making public statements or official statements to officials of other governments in regard to the questions which are now at issue in the international scene, particularly between the Soviet Union and the United States, it is obviously of the utmost importance that the officials of other governments and the world as a whole should have confidence that the official spokesmen of the United States are persons who are trusted by their Government.

Now I have found, sir, in the course of my trip through the Asian countries, that as you get particular items of news carried from the United States and perhaps reproduced only in the local papers throughout 15 or 17 countries of Asia that locally they do not always distinguish between the statements which are officially made on behalf of the United States in foreign policy by the Secretary of State and statements which are made by other persons in high positions in the American Government. And frequently the effect on the people in these other countries is to get an impression which I think is a wrong impression, that the United States is not united in its policy of combating international communism and the imperialism of the Soviet Union.

It seems to me, as I tried to point out in my statement, Senator Green, that it is so important at this very serious juncture in international affairs that the United States should speak with one voice, and that we should make it perfectly clear not only to the governments of other countries to whom you can privately explain one thing and another but to all the peoples in all the other countries of the world that the United States is a country which wholeheartedly supports the policy which has been enunciated officially on our behalf.

For example, in this particular connection, I refer to the statement by the Secretary of State in his recent speech at the University of California.

I am not suggesting, Senator, that in our system of government we want in any way to emulate the Soviet system, which makes it impossible for anyone to disagree with the government and line. We are proud of our system which permits individuals to differ. But I suggest in the context that we are discussing that it is a matter of the utmost seriousness and a matter which does affect the success of the international policies of the United States if the qualifications and the integrity of the persons selected, confirmed by the Senate, to represent the United States in these negotiations, are called into question.

And that is why I have tried to stress, sir, my feeling that it is important that these insinuations and charges should be cleared up.

Senator GREEN. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. Dr. Jessup, I am proud to have you as a constituent of mine.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you, sir.

Senator McMAHON. And I am delighted that you are a fellow citizen of the State of Connecticut. I am also happy that we have you to represent us in the United Nations. I think that you are entitled to the thanks of all of our people for the magnificent work which you have done and to which General Marshall and General Eisenhower have paid tribute. I join with them.

Ambassador JESSUP. Thank you very much, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, just one question.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It is generated as a result of the answer to Senator Green's question.

You said, Dr. Jessup, that people in the Orient, for instance, might look askance at disputes in this country and say we were not united. I wonder what the people in the Orient think when they find that Russian communism has apparently gained by either diplomacy or something else what it probably could not have gained by war at this time; in other times, the complete dominion of China, all China. In other words, do the people of the Orient believe that we, by such a policy, are approving the Communist capture of China?

Ambassador JESSUP. No; certainly not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You said that certainly that would be very fatal to our prestige, certainly among those in China who do not believe in communism.

Ambassador JESSUP. I would like to point out, Senator, that there are always stages in international affairs in which the scales go up and down. There were stages during the war at which it appeared to the people of Asia that we were licked and that Japan was the master of Asia, and they were wrong. There were momentary successes of the Japanese forces and the people of Asia were wrong in thinking that that meant that the United States was licked. If anybody now thinks that at the present juncture of international affairs the United States is licked, they are wrong again.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I may suggest that during the period when Japan was in the ascendancy there was still a fighting Nationalist Chinese group there that gave physical and visible evidence of resistance to communism. The situation, so far as I have been able to find out, seems to be quite different now; even with our own declarations communism has been extremely successful in China. It has driven the Nationalist Chinese Government over to Formosa—what is left of it—and with our policy declarations that we are pulling out our support, there seems to be no physical evidence in China upon which those who dislike communism and oppose it have the least peg to hang their hats on.

Ambassador JESSUP. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to suggest that I hope to have an opportunity to discuss with the full Committee on Foreign Relations the results of my trip and the information which I gathered at that time. I think it would perhaps be more appropriate if I went into these details of the situation on that occasion, if that is in accordance with the wishes of the subcommittee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not care to continue discussing high policy at this time. I only asked those questions—

Senator TYDINGS. I am sure Senator Connally, of the Foreign Relations Committee, who is here, will seize the first available opportunity to call the committee together so it may hear you, Dr. Jessup. I know him well enough to assume that that is so, because he is always very diligent in bringing information before the committee from those who are well informed.

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Connally). I apologize for the interruption. We have that in mind. We were waiting, however, somewhat the convenience of Dr. Jessup. We decided he probably would not want to appear before the full committee until he had met these serious charges, or so-called charges, whatever they are. So we have not approached him about a time when it will be convenient, but we hope you will hold yourself in readiness. We are very anxious to have you before us and have a full exposition of developments in your trip abroad.

Senator TYDINGS. Do not leave the room, committee members, for a moment, because there is no scheduled meeting at present for the committee, but I may want to get in touch with you this afternoon in the light of information I hope to get sometime during the day and arrange for a meeting.

In the meantime, Dr. Jessup, I can always reach you, I suppose, through the State Department.

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you intend to be here for a few days?

Ambassador JESSUP. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Those members of the press who have requested me to get copies of the two letters that were put in the record, if they will come forward I will read them to them now.

The meeting will stand adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.
(Whereupon, at 1 p. m., the hearing was adjourned, to resume upon the call of the Chair.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

TUESDAY, MARCH 21, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call at 2:30 p. m. in room G-23, United States Capitol, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, and Hickenlooper.

Also present: Senator McCarthy.

Senator TYDINGS. This meeting has been called by the chairman, after conferring with Senator McCarthy, so that Senator McCarthy might give to the committee the name of the very important person in the State Department concerning whom he desired to give the committee information, and Senator McCarthy is here and ready to proceed.

Senator McCARTHY. There is nothing mysterious about this one. This is the case of Owen Lattimore. This has all been put in the record already, plus some exhibits.

You understand when I talk about what you will find in the files, this is to the best of my knowledge.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right.

Now, particularly, you are meaning the loyalty file in this matter?

Senator McCARTHY. I don't know what part of this you will find in the loyalty file.

Senator TYDINGS. How about the Civil Service file?

Senator McCARTHY. I understand that the Civil Service Commission has in its file what ultimately goes in the loyalty file. The benefit of getting the Civil Services file as well as the State Department loyalty file is largely because in that way you have some check as to what is in the State Department loyalty file.

I might say on that, even assuming that there is no attempt to rifle the State Department loyalty files, assuming they are protecting them as fully as they can, the system of filing them is such that it is entirely possible that you will find many things missing from the loyalty file which are in the Civil Service Commission file, but actually there should be the same material in the State Department loyalty file that is in the Civil Service file.

To get to this fellow Lattimore, for Lattimore's stuff I think you will have to rely quite largely upon the FBI file.

Senator McMAHON. Have you contacted Hoover? Is Hoover in favor of displaying the FBI files?

Senator McCARRHY. I wouldn't know.

(Discussion of Mr. Lattimore was continued off the record.)

Senator TRYON. It appears that he was once an adviser of Chiang Kai-shek. Then, when last year the State Department "white paper" was written it actively reflected the thinking of Mr. Lattimore. In the Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Lattimore wrote, "Sound policy would avoid premature excessive strategic development in the Far East." Again, "United States policy should aim to increase the ability of countries in Asia to do without Russia." Again, "For the problem of recognition of the new Government of China, the United Nations offers the ideal avenue to a solution. If a majority of the non-Communist countries in Europe, Latin America and Asia should vote to send the new Chinese representative (meaning Communist) to the United Nations, the United States should not vote against that verdict," and so on and so on.

That is from the New York World-Telegram and Sun of the 15th of March 1950.

Senator McCARRHY. That gives you some of his background.

He has also written a considerable amount. In case you care to get some of his writings, he wrote a book, Solution In Asia. I haven't read it at all. I have a few excerpts from it. He wrote for Pacific Affairs. But this is entirely separate and apart from his writings. As I say, when I give you this information it is to the best of my knowledge, and I am absolutely confident that this is the case that you really should find—well, it's explosive. If you crack this case it will be the biggest espionage case in the history of this country. That is my own personal thought on it.

He has been over in Baltimore, as you know, with Johns Hopkins. I don't know when he has been on the payroll of the State Department. I understand that he has very free access to a desk there and access to all the files, and comes in whenever he cares to.

Jessup has had a very close relationship with Lattimore. I personally think that Jessup does not have the slightest conception of what Lattimore is doing. I think that Jessup thinks that Lattimore is a liberal individual who feels perhaps that Communist Russia is more accurate than most of us feel Russia is. Beyond that I don't have anything that indicates that Jessup has the picture of Lattimore's activities, but I do think the files will show you that Lattimore has been using Jessup to do the things which he, Lattimore, himself couldn't do.

Lattimore is now, as I understand, over in the Khyber Pass. As I say, on this your information will be a lot more accurate than mine. I do not think he is on the payroll of the Department of State or any Government agency. I understand that he was invited over by the Afghanistan Government. Khyber Pass, as you know, is the one route from Russia over to the new area. What he is doing there I don't know. I do not think the files will show anything as of now definitely of what he is doing, because any information they will get on that will be after a considerable lapse of time.

That is about the entire picture, that his files—the FBI files—I think will just give you the one case.

Senator McMAHON. Have you seen the FBI files.

Senator McCARTHY. I think I know what is in them.

Senator McMAHON. That is not the question. Have you seen them?

Senator McCARTHY. I will tell you, Senator McMahon, do not worry about whether I have seen them or not.

Senator McMAHON. I am worried. You will either answer or you will not. You have or you have not.

Senator TYDINGS. Nobody is going to ask for your sources.

Senator McCARTHY. Senator McMahon, let me tell you this.

Senator McMAHON. Do not tell me anything. I am not interested in a single thing. That technique you have is not going to work on me. If you cannot answer the question, that you have or you have not, then I am not interested in anything else you are going to say. That is the question: Have you seen the FBI file or have you not?

Senator McCARTHY. I heard your question.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me say this—

Senator McMAHON. You refuse to answer?

Senator McCARTHY. No; I don't refuse to answer.

Senator TYDINGS. We do not want to know your sources. But what I think we are entitled to know is, is this a speculation or have you had some contact with the files in one way or another that makes you think you have some accurate information?

Senator McCARTHY. I am about as certain as I could be of anything as to what those files will show. As to whether I have seen them, who might have helped me get information, or things like that—

Senator TYDINGS. I do not want to know that.

Senator McCARTHY. I know you do not.

Senator McMAHON. Let me point out that that is a very material question. I want to make my question clear. We have not had any decision from the executive department as to whether we are going to see the FBI files. If the Senator from Wisconsin is permitted the FBI files, then I do not know why this committee should not be permitted to see the FBI files.

Senator TYDINGS. I would rather think, from what he has already said, that he has talked with somebody who has seen the files in whom he has confidence. I think it would help our investigation, and I have no ulterior purpose to serve except frankness and honesty as far as it is possible, and I assure you it comes from the heart: I think you might say, "I haven't personally seen the files, but I know a man who has seen the files whose name I won't disclose, in which I have confidence, who tells me this and that and the other thing is in the files." In other words, it will help us in our investigation if you will testify along that line.

Senator McCARTHY. I think that is a very reasonable request, and I might say that I have not seen the original FBI files.

Senator McMAHON. The original FBI files. Have you seen a copy of them?

Senator McCARTHY. I think, Senator, whether I have seen a copy or not, not having seen the original I would have no way of knowing whether I saw a copy unless I compared it with the original.

Senator TYDINGS. Have you seen what purports to be a copy, or have you got your evidence from somebody who has seen the files? That is all.

Senator McCARTHY. Let me say this. To the best of my knowledge, and I think it is good, I think it has been proven so far in dates and places that I have been giving the committee, the FBI file will show in detail not the case merely of a man who happens to favor Russia, not the case of a man who may disagree with what we think about Russia, but a man who is definitely an espionage agent.

Senator McMAHON. See how he goes away from the question?

Senator TYDINGS. He has tried to answer it. Let me say this. He has said this: He has said he has not seen the files, but he said if we saw the files he has reason to believe that this, that, and the other thing he is going to outline would be in the files. I would like him to say that. I do not want him to give away anything; I do not want him to name anybody; I do not want to know his sources and do not want him to do any of that.

Senator McMAHON. Neither do I.

Senator TYDINGS. But I would like to know if you have seen what purports to be a copy of the file or whether someone in whom you have confidence has seen the file and the following things are likely to turn up there. That is all.

Senator McCARTHY. I know this—

Senator TYDINGS. I cannot see where there is any harm in answering that question.

Senator McCARTHY. It is the source of my information. If divulging that would actually aid in getting at the facts in the Lattimore case you would have it.

Senator TYDINGS. I will not ask you for the source.

Senator McCARTHY. I will stretch a point a long way if the committee thinks information will be of benefit. Even though I do not think so, I will go as far as I can in getting the information. But where we have something that clearly, in my opinion, will be of no benefit to the committee in arriving at the facts, then I just think it is a waste of time to go into those things.

Senator TYDINGS. Listen; I do not want to get your sources, and I will never ask you intentionally to disclose any of the sources that fortify you in what you want to say.

Senator McCARTHY. I appreciate that.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not want to know it by indirection; I do not want to put anybody on the trail to find out. I am not interested in that.

Senator McMAHON. Let me add that I feel the same way.

Senator TYDINGS. But I am interested in knowing whether or not you have seen a copy of the files or whether or not somebody told you what was in the files, simply as a means of weighing the credence of what you say. That is not going to stop us from looking at any files we can get hold of. Do you understand me?

But suppose I get hold of the files after this hearing and find nothing in them, just to illustrate. I would want to ask why certain papers are not in those files. Do you see my point?

Senator McCARTHY. I do; yes.

Let me say this, and I am certainly not trying to avoid your question. I do not know if you have had any experience with the FBI files or not. They are serialized and numbered. You could take things out of those files. It would be extremely difficult.

In the Kansas City case, which was not made public, I do not believe, some of the FBI files were obtained, and it did appear that a sizable number of documents had been removed. But the staff apparently—Flanagan and Rogers, I believe, were on the staff—had no difficulty at all detecting the number of documents that were removed. I think fortunately we did nothing about that publicly.

I was giving a picture of the files. As I recall, the evidence was that Hoover did not know anything about any removals, and such like. I merely mention that to show you if you get those files I do not think you will have any trouble at all knowing what is in them.

I have not talked to Hoover about this. If I did, I do not suppose he would give me the information.

Senator TYDINGS. I haven't either.

Senator MCCARTHY. I think if, as chairman of this committee, you take this testimony over to him and say "Is this substantially true?" with the respect I have for Hoover I am sure he won't lie to you.

I want to make it very clear that Mr. Hoover has not given me any information himself of any kind from the files.

Senator TYDINGS. I know that.

All that I am asking you is this. I do not want to know the source. I would appreciate it if you would tell me whether or not you have seen—and it is not difficult to see a great many documents that are secret—what purports to be a copy of the files. You have said, I know, you have not seen the files; or whether someone in whom you have confidence has said, "I believe you will find this stuff in the files." That is all I want to know, just "yes" or "no," and you can go on with your story. There can't be any harm done by that question. It does not say who told you. I don't want to know that. I just would like to know the method.

Senator MCCARTHY. I hope you don't push that question. You ask that question; the next question, of course, if I were questioning and if I did want to find out what the sources were, would be "Have you seen a photostat?" Then, "How large a document was it?"

Senator TYDINGS. I will not ask you any of those questions.

Senator MCCARTHY. Anything that I would give you I think would tend to disclose the source of my information. I do not think the committee should ask for that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Senator McCarthy this question: Are the sources of your information which you have alleged here with regard to Mr. Lattimore and what is contained in his file, in your opinion and judgment, of sufficient reliability so that you rely upon them utterly and sincerely in basing your allegations?

Senator MCCARTHY. That's right, and I am absolutely convinced beyond any doubt that if the committee sees that file they will agree with me wholeheartedly that I have perhaps understated the case rather than overstated it.

Senator TYDINGS. I am as sincere as any man can be in this case. This man is the top of the whole ring of which Hiss was a part. I think you will find this: I think you will find that Stephen Brunauer—and as I say I do not have the definiteness about this that I have about the others—is tied up with that ring, and the No. 1 case that I gave you, Herbert Fierst. 'That was the No. 1 case of the 81.' He, incidentally, was post-audited by the Civil Service Commission the same as Service, and they sent it back to the State Department, I understand—the State Department Loyalty Board. Just what they requested I don't know, but they expressed dissatisfaction, and I understand the State Department Loyalty Board shortly after marked the case "Closed."

As I say, I do not feel my source of information on this is as reliable as the stuff on Lattimore. I believe, however, that you will undoubtedly find that Fierst and Brunauer are tied up with Lattimore in this case.

Senator McMAHON. Can I ask a question: You apparently thought what I was trying to do was to get your source, in which I am not interested at all. I wish to point out to you that if the files are open to you as a Senator, as apparently they must be, because you tell us what is in the FBI files, it is very material for us to know that in making our request for a look at the same files, because if they are going to be opened to Senator McCarthy they certainly ought to be open to a Senate committee. So much for that.

Now let me ask you this question about Lattimore:

Senator TYDINGS. Before you leave that, I want to serve notice here on every man in this committee, and in your presence, that I am going to do everything that I can do to get every file that is requested. The reason I am proceeding as I am is that the precedents show clearly that if I issue a subpoena they can turn it down and there is nothing I can do about it. What I want to do is get the files. Anything that you can say or do that puts me in a position to get those files is going to help you to prove your case, assuming that these facts as you allege them are true.

Now, if you do not give me something to go on, if I want to go to Hoover and show him this testimony, if I say "I want you to read this," I want to ask you if you can devise a way where I can verify this or not. Unfortunately Mr. Hoover, for this hearing, has taken the position, so I am well advised although I have not talked with him, that the minute he ever discloses one of the FBI files in the future if he goes to somebody for an interview about John Smith, the person, knowing that the files were subsequently opened, is going to refuse to be as frank with him as he would otherwise be, and he is scared of it.

I understand by the grapevine—I have nothing from the White House and nothing from any source except general gossip—that Hoover is protesting against the opening of any of these files, because FBI reports are in the loyalty files.

Senator McMAHON. But Mr. Hoover certainly will have to recognize—

Senator TYDINGS. Hoover is no softy, and he isn't going to do this unless we can show him a particular circumstance that will justify him in making an exception. Mark my words!

Senator McMAHON. But mark my words on this: If Mr. Hoover's files are going to be divulged to Senator McCarthy, and by him the contents of them to the press, then certainly the reason why we should not get them falls to the ground, because the Senator has made this charge against Lattimore. True, he did not attach his name to it last night, but he has made this charge. He has made it on the basis of the FBI files.

Now, so long as a charge has been made on the basis of the files, I don't see how they are going to keep that FBI file away from us. Therefore it is very material to find out whether the Senator from Wisconsin actually did have access to those files.

Now, whether he physically had the file in his office or in his hands does not make a bit of difference. But did somebody read the file, somebody in a position of trust in the FBI, and give it to the Senator, or did he show him copies of the files?

That is why I thought it was very material to us to know the answer to that question.

Senator TYDINGS. I agree with you.

Senator McMAHON. I would like to ask the Senator one further question right along that point.

Senator, in all of this information regarding Lattimore, which you say is so patent, which demonstrates him to be a bad egg, is there anything in your information to indicate that the Federal Bureau of Investigation turned over his case to any district attorney or to the Attorney General or to the Assistant Attorney General for prosecution?

Senator McCARTHY. I frankly do not know what the top men of the Department think on the subject of whether or not the case is ready for criminal action. I know this. I know that there are some who are aware of at least some of the facts—at least this is my best information—who feel that the case is ready for prosecution. I think you will find some in the Department who feel that the evidence is gotten in such a fashion that while it proves the guilt, it may not be in such shape that it could be presented in court.

Senator TYDINGS. The answer is "No," that you do not know it has been turned over to anybody for prosecution up to now?

Senator McCARTHY. Here is my thought on that, and I do not know too much about the procedure. I do not believe that they ever turn a case over. I think it is discussed with the Justice Department and somebody in Justice who is interested is kept apprised of the facts as they develop, and I believe that the attorneys over in Justice, in the Justice Department, are the ones who decide when they will take the case and start prosecution.

Senator McMAHON. That is not entirely true. It is sort of a mixed question. I mean by that that it is a mixed decision. It is true that in some cases the daily reports or weekly reports go forward to the Criminal Division. In other cases, according to my memory—of course this is 10 years ago or more—they go through as they finish a case.

The Justice Department, at least while I was there, did not undertake a prosecution unless the investigative department said "We have completed the investigation and we are through. In other words, we have done all we can."

If you did not have that system in force you would find that you would be springing cases with only half of the case being investigated, springing them publicly, and I think it is very material to me to know, you see, and very important to know, whether this case has been turned over to the Criminal Division by the FBI as a completed matter, or whether it is still in process between the Division and the FBI.

Senator TYDINGS. That would be a matter of record, and all you are asking Senator McCarthy is, Does he know whether or not the matter has been put in the hands of the Department of Justice or any branch thereof for prosecution, and I take it from his answer that so far as he is advised, he does not know.

Senator McCARTHY. That is correct.

Senator McMAHON. You do not charge any dereliction in the prosecution forces of the Department? Do you charge any dereliction, from your present knowledge of the case, in the nonprosecution of the case?

Senator McCARTHY. The answer to that is "No," for the reason that I do not know what the men in charge consider sufficient evidence to prosecute. One of the reasons why I wanted to take this in executive session is that it is entirely possible when you talk to Mr. Hoover or someone you may find that they feel they have a case that they could prosecute but they want this man, for all I know, left in the Department so they can follow up other leads.

Senator McMAHON. You see, that is very important to our investigation, to know whether there is any charge—

(Discussion was continued off the record.)

Senator TYDINGS. What we want to know is this: Why do you think, in addition to what you have told us, that this man Lattimore is a bad fellow and the head of a spy ring, and so on? What makes you think that yourself?

Senator McCARTHY. I think this:

(Discussion was continued off the record.)

Senator GREEN. I have been trying to listen and find out, but I have not yet found out, what the charge is.

Senator McCARTHY. I think he is one of the top espionage agents. This man, I think, is one of the top espionage agents. If it is necessary—it may be, under your resolution—for you to charge him with being that, I will be glad to do it. In my opinion he is, and I don't know what kind of charge I should make, but I will be glad to make any charge that is necessary.

I am very serious about this. One of the reasons I hope you get this file is that I think it will dispel in the minds of some of the members of the committee this feeling: Some of them, I believe, have had the honest feeling that this was being done for political purposes. I think if I did not bring this forth I would be completely derelict in my duty, and I think after you see this case then we will be able to sit down and just man-to-man across the table discuss the other cases a lot more freely. In other words, if you get this, this will prove that I am completely wrong or it will prove I am 100 percent right. If it proves I am 100 percent right, I know in your mind no longer will there be any suspicion, as I think you have had that and most likely honestly so, that this was being done for political purposes. If you find I am right about Lattimore, then I think that a lot of the suspicion we have had flowing back and forth in this committee will be completely dispelled and I think we can go ahead and do a good job.

Senator TYDINGS. You think Lattimore is one of the biggest?

Senator McCARTHY. By far and away.

Senator GREEN. What do you claim he has done to show that? Why do you think so?

Senator McCARTHY. I think he is the top Russian spy.

Senator GREEN. Why do you think so? I thought you were going to give us some evidence.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me just say this—

Senator GREEN. If you do not want me to pursue my question, I will leave.

Senator McCARTHY. Because I think the files will show he has been contacting and giving material to Russian espionage agents as part of an espionage ring.

Senator GREEN. I want to know if that is anything more than a suspicion on your part.

Senator McCARTHY. There is a firm conviction from all of the information that I can get that that will be in the files. If, when you get that file, it is not there, you will know that there is not too much to my claim.

Senator GREEN. You suspect that there is information in the file, but you do not know what, which shall sustain your belief?

Senator McCARTHY. No; that is not right, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Correct me. I am trying to find out what you really mean.

Senator McCARTHY. I do not suspect. I am firmly convinced that I know that the Lattimore file, the FBI file, will convince you the same way I am now convinced, that you are dealing with the top espionage agent.

Senator GREEN. Have you any facts that convince you of that?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes; I think you will find in that file—

Senator GREEN. They are in your mind, too; aren't they, now?

Senator McCARTHY. I am giving you the benefit of all my investigation.

Senator GREEN. Yes, but you are just giving me the conclusions. Your conclusions must be based on certain facts that have been brought to your attention, and I was wondering whether you were going to give us those facts.

Senator McCARTHY. I am trying to give them to you. Can we have an agreement that I can complete my answer before I am interrupted? (The reporter reread the pending question.)

Senator McCARTHY. The fact is that to the best of my knowledge the file will show the complete workings of an espionage ring. That is the best I can give you, Senator. I have not been able to run down all the vast amount of work that the Government investigative agencies have been doing. I am telling you that this is the one case in which I think we can easily have a determination by this committee as to whether or not my charges are well-founded or not. I think for the balance of the investigation you should know that. If I am completely mistaken on this case, then you can assume that many of the other cases—

Senator TYDINGS. This is the key?

Senator McCARTHY. Yes, sir; and when you see that file, Senator Green, I am sure that you will agree with me wholeheartedly.

Senator GREEN. Let me ask the question again in another way. Have you any evidence that produces conviction in your mind that he delivered confidential papers to an enemy?

Senator McCARTHY. I frankly cannot even come remotely complete in giving you the case you would have in the file. I think you have simply got to get that file. I don't think I can give you enough material to make out a criminal case with the investigation I have. All I can tell you, Senator, is what, to the best of my knowledge, is in those files.

Senator GREEN. If that is all, it seems to me that my designation of it as suspicion is in your mind a conviction. It seems to me you must have some facts upon which to base it.

Senator McCARTHY. You might call it a suspicion; I call it a conviction. We have a different name for it, apparently.

Senator TYDINGS. What I get out of it is this: That you have a conviction, based on certain things that you have seen or heard, which lead you to the conclusion that if these files are examined, evidence will be found to show that this man is the keyman in a Russian espionage ring.

Senator McMAHON. He is a traitor.

Senator McCARTHY. That is putting it pretty well. I think he is.

Senator TYDINGS. Furthermore, I get this out of the combined colloquy that has gone on, that without disclosing how you have that conviction, information has come to you which leads you to that conclusion.

The next thing I get out of it is that the information has come to you in a way you do not care to disclose—information which supports the position that you have taken.

Senator McCARTHY. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. The next thing I get out of it is that you yourself said you have not seen the files, which I would assume to be true without asking you, but that in other ways you have received information as to what is likely to be found in the files.

Senator McCARTHY. I have not seen the files.

Senator TYDINGS. But in other ways you have formed your opinion from information that you think will be in the files.

Senator McCARTHY. From all the information I can possibly get.

Senator TYDINGS. Have you any questions, Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. I think it is exceedingly important that we develop, in view of what Senator McCarthy says, whether or not, in addition to there being a traitor in the Government, there has been laxity in rooting out this traitor, and therefore I wish to develop in the questions I now ask, if I can develop, whether or not the Senator, from his information, thinks that in addition to the traitor being there there has been dereliction of duty in bringing him to light. What is your conclusion on that, Senator?

Senator McCARTHY. Senator McMahon, I am not evading your question. First, we start at the top. When you ask that question I say to myself, "Is Acheson derelict in his duty?" I do not know what part of these facts has been brought to his mind. I just frankly think that you will have to wait until you get the files and find out how much of that has been transmitted to State and how much has been transmitted to Justice.

Let me say this: In order to answer that question you would have to first know whether he is being used as a decoy at this time. I do not think he is, but that is possible.

No. 2, whether or not this is true: For all I know, the Attorney General may have said to State, "Keep him on. Let him use that desk, because if you deny him the desk he will know that we are after him."

I would say this: If he is not being used as a decoy—no; it is impossible to answer, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. In other words, you have not enough knowledge to make the further charge that there is dereliction of duty existing on some official's part?

Senator McCARTHY. I do not think I would be in a position to make any charge.

Senator McMAHON. That is all I want to find out. Let us find out where we are. That is a perfectly reasonable position for you to take. I have no quarrel with it at all.

Of course, as you say, there may be that explanation of it, assuming your substantive facts are correct. On the other hand, it may be that if your substantive facts are correct the failure to have done something about it is of direct concern to this committee.

Senator McCARTHY. I think we will get along a lot better, and you gentlemen will have a lot more confidence in what I tell you, after we get that file.

Senator GREEN. You mean that you can supplement the file and give us more information after the file is produced?

Senator McCARTHY. No. I think this: I think maybe in your mind you have a suspicion of these facts I am giving you. I think this will prove definitely how much weight you can place upon my testimony from now on.

Senator GREEN. You have additional testimony to give?

Senator McCARTHY. I might say this: I have a number of former FBI men working for me. We are trying to develop facts. Anything that is developed will be made available to the committee.

Senator GREEN. Have you now any information in addition to what you say we can get from the files?

Senator McCARTHY. Do you mean on Lattimore?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Senator McCARTHY. I have been getting information about him for sometime, Senator. I brought the conclusions together and put them in this document. At that time you recall I asked to be further heard in executive session, because at that time I did not want to disclose the additional information which I gave here.

Senator GREEN. Are you willing to now?

Senator McCARTHY. I think you have everything that will be of value to the committee. I do not think there is anything additional that I can give you.

Senator GREEN. You have not given us any information about his misdoings.

Senator McCARTHY. Take that along with you and read it. I gave you all that.

Senator GREEN. When?

Senator McCARTHY. The other day in the hearing.

Senator GREEN. I don't understand.

Senator TYDINGS. He read the statement the other day in the hearing.

Senator GREEN. Oh, that. You have no additional facts?

Senator McCARTHY. There is nothing additional that I think would be of great value now. As any facts come to me in regard to this case or any of the cases that will be of benefit, I will certainly be glad to give them to the committee. After all, we are doing the same job here, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Certainly. From the way you expressed yourself, I thought you had additional information that you would give us after we had seen the files.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Contrary to opinion, I am not concerned with the method or details at the moment of acquiring these files. I am concerned with the fact of acquiring the nine files that have already been mentioned publicly.

Senator TYDINGS. I am trying to get them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not concerned at this moment whether we got them by subpoena or otherwise. The important thing to me is to get our people to have access to the files, and I think that this committee is in a position to have sometime since made a formal request. So far as I know, this committee has made no request.

Senator TYDINGS. I took for granted you would want the chairman to do it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not criticizing what the chairman has done. That is not the point. I am saying so, so far as I know, there has been no formal action of this committee even requesting these files.

Senator TYDINGS. I have done this. I have said the committee wants these files. Senator McCarthy wants these files. I have reason to believe that the President wants to give us the files. I likewise have reason to believe that the State Department wants to give us the files. I likewise have reason to believe that Mr. Hoover and Attorney General Howard McGrath probably are concerned about this question of opening the files for fear of its effect on future investigations, but I have said: "I don't care what McGrath wants or what Hoover wants, I want those files."

Well, the State Department says: "We want to give them to you. We are trying to work out a procedure whereby we can give them to you. We have to communicate with the Executive."

They had hoped to give them to me on Monday. I did not get them on Monday, and I am after them every day on the telephone, doing all I can. If I subpoena them I am going to make them all mad and won't get the files.

Assuming Senator McCarthy has a good case here, and he may have it for all I know, it is not going to be proven unless we can get hold of the files, because the evidence we have to rely on, as he himself admits, is the files.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have never demanded up to this point that the first move in the acquisition of files or the attempt to get them be by subpoena.

Senator TYDINGS. What do you want me to do?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. For the sake of the record and for the sake of procedure, I now move that this committee proceed first to request the delivery of all of the loyalty, personnel, and employment files from the Department of State on the nine persons publicly named by Senator McCarthy; that we also request employment, security, personnel, and loyalty files, whatever they are, all the files, on the same individuals from the Civil Service Commission; and that they request from the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the Department of Justice, whoever has the authority, or both, the complete investigative files on these same nine individuals.

In making that motion I want to say that I do not say that the request should be exclusive. If we get turned down on that request, and I am not trying to push the chairman—Senator TYDINGS. We will deal with it then, if we get turned down.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I make this motion so there will be some formal action and sense of this committee, rather than just the chairman of the committee going out on his own on this business.

Senator TYDINGS. I think it is a good suggestion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then I would like to suggest, as a part of that motion, that request be made immediately of those departments, and I want to make it clear that if we are turned down on any of those then I shall pursue it immediately with a motion to subpoena, in the language of the resolution. I feel we have a duty to attempt to carry out the mandate of the resolution. Maybe your brief is right. I do not say that it is or it is not.

Senator TYDINGS. You want the State Department file, the Richardson file—I will call it that for short—and the F. B. I. file?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. I shall draft, if I have time this afternoon, a formal letter, if the committee does not vote me down.

Senator GREEN. I think we ought to make a list. I think we ought to go through all the names that have been submitted and pick out those on whom we think there is reason to ask for the files. I would not limit it to the nine. I would go through all the list we have of names that have been submitted to us.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you amend that in line with his suggestion to instruct the chairman to ask for the files, or any part of the files—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No; all of the files.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you allow me, instead of asking for the nine files, to ask for all of them?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The sense of my motion is this, and the way I feel about it: I think that we are obligated to attempt to get the nine files that are publicly named.

Senator TYDINGS. Can I ask for all of them at one time and take the nine out and look at those first?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I feel that we may have much more chance of getting them peacefully, the nine, rather than 80-some at this moment.

Senator TYDINGS. Then you do not want me to ask for any files except the nine?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes; but I would like to have the nine separately.

Senator TYDINGS. I have already asked for them all, but I will now formally write a letter and particularly ask for the nine you have in mind.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At this time.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you give me the list of those nine this afternoon in my office, at your earliest convenience, Senator McCarthy, so I will be sure to get the nine names you have in mind?

Senator GREEN. I do not think he is the only one to be sure as to these nine names and I do not see why there is objection to increasing that number to all those who have been named.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. If I may conclude, I will say I am putting the nine in one category for the reason that they have been publicly mentioned by name and they are apt to come and demand a hearing, and I think it is utterly futile to attempt to question a person without those files. Maybe after seeing the files there may not be a single question to ask of those individuals.

Senator TYDINGS. You want the files, do you not?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Here is the reason I asked for all of them: If we get permission to see these files, we will get it a whole lot easier if we can get them in all at one time than if I ask for four or five every day. That is just common sense, because there will be a precedent started the minute they give us the files, and they will want to know how many files you want and everything else, which seems simple here, but when I am on the other end of the thing with one man down there it is tough.

Senator, I told you in the beginning that I was going to exert every influence I had to get these files, and I tell you I am standing between not getting them now and getting them, more than anybody. If I go down and ask them for nine, it does not seem to me that they will want to give us nine and say "Come another day for nine" and "Come another day for another nine." If I ask for them all, to have them locked up in a room, we will then, when they are on the table, say "Let's pick out those nine and go through those first."

It may seem simple to say, "What difference does it make, to give you nine at one time?" It does make a difference. I am dealing with some people in the administration who are opposed as a matter of principle to turning over one of these files, and I have done the best job of salesmanship to get them of which I am capable.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You understand that in no way am I resisting or opposing the acquisition of all the files.

Senator TYDINGS. If I get them all it is satisfactory to you?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On all the lists that Senator McCarthy has listed. I have a feeling—this is just in executive meeting—that there may be a number of names on some of the longer lists that we may consider inconsequential or of no value to get and pursue. That may be true; I don't know. My thought is, we will get the nine, look at those, and then get the others.

Senator TYDINGS. You do not want it to go out to the press that we have only asked for nine files. I will have to say that I wanted them all, the Republicans wanted only nine, if they put me up against the wall. These fellows have ways of finding out things. Why not get them all, and we will agree right here and now that we will look at the nine first.

Senator MCCARTHY. I think that is right.

Senator TYDINGS. If I go down for nine files they will say "What is going on?" These fellows will have it in the afternoon paper and

I will be put in the position of sitting out as the iron curtain in front of this investigation.

Senator McCarthy. One of the files you want to get is the personnel file of Charles W. Thayer. He is one of the names. He was until several weeks ago in charge of the desk of the Voice of America in New York and he was, I understand, assigned to those two Russian fliers that were brought to this country. I think you will find letters from the FBI objecting to that because of his unnatural conduct.

Senator McMahon. Do you mean to suggest he is a pervert?

Senator Hickenlooper. Entirely independently of anything Senator McCarthy says, or that stems from him at all, I have some independent information on Thayer which I believe to be accurate. It comes from a pretty high source, that he is a bad apple.

Senator Tydings. Why not make your motion to tell me to get the nine files?

Senator Hickenlooper. I move that the chairman be authorized and directed by the subcommittee to immediately request all of the security, loyalty, and personnel files of the State Department and of the Civil Service Commission and the FBI investigative files on, No. 1, the nine persons publicly mentioned by Senator McCarthy; No. 2, the list of 25 that he gave; No. 3, the list of 81, or whatever it is, that he has furnished to the subcommittee by delivery to the chairman.

Senator Green. Now I would like to ask a question. I have been trying to for some time. Does that include Dr. Jessup and Miss Kenyon?

Senator Tydings. Oh, yes.

Senator Green. Does it include all those names that have been submitted—

Senator Tydings. Everybody.

Senator Green. I haven't finished the sentence. Does it include all those names that have been submitted on whom no information whatever has been given?

Senator Hickenlooper. It includes those as a direct result of the request of the chairman.

Senator Green. If it does, I am opposed to that motion, and shall vote against it. I am not going to vote for asking for files on persons against whom there is no evidence whatever before this committee.

Senator Hickenlooper. I am caught between the chairman and my motion.

Senator Tydings. This boy started something and he wants to finish it. He said Lattimore is his big keyman. He has given us some details of the 81 cases on the floor of the Senate. For the time being let's confine this request to something we have the greatest opportunity on.

Senator Hickenlooper. No; because there is one man whose name is in that list of 25 that I think is probably as dangerous a man as the man he has mentioned. That is my own personal suspicion. That is only a suspicion, but his name is on the list of 25. I just happened to see it from the chairman's pocket.

Senator Tydings. If you give me his name, I will try to get his in addition to the 81 plus the 9.

Senator Hickenlooper. No. I have bounced around on this motion—

Senator McCarthy. In the 25 there is actually a duplication of two. Two of the 25 I understand are in the 81.

Senator McMahon. I amend the Senator's motion by suggesting that the 25 against whom no specific charges have been made be omitted from the request.

Senator Green. I think they all should be omitted from the request—those against whom no substantial evidence has been submitted.

Senator Tydings. We have an amendment. The chairman is hereby directed to request immediately from the FBI, from the State Department, and from the Civil Service Commission, the files of all persons against whom any charge has been made. That would include the nine he has given us in open session and it would include the 81 cases about which some evidence was given on the floor of the Senate.

Senator Green. In some cases no evidence was given.

Senator Tydings. One Senator McCarthy himself said was not much of a case. I would rather ask for the whole 81.

Senator Hickenlooper. I thought you wanted the 25 too, a while ago.

Senator Tydings. Are you ready for the question? We are voting on the Brien McMahon amendment. All those in favor will say "Aye"; opposed, "No."

Senator Hickenlooper. "No" with a qualification that I want the 25 included.

Senator Tydings. Do you vote either way?

Senator Green. That is on omitting—

Senator Tydings. Omitting the 25.

Senator Green. Yes; but I think there also should be omitted those in the 81 against whom no charges have been made.

Senator Tydings. Let's go along. Then the motion is on the Hickenlooper proposition as amended. All those in favor say "Aye." Opposed, "No." The motion is carried.

Senator McMahon. Now, if the request is not complied with, we will subpoena. Let that come later.

Senator Hickenlooper. The committee has taken no action on that.

Senator Tydings. What we have done here is, you have asked me to request the files. I have already said I have requested them, but we want the formal thing so there won't be any question.

Senator Hickenlooper. I want the record to show that there is in that list of 25 one man who is utterly dangerous.

(Whereupon, at 3:50 p. m., the hearing was adjourned.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

MONDAY, MARCH 27, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 20, 1950, in room 318, Senate Office Building, at 10:30 a. m., Senator Millard E. Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, and Hickenlooper.

Also present: Senator Connally, chairman of the full committee.

Senator TYDINGS. The chairman received this morning a letter from Dr. Philip C. Jessup, who desires to make a correction in his testimony.

The letter is on the stationery of Ambassador at Large, Department of State, Washington. It is dated March 24, 1950:

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: In connection with my testimony on March 20, 1950, before your committee, I was asked by Senator Hickenlooper as to the precise date of a round-table discussion which was attended by Mr. Owen Lattimore and in which I saw Mr. Lattimore. I stated in my testimony that I believed that this meeting was in December. Upon consulting the files of the Department, I find that the meeting was on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

I am enclosing a list of all the persons who attended this meeting.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP C. JESSUP.

Attached is a list of the persons attending the meeting.

(The letter and list are included as exhibit 54)

This morning we have before us Mrs. Brunauer, who has written to the chairman and to the committee asking for an opportunity to answer the charges made against her by Senator McCarthy.

Mrs. Brunauer, would you please stand and raise your right hand?

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in the matter now before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, Mrs. Brunauer; you may proceed in your own way to read your statement. Does the statement give your full name?

STATEMENT OF MRS. ESTHER CAUKIN BRUNAUER, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR FOR POLICY LIAISON, UNESCO RELATIONS STAFF, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Mrs. BRUNAUER. It does, thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Does it tell where you live?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. It does.

Senator TYDINGS. All right; go ahead in your own way.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. My name is Esther Caukin Brumauer. I live, with my husband and our two children, at 3417 Quebec Street NW., Washington, D. C. I am an officer of the Department of State; my present position is Assistant Director for Policy Liaison, of the UNESCO Relations Staff. I came to the Department in 1944, after 17 years of continuous service on the staff of the American Association of University Women as associate in international education. I am a native of California. My ancestors for several generations back—Caukins, Blackwells, Reillys, Welches, Tates, Bushes, Upsons, and Smiths—were part and parcel of the growth of America. None of them became rich or famous, but they were steadfast and loyal citizens, with high standards of personal conduct and with the habit of speaking their minds freely and openly. I come before you today to avail myself of the opportunity you have given me, in accordance with my request, to speak my mind freely and openly in reply to charges made against me by a Senator of the United States—charges made in violation of the traditions of fairness which are among our oldest heritages.

My first notice that charges might be made against me came on February 11 when I was called by a reporter who said that Senator McCarthy, in an off-the-record press conference, had mentioned my name as one of four cases that he intended later to make public in connection with the claim which he was making on a speaking tour that there were Communists in the State Department. As a result of this warning I read very carefully the list of numbered cases which Senator McCarthy read on the Senate floor on February 20. On the second reading I observed that No. 47 contained a reference to a husband in the Navy Department and a date of employment which coincided with my own. I, therefore, assumed that I was No. 47, although the "facts" contained in No. 47 consisted so largely of innuendoes and veiled references that it would be impossible to say whether they were intended to apply to me or to anyone else. Then on March 13 I was informed by newspaper men that I had been mentioned by Senator McCarthy before this subcommittee as one of the cases which he claimed proved his contention that there were persons in the State Department who were disloyal to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am a loyal American. I am not a Communist and never have been a Communist. I have never engaged in Communist activities. I am not a Communist sympathizer and never have been a Communist sympathizer. I do not have, and I never have had, any sympathy for any doctrine which conflicts with the basic principles of our American democracy. I support the President's loyalty program and have been cleared under that program. I have enough confidence in the strength of our American institutions to believe that Communists and their sympathizers can be kept out of our Government without violating the traditional American principles of decency and fair play. Before I was given a hearing, my name was first divulged as one who was about to be attacked and then I was publicly branded as disloyal without having had an opportunity to speak in my own defense. In fact, Senator McCarthy said on March 13 that I presented such a danger to the country that my case should be the "very first case," to use his own words, to be investigated by this committee.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that after this statement about me had reverberated in the headlines for a few days I lost my priority, and there is now another case which Senator McCarthy claims is the No. 1 case, upon which he says he is willing to stand or fall.

I do not exaggerate in saying that in this hearing my reputation is at stake. I am aware that nowhere in his public statements did Senator McCarthy actually apply the word "disloyal" to me, but his insinuations were plain, and the newspapers, though they have been fair, were quick to see what he had in mind. I appreciate the opportunity which this committee is giving me to answer these charges, but no matter how satisfactory my answers may be to this committee the news of the disproof may never catch up with the accusation. The effects of these insinuations have not been limited to the press. In my household there are two small children and an elderly grandmother, besides myself and my husband. We are all upset and bewildered. Since March 13 we have been receiving anonymous telephone calls, accompanied by threats and profanity, with such advice as "Get out of this neighborhood, you Communists, or you will be carried out in a box." All of you who have families will realize the effect this has on the atmosphere of a home. You know how you would feel if it were happening in your home. Senator McCarthy may have his own reasons for what he has done and the way he has done it, but I will never be able to understand them.

Senator McCarthy began his attack on me by saying that I was "the first assistant to Alger Hiss in the San Francisco Conference." This is an advanced form of guilt by association. Moreover, it is incorrect. I had no personal or official contact with Mr. Hiss at San Francisco. At the San Francisco Conference I was a technical adviser in the delegation of the United States. Mr. Hiss was the Secretary General of the Conference and was not a member of our delegation. Although I was not an assistant to Mr. Hiss, I was an assistant and adviser to the late Congressman Bloom, who was one of the United States representatives there. In Washington my work up until February 1946 was in the Office of Special Political Affairs. I was about the fourth in line in one of the divisions of this Office. A few months after I started this work, Mr. Hiss began his connection with the Office, first as Deputy Director and then as Director. My contacts with Mr. Hiss in this work were infrequent and routine.

Senator McCarthy also charges that I was instrumental in committing the American Association of University Women to various front enterprises "particularly in the so-called consumer field." He refers particularly to an instance reported in the New York Times of April 27, 1943, in which, as he said, "The American Association of University Women joined with the Consumers' Union, the League of Women Shoppers, and other completely controlled Communist fronts." The Senator went on to say that I took this action knowingly and was not mistaken about what I was doing. The Senator, however, is badly mistaken. I believe the chairman already has in his hands a letter addressed to him from Kathryn McHale, general director of the American Association of University Women, in which she states, "at no time did Mrs. Brunauer have any connection with the association's consumer program."

Senator TYDINGS. Mrs. Brunauer, I have that letter. Would you like to put it in the record now, or at the conclusion of your remarks?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I would like it in the record at any time it suits your convenience.

SENATOR TYDINGS. We will let you finish.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. It can go in now.

The report in the New York Times to which Senator McCarthy referred obliquely, but did not quote, lists a total of fifteen women's organizations who strongly urged grade labeling of canned fruits and vegetables as a means of making price control more effective. The Senator mentioned by name the only two organizations which were ever officially cited as Communist controlled. Senator McCarthy did not read the entire list of these organizations, which included such bodies as the American Home Economics Association and the Young Women's Christian Association. The entire list is available to the committee.

Senator McCarthy has also charged that I presided at a Washington meeting of Friends of the Soviet Union in 1936 and that Myra Page spoke at that meeting. I do not recall that meeting and I have no recollection of ever meeting Miss Page, but I have ascertained that I did preside and Miss Page spoke on "who rules in Soviet Russia." As has been indicated in the letter from Miss McHale to the chairman, to which I referred a few minutes ago, my position with the American Association of University Women was that of associate in international education and international relations. In that capacity it was part of my job to attend and preside upon occasions at meetings of numerous organizations in this field. In 1936 the attitude of most Americans toward the Soviet Union was friendly and hopeful. I had no way of ascertaining then that the organization called the American Friends of the Soviet Union would at some later time be declared subversive. I was never a member of that organization, and it was not considered reprehensible or a sign of disloyalty for American citizens to attend lectures on conditions in Soviet Russia, even if made by Soviet sympathizers.

Senator McCarthy next charges that I signed a call to the annual meeting of the American Youth Congress held in July 1939. I did sign this call and I invite your attention to the creed which was adopted at the meeting. The creed contains a pledge to "seek progress only within the framework of the American system of government" and to "oppose all undemocratic tendencies and all forms of dictatorship." I was 1 of 110 signers. The other signers included persons who were active in women's organizations, health organizations, educational institutions, social service organizations and religious groups. I believe this committee will be particularly interested in the signers who were active in public life. These included Senator Capper of Kansas, Senator Logan of Kentucky, Senator Murray of Montana, and Senator Wagner of New York. They also included Representative Coffee of Washington, Representative Dunn of Pennsylvania, Representative Ford of California, Representative Izak of California, Governor Bottolfson of Idaho, Governor Dickenson of Michigan, Governor Jones of Arizona, Governor Moses of North Dakota, and Governor Olson of California. They also included two members of the Cabinet, Postmaster General Farley and Secretary of Interior Ickes. My recollection of this call is that it represented an attempt of the liberals to capture the leadership of the American youth organizations. The fact that the American Youth Congress has been cited by the Attorney General as a subversive organization is an indication that we failed, but if we are to be criticized it is perhaps because we are not active and aggressive enough to succeed, but at least we tried.

The Senator states that I was active in the launching of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts. That is true and I am proud of the fact.

He states that the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts was cited as a Communist-front organization. That is less than a half truth. It was, in fact, cited by the Dies Committee on March 20, 1944, but not as a Communist-front organization. It was cited as "an organization with the same aims as the American Congress for Peace and Democracy, a Communist front advocating collective security prior to the signing of the Stalin-Hitler Pact" of 1939. The American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts did advocate collective security. So did the loyal members of the League of Nations. So do all the loyal members of the present United Nations. Those aims appear to have been shared by the American Congress for Peace and Democracy up to the time of the Stalin-Hitler Pact. No other aims were shared by that organization and the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts. These aims were, of course, abandoned by the Communists, according to the party line, upon the announcement of the pact. They were not abandoned by the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts; on the contrary they were intensified.

The Senator states that the leader of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts was the editor of the Daily Worker. This is entirely false. The editor of the Daily Worker was a member of the executive committee of the American Congress for Peace and Democracy. Neither he nor any other Communist played any part in the direction of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts. The chairman of the executive committee of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts was Dr. Clark M. Eichelberger, at that time president of the American Association for the League of Nations, and now president of the American Association for the United Nations. The 15 other members of the executive committee, including myself, were persons of known loyalty to the United States. There were no Communists in this group. The American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts was succeeded by the William Allen White Committee, also known as the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. The work of this committee in combating the Communist Party line is well known. I was one of the founders of this committee.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have answered Senator McCarthy's charges against me. If any of my answers is not entirely clear, I should be glad to supplement them to the best of my ability. I would like to present a group of letters which I have been requested to deliver to the chairman. I offer also a list of my publications.

Senator TYDINGS. Is it your wish to put them in now? The list of publications will be exhibit 55.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I should like to put them in now.

There is a list of the letters. I do not think it is necessary to read the whole list, if that is all right with the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. You do want the letters in the record?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes. There is an additional letter also received.

Senator McMAHON. I would like to know who they are from.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. These are the names of persons who addressed letters to the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations and that are being presented to the subcommittee by me today:

Milton S. Eisenhower, president, Kansas State College;

Senator Joseph H. Ball, Washington, D. C.;

Ralph H. Lutz, president, Stanford University and president of the American Association of University Professors;

Mrs. Vera B. Whitehome, New York, N. Y.;

Miss Margaret S. Morris, dean, Pembroke College in Brown University;

Katherine K. Rice, a physician in Washington, D. C.;

Sarah Gibson Blanding, president, Vassar College;

Dr. Gertrude Kornfeld, Rochester, N. Y.;

James P. Hendrick, Washington, D. C.;

Mrs. Helen Alley, Arlington, Va.;

Mrs. Ruth Lyons, Washington, D. C., director, Statistics Branch, Public Housing Administration;

Ben M. Cherrington, director, University of Denver;

Howard E. Wilson, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, New York, N. Y.;

Herbert Emmerich, director, Public Administration Clearing House, Washington, D. C.;

Mrs. Olive Clapper, Washington, D. C.;

Richard P. McKeon, department of philosophy, University of Chicago;

Blanche N. Dow, president, Cottey College, Nevada, Mo.;

Eliot B. Coulter, Assistant chief, Visa Division, Department of State;

George F. Zook, president, American Council on Education, Washington, D. C.;

Louise Leonard Wright, The Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, Chicago, Ill.;

Graham H. Stuart, department of political science, Stanford University;

Dr. Margaret Mary Nicholson, Washington, D. C., our family pediatrician;

Hugh Moore, chairman of the board, Dixie Cup Co.;

Mrs. Marjory B. Loengard, New York, N. Y.;

Malvina Lindsay, the Washington Post, Washington, D. C.;

Mrs. Helen K. Knandel, educational consultant, traffic engineering and safety department, American Automobile Association, Washington, D. C.;

Mrs. Anne H. Johnstone, director, League of Women Voters of the United States, Washington, D. C.;

Ralph E. Himstead, general secretary, American Association of University Professors, Washington, D. C.;

Herman Hertzberg, a personal physician;

Mrs. Gladys Murphy Graham, Santa Monica, Calif.;

Miss Dorothy Fosdick, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State;

C. Mildred Thompson, emeritus dean and professor of history, Vassar;

Eleanor Lansing Dulles, Department of State;

Mrs. Ruth S. Brumbaugh, president, Washington branch, American Association of University Women;

A. J. Brumbaugh, Washington, D. C.

I wish to add, Mr. Chairman, that these letters are presented to you as letters from people who have known me well and worked with me. They are not letters presented in order to impress the committee with what an important person I may or may not be, but people who can tell you about my character through the years.

May I also add Mrs. Eire Stevens?

Senator TYDINGS. The letters will be put in the record to supplement the names which have been read, as a group numbered exhibit 56.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Thank you, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you give the letters to the reporter before you leave, so that they may go in the record?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes. Then I have one more, Mr. Chairman, from Judge Marion J. Harron, who has known me since I was in high school.

May I also read a personal letter from Mr. Milton Eisenhower? He said:

DEAR ESTHER: I am happy you wrote me, because I have been so angry about the McCarthy charges that I have been wanting to take some kind of action. You give me the very opportunity I need. The first letter I wrote for you just smoked with adjectives. Then I decided you didn't want that kind of testimonial, so I send you the attached very calm letter. If it isn't exactly what you want, please let me know at once.

I will see you in April at the commission meeting.

Senator TYDINGS. Dr. Brunauer, is he the president of Kansas or Penn State College?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. He is the president of Kansas and will assume his duties as president of Penn State very soon—July 1, I believe.

May I proceed?

Senator TYDINGS. You may proceed.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. It is possible that a very brief summary of the high points in my career may save time in the end.

I was born and brought up in the State of California. I received my Ph. D. at Stanford University in 1927 in history and political science. My principal interest since my graduation has been in international relations. My first job was in that field. It lasted 17 years. It was with the American Association of University Women. I have been in the Department of State ever since.

One of my most important projects for the American Association of University Women may be considered to deserve special mention. This was a study of national defense in relation to foreign policy which was undertaken by the National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War under a commission of which I was chairman. The report, entitled "National Defense, Institutions, Concepts, Policies" was published in 1937 by the Women's Press of the YWCA. After that, the commission reported annually on the problems of the National Defense Establishment which were important in the ever more critical international situation. Admiral Standley, who was then Chief of Naval Operations, has stated to me that he considers that this study was largely responsible for converting various pacifistic organizations in this country and thus making possible an immediate program of rearmament.

In this regard, I think the committee will also be interested in the part that I played in the international activities of the American Association of University Women during the critical period of 1939-41, the period of the Stalin-Hitler friendship pact. These activities culminated in the resolution of May 8, 1941, adopted by the biennial convention of the association in which they voted for—

Recognition of a common cause with all nations resisting totalitarian aggression and furnishing of whatever aid we can give to make this resistance effective.

This was in direct opposition to the Communist line at that time. Of course, I don't want the committee to believe that I did all this single-handed. I was a staff member, but it was a development of opinion in which I participated and of which I am proud.

Between 1941 and the beginning of 1946 there is nothing of particular interest to this committee in my career except my work with Mr. Bloom at San Francisco in 1945. In February 1946, I was designated representative of the United States on the Preparatory Commission for UNESCO. In my work with UNESCO I have attended sessions of the General Conferences at Paris, Mexico City, and Beirut. Those who have worked with me could tell you that I have been diligent in devising ways to thwart the attempts of Communists to use UNESCO for their own purposes.

Mr. Milton Eisenhower, president of Kansas State College, was at those conferences as a delegate. He has asked me to deliver a letter to you, Mr. Chairman, in which he is kind enough to make the following statement regarding my work. Now I am quoting from Mr. Eisenhower's letter:

I would say that the present ideological warfare in the world is Dr. Brunauer's chief concern, and in this she is constantly working to uphold United States policy, as well as the democratic philosophy generally, and to defeat the devious and clever tactics of the Russians and their satellites. At the Mexico City conference in 1947, for example, she spent a full month in countering the efforts of a Russian-dominated Polish delegation to pin the tag of "warmonger" on the Western democracies, and especially on the United States. She worked with devotion, precision, and effect. She was completely sincere in all she did.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer briefly to the charges made by Senator McCarthy against my husband, Dr. Stephen Brunauer. As to my husband's past, his Communist connections existed a very long time ago, more than 20 years ago, in fact. He came to this country at the age of 18 as an immigrant. He was without friends, without money, and without a command of the language. He was eager for American companionship, but this was largely denied him. His need for friends and companions was filled, in his first years here, by a group of young people of similar national origin who spoke the same language, and these people unfortunately were largely Communists. They brought him into the Hungarian section of the Young Workers League. After about 3 years, he began to understand the operations of the Communist movement more clearly and to see more clearly its conflict with American institutions. He dropped out of the Young Workers League early in 1927 and has not been a member of any Communist group since that time. His association with individuals in the Communist movement diminished rapidly after he came to Washington in 1928. By 1932 he had been denounced by the Communists as a deserter from their cause.

My husband is a loyal American. He has devoted himself to our national defense and his positive contributions have been widely recognized. My husband is an outspoken opponent of communism. He has done whatever lay within his power to thwart the Communists. We have as a neighbor and are privileged to have as a friend one of your colleagues, Senator Joseph H. Ball. He asked me to present a letter and I would like to do so now. I would like to quote the last few lines of the letter to you, Mr. Chairman:

As you know, Stephen Brunauer was born in Hungary and spent his youth there. Many of his boyhood friends have been victims of Communist dictatorship. He is perhaps the most violently anti-Communist person I know.

I have no hesitation in vouching for the complete loyalty of Stephen and Esther Brunauer to the United States and to our way of life.

Senator TYNINGS. Thank you very much, Dr. Brunauer.

Senator Green, have you any questions at the moment?

Senator GREEN. No, I haven't.

Senator TYNINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have a few questions that I would like to ask Dr. Brunauer, but again, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that I have no basic information, no access to the files of information which the Government has in this case or any other case, and it seems to be a futile thing to attempt to question people about matters which should be of public interest without having all available information before one, so that it is either ineffective in the witness' interest or in the interest of the public to be so stymied and hamstrung by being refused, apparently, the information which the Government may have pro or con in this case.

Senator TYNINGS. I would like to say, Senator Hickenlooper, that I have been most diligent in trying to get all of the files that the Senate directed us to obtain. I have taken the matter up orally and by letter with the President. I have taken the matter up orally and by letter with the State Department. I have taken it up by letter with the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board, and I have personally gone to see the Attorney General and Mr. J. Edgar Hoover to obtain the FBI files in addition to taking it up formally in writing.

The State Department has written me a letter which I just received today that under the President's directive they cannot turn over the files without his permission. Mr. Richardson has written me in the same vein, saying that he cannot turn them over, and I asked Mr. Edgar Hoover and Attorney General Howard McGrath to come before our committee at 3:30 this afternoon to state their position on this and such other matters as they may care to comment upon.

Under the terms of the resolution we are directed to subpoena. I had hoped that we could work it out amicably without resorting to this legal device, and I likewise learn from the press—I do not know whether it is accurate or not—that I may get some word from the President before the day has passed concerning the files, after Attorney General McGrath and Mr. Hoover have testified. It may be, however, that this information may not reach me until tomorrow morning. I simply make this statement because I have exhausted every bit of ingenuity and effort and resource at my command to carry out the resolution of the Senate, and therefore I can do nothing more than to give these witnesses who have been openly accused without the committee having any data in its hands or any files available at the time of the accusation the same rights to appear as Senator McCarthy had when he was making the charges. We had no files then and we have no files today, and I believe the biggest thing for us to do is to try to give those who are accused as rapid a hearing as we can.

I would like to say in conclusion that we can always recall witnesses at any time for further testimony in the event that any member of the committee wants them recalled.

I ask your pardon for the interruption. I only make it because I thought perhaps I should make the general statement on the files at this time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the first place, I have interposed no objection to the witnesses making their statements. That is not part of my position at all. But I would like to ask the chairman whether the chairman has transmitted to the Civil Service Commission, the FBI, and the State Department the motion which was adopted by the subcommittee which I made on last Tuesday, that we officially request these files from those three agencies. Has that been transmitted to those three departments as notification that this subcommittee has officially requested these files.

Senator TYDINGS. That has been done not only with the State Department, the Loyalty Board of the Civil Service, but with Attorney General McGrath, representing the Department of Justice and the FBI, but I have encompassed a general formal request on the President at the same time. I have heard from all three of them, other than the President, and I am rather expecting that very shortly we will have the President's position on it.

In the meantime, as I say, I have carried out religiously the committee's instructions, with which I was in hearty accord, and in the event we are defeated all along the line I shall call the committee together and ask them what the next step is that they would like me to take, and whatever they agree upon, I shall try to be their humble and obedient servant.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Brunauer, to begin with, in the first part of your statement, the last sentence, you say that—

I come before you today to avail myself of the opportunity you have given me, in accordance with my request, to speak my mind freely and openly in reply to charges made against me by a Senator of the United States—charges made in violation of the traditions of fairness which are among our oldest heritages.

That is the end of the quote.

This is not the first time that you have been before an official board or Commission testing the question of your loyalty or your security to the country, is that correct?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir. I appeared before the Loyalty and Security Board of the Department of State on July 28, 1948, and I was cleared.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was as a result of charges made against you?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And hearings were held on those charges, and thereafter you were cleared of those charges?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I was cleared; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that another official group of the Government has in fact filed charges against you upon which questions were asked and an examination had as to the matter of your loyalty and security?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment?

Senator TYDINGS. You may make any answer you wish to any of us who interrogate you today.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I think the State Department was entirely correct in seeking to learn the origin of various charges that had been made against me, and in seeking to evaluate all of the evidence about me and my character, my loyalty, and my security status. The hearing was a very thorough one. The Loyalty Board had, of course, in its possession all of the information on file in the Department of State about me. It knew not only the half-truths and suggestions and possibly the innuendoes that have come in the course of a rather long period of service. They also knew all other facts about my positive work, my contributions, where I have stood down through the years in the field of international relations; they knew what I had done in the Department of State in this phase of American foreign policy, and they cleared me after considering all of the evidence. I must say that I thought that had settled the matter.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The only comment I would have on that, Dr. Brunauer, is that you have just stated, and I think it is true, that they had all of the information and facts that have been collected by the Government agencies. This committee unfortunately has been denied the facts and the evidence up to this point in the possession of the Government. So that this hearing cannot, of course, be based upon as exhaustive a field of information as that which was possessed by the Government at that time.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. That is why I have tried to put these other pieces of information before you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you testified that your husband some years ago was in fact a Communist, but after a short time in this country he ceased his association with the Communist Party.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes—his association with the Communist movement. He was never a member of the Communist Party.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You make the positive statement that he never was a member of the Communist Party in this country?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I make that statement; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not want to be unfair about this question, but I believe in those years of which you are making this very positive statement now you were not even acquainted with him, so I assume you make your statement based upon what he has told you.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I make that statement based upon what he has told me, and in the first years that he was in Washington, when he occasionally saw some individuals whom he had known previously, his connections were just as I have stated, as a member of the Young Workers League. The Young Workers League was organized and run by the Communist Party. There is no attempt to deny that my husband for a short time supported the Communist ideals.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The only purpose of my question is that you made a positive, flat declaration apparently of your own knowledge, and I was merely attempting to help by calling attention to the fact that you did not know your husband during those years, therefore your statement about his membership must be from what someone else has told you—he and other people.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. At least I gathered this information, or the information was told to me, at a time when there would have been no reason to conceal and there would have been no embarrassment about his admitting it if he had been a member of the Communist Party.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Have you ever been acquainted with a man named Malcolm Nurse, alias George Padmore?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir. The name means nothing to me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He was a native of the West Indies, I believe. You have never known him or had any association with him?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Not that I can recall. I must remind you that in the past 25 years I have had a great many associations with a great many people, but I do not remember that name.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you ever know a man by the name of Noel Field?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir. I used to know him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What was your association with Noel Field?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I became acquainted with Noel Field and his wife Herta about 1928. I knew them socially for a time. At that time I believe he was in the Department of State. Later, about 1934 or so, after my husband came back from a year in Germany, we saw him and Herta once or twice and then they went to Europe, and on infrequent occasions since then we have had very brief social contacts with them in groups of people. I have not seen them since October 1945.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know whether or not he is a member or was a member during those associations of yours of the Communist Party?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir; I don't know that. He didn't say it, and no one told me that he was.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you have any associations or experience with Noel Field that would lead you to believe that he was at that time a member of the Communist Party?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. The only incident which has any bearing at all on this occurred about 1934. At that time, as I said, after my husband and I came back from Germany, we were invited to a party where the Fields were present, and in the course of the discussion Noel Field discussed the world situation in terms which expressed the feeling that the Communist movement had a great deal to commend it. My husband argued with him bitterly and vigorously, and tried to convince him that he was wrong. That is the only time on which we have ever had any discussion of political ideologies.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know whether or not Field was a member at that time or at any other time of the Russian OGPU organization, or secret-service organization?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. During this period of time that you knew him, I believe at least part of the time he was an employee of the State Department, was he not?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In what capacity, if you recall?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I don't know his exact title, but I know that he was doing work which brought him into the Disarmament Conference. He went as one of the advisers to the American delegation to the Disarmament Conference and subsequent questions on armaments questions during the 1930's, and he left the Department, I believe, to take a position in the League of Nations.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you attend a meeting or meetings of the Inter-Racial Club on Eyo Street in Washington at various times in the past?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. There was a club which met at the Friends Meeting House on Eyo Street, sir. It was the International Friendship Club. Its members consisted of young people from the various universities, including a number who came from a number of different countries, and included some students from Howard University. I did attend the meetings there. I was a member of the organization.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And at those meetings, or some of them—perhaps not all—both Noel Field and Malcolm Nurse are—I should not say “alleged,” because I have no personal knowledge of it—were they in attendance at those meetings?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Noel Field I know was in attendance at some of the meetings. I am sorry to say I don't remember the names of most of the people who came to the meetings. I know a few of them. But I don't know the name of Malcolm Nurse. I wish I could help you, but I do not know it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So you do not know whether Malcolm Nurse was there or not?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No; I am sorry I don't.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you deliver a speech in 1934 at a meeting of the Friends of the Soviet Union as a substitute for your husband?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I did; and the subject was “The Cultural and Educational Policy of the Nationalists in Germany.” The reason for delivering the speech was that when my husband and I came back from Germany we were very much concerned about the Nazi menace, about what it was doing not only to subject races—minority races—but what it was doing to the very cultural fabric of Germany and threatened to do to the cultural fabric of the world, and we seized every opportunity to tell Americans what Nazi Germany was like. When this opportunity arose, I seized the opportunity.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was your husband requested to speak?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes. He agreed to do it. Shortly after receiving the invitation his chief in the Naval Research Laboratory said he thought it would be better for a person who was an officer of the United States Government not to make a speech in a public place that might be taken by Germany, with whom we were at that time in peaceful relations, as being in active enmity, so he decided not to do it, and it was decided I should speak in his place.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Has your husband written articles for a paper, Magyar Jövő, a Hungarian-language newspaper?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Not for that newspaper, sir. That is the successor to the newspaper called Uj Előre, which was the Communist paper during the time when he belonged to the Young Workers League, and I believe he has told me that he wrote articles during that time.

Senator TYNDLES. What was the date of that?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. That would have been before he came to Washington—1927 or earlier.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was that paper run, edited, or conducted by a brother of your husband's wife?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. So I understand, sir—my husband's first wife, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When your husband was in the Navy he made a trip to France, did he not?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. He made several trips.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On at least one of those was he a guest at the home of Jules Curie?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Sir, to my knowledge my husband has never set eyes on Jules Curie, and if he has an opportunity to appear before you he will likewise state so under oath.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was he a guest at any time in France of General Gassault?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Not to my knowledge. Likewise he will testify on that subject under oath. So far as I know, he was not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you attend the Communist-controlled American—I should not have said that. I will withdraw that question. Did you attend the American Youth Convention in New York City in July 1939?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I do not remember whether I did or not. I think it rather unlikely, because I was getting ready to go to Europe to attend the Conference of the International Federation of University Women in connection with my official duties, and I left at the end of July, so I doubt very much that I attended that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Has there ever been any protest, so far as you know, by any local chapter or chapters of the American Association of University Women protesting alleged activities of yours in so-called front organizations?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Not that I have ever heard of, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No such protests were made while you were executive secretary?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Pardon me; I was not executive secretary of the American Association of University Women. I think it is rather important. I was international relations secretary first, and the title was later changed to associate in International education. I was responsible for the international relations program of the organization from the staff point of view.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you a member of the executive committee for concerted peace efforts in 1939? I think perhaps you covered that in your statement.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you ever a member of the Young Workers League?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you ever a member or an attendant at meetings of the Young Communist League?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you ever attend meetings of the Young Workers League?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir. May I suggest possibly that the fact which the Senator brought out a few moments ago, that my husband was previously married for a short time during the period of his residence in New York, may cause some of the confusion. Possibly someone has testified that his wife attended some of those meetings. That would have been my husband's first wife.

Senator TYDINGS. When were you married?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. In 1931. We became acquainted late in 1928 and were married in 1931.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did the Communist member of the Hungarian delegation to UNESCO visit you or your husband or your home a few years ago on his way from Mexico?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. He called on my husband and I would be glad to give you what I know of that, if you wish, or, if you prefer, it can wait until my husband comes before you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you present at the time your husband met the gentleman?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir; I was not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So anything you would say about what went on between your husband and this delegate would be completely hearsay?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. It would be hearsay, but not in the usual sense of the word, sir, because on matters of this sort my husband and I see completely eye to eye, and inform each other completely.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was a Mr. Ferenczi?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I think perhaps I had better give the story, because otherwise it will remain as a question mark in somebody's mind if I don't tell you a little more about it, if I may do so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have no objection to your giving the story, but I want to emphasize that this is evidence of someone who has repeated it to you.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. However, sir, there is a good deal about it that I can give on my own testimony, and I think perhaps the committee should hear it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have no objection.

Senator TYDINGS. So long as the point has been raised, if you care to make any comment on it you can make it, and when your husband testifies, of course we can interrogate him more fully. Whatever you want to say you are at liberty to say.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Thank you, sir.

Some months before the Mexico City Conference of UNESCO Hungary was taken over by the Communists, as you know.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you fix the date of that?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. That was at the end of May 1947. The second session of the UNESCO General Conference in Mexico City was in November and part of December 1947. In preparing for that conference, we in the Department of State realized that the Communist character of the Hungarian Government would cause problems in connection with the membership of Hungary or the application of Hungary for membership in UNESCO.

Besides that, on the personal side, my husband and I were very close to the Hungarians in Washington, who were in the Legation under Dr. Aladár Szegedy-Maszáik, Minister of Hungary at that time. We were with them as friends during the period when they decided not to recognize the Communist regime. We were close to them; we sympathized with them, we felt their problems deeply. I am giving you this part of the background to help make you realize that any actions or statements which my husband may have made or which he may be alleged to have made were very greatly colored by his feelings, his heartbreak over the fact that Hungary had been taken over by the Communists.

At the Mexico City conference, after the vote was taken on the membership the United States abstained in the voting, just as it had done in the Economic and Social Council when the question came up. After the vote was over and the majority vote to admit Hungary made the Hungarian delegation eligible to sit as observers, Mr. Ferenczi, a member of the delegation, approached me and invited me to luncheon. We had luncheon in a public place in the presence of a very large number of other people. He asked me about reconstruction questions concerning UNESCO; he asked me whether Hungary could expect to receive reconstruction aid from the United States; that is, educational reconstruction aid from the United States as a member of UNESCO. I told him then—I have had no further personal conversations with him but I told him then—that it was my opinion that while the United States Government could not force its citizens to make contributions to any course in which they were not interested, in contrast to dictatorship countries, the people of the United States would be very doubtful about giving money for educational reconstruction in a country where their own organizations and people who represented their own interests could not see how the money was being spent. I gave him no encouragement whatever.

He told me at that time, and when he came to Washington he called me on the telephone and told me again, that he wanted to meet my husband while he was in Washington because he had letters, so he said, from two or three people whom my husband had known and whom my husband knew as anti-Communist, so I said, "Well, when you come to Washington, if you wish to call on my husband you call on him," knowing perfectly well that my husband was adequate to take care of such a situation.

After the return from the Mexico City Conference—I do not recall just when it was—I had a telephone call which was started by Mr. Florian, a member of the Hungarian staff here, who was later asked to leave the United States. He told me that Mr. Ferenczi wished to speak to me. Mr. Ferenczi spoke to me. He told me that on his trip to Washington his briefcase had been lost so he didn't have the letters to present to my husband, but he wanted to see him anyhow, to go on with the efforts he had started before the Communist coup to suggest to the Rockefeller Foundation that they look into the possibility of getting assistance to the scientific institutions of Hungary. That was before the Communist coup.

After the Communist regime came into power, naturally my husband had no more interest whatever in trying to get the Rockefeller Foundation or anybody else to give money to Hungary.

Mr. Ferenczi went to see my husband, and the consequence—which I have no reason on earth to believe was anything but the truth—was that he discussed this question of the Rockefeller Foundation, and my husband said that under the circumstances he could not do anything about it.

Subsequently, some time later, I was told by someone—my husband was not told this; I was—some of the people in the Legation that Mr. Ferenczi and Mr. Florian had discussed very seriously the possibility, and had discussed it as a matter of something that they could use as revenge on my husband, of revealing to the public my husband's long-ago Communist connection. However, another member of the staff dissuaded them from publishing this material, on the point that when a man had worked hard and achieved as much as my husband had done, there was no reason, and it was unfair, to bring up something that existed long ago in his past, and that had no influence whatever on his present life—quite the contrary.

That is the story of my contacts with Mr. Ferenczi. I knew he was a person not to be trusted. I never did trust him and I would not trust him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is all, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to ask at this point, so long as your husband has come into this controversy, or this hearing, rather, to your knowledge has your husband ever been an employee of the State Department?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir; he has not.

Senator TYDINGS. He has not?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Of course, Dr. Brunauer, you realize that the terms of the resolution are that we are to investigate people who have been employed in the State Department.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. We will be very glad, however, to have your husband's testimony, but it will be strictly extracurricular, because our mission and our charge from the Senate consists only of investigating persons against whom charges are heard who now are or have been employees of the State Department.

You are sure that your husband never has been an employee of the State Department?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I am sure of that, sir, but may I say that one of the main reasons for asking that my husband be heard at a time convenient to the committee is that the charges that were made against him have been used as part of the evidence against me, and I am and have been an employee of the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. I understand.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I want to ask three short questions that I overlooked.

What is your salary with the State Department?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. My salary at the present time is $9,800. I am at the top of the GS-14 scale.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you covered your employment.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Who is your immediate superior?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Mr. Charles Thompson, Director of the UNESCO Relations staff.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is that Charles A. Thompson?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And your husband is with the Navy now, is he?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. My husband is Chief Technical Administrator of Explosives Research and Development in the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy.

Senator TYDINGS. By the way, Dr. Brunauer, I have received word since this hearing started that a letter is on the way from Admiral Standley and from someone else, presumably commending you and your patriotism, from the tone of the note I got. I am sorry I do not have the letter. I hope it will arrive before the hearing is over, in which event I will give it to the press. If it arrives late I will put it in the record, with the committee's approval, and give it to the press after that.

I have received several communications and telegrams and phone calls and so on asking that this in substance be read to the committee. This letter is dated March 22, 1950, on the stationery of the American Association of University Women, National Headquarters, 1634 I Street NW., Washington 6, D. C.

My DEAR Mr. TYDINGS: The news reports have carried statements attributed to Senator McCarthy regarding the relationship of Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer to the American Association of University Women, which are entirely erroneous. I beg to take this opportunity of presenting the facts to the committee which is investigating Senator McCarthy's charges, and request that this statement be incorporated in full in the records of the committee.

Senator McCarthy is reported to have said that Mrs. Brunauer was for many years executive secretary of the American Association of University Women; and further, that she was instrumental in "committing this organization to the support of various front enterprises, particularly in the so-called consumer field." Briefly, the facts are as follows: (A more detailed statement is appended.)

In 1927 Mrs. Brunauer was appointed secretary to the association's committee on international relations, and she continued as associate in international education and relations until she left our staff on March 7, 1944.

As the international relations staff member, Mrs. Brunauer prepared study guides and other materials for the use of the association's branches, and otherwise carried out the international relations program of the association. Policies relating to that program were laid down by the national committee on international relations, the board of directors, and the convention of the association. Mrs. Brunauer, as a professional member of the staff, did not make policies.

At no time did Mrs. Brunauer have any connection with the association's consumer program. She was never executive secretary of the American Association of University Women. And further, the accusation that the AAUW in its consumer program supported "front" activities is absolutely untrue, as the appended statement will show.

Mrs. Brunauer's record with the American Association of University Women was marked by personal and professional integrity, devotion to the public good, and loyalty to the Government of the United States. Her techniques were those of the scholar, absolutely impartial and objective in evaluating all facts germane to an international problem.

I have known Mrs. Brunauer intimately since I became general director of the American Association of University Women in 1929. I have never heard her express any sentiment which could be regarded as even faintly disloyal to the Government of the United States or sympathetic to the ideology of communism, nor has any action of hers carried such implication. As a citizen and as an official I know her to be devoted to the highest ideals of American democracy, and I have the utmost confidence in her integrity and loyalty.

As Judge Dorothy Kenyon so well pointed out, the record of any individual should be judged as a whole, and not on the basis of isolated bits of evidence lifted out of context. I trust that your committee will grant Mrs. Brunauer the opportunity to place her full record before you. I am confident that a fair examination of her activities will convince you that she is not only a loyal citizen but a valuable public servant.

May I add that the irresponsible attacks made by Senator McCarthy are not only injuring the individuals concerned; groundless accusations made by a Member of the Senate and publized from coast to coast are bound to lessen the respect of citizens for their highest legislative body.

Respectfully yours,

KATHRYN McHALE, General Director.

Appended hereto is a statement of various activities of the American Association of University Women which, unless the committee desires, I will put in the record without further reading, as exhibit 57.

I would like at this time, before deferring to my colleagues again, to read a letter from the Honorable Seth W. Richardson. By the way, this is written on the stationery of the United States Civil Service Commission.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have your letter of the 22d.

I regret that the all-inclusive terms of the directive of the President under date of March 13, 1948, in my opinion, prevent me from disclosing to anyone not connected with the operation of the loyalty program the contents of any report, record, or file relative to the loyalty of employees.

May I suggest that if you should desire to pursue the matter further, you address your inquiry to the President.

I have the pleasure to be

Very truly yours,

SETH W. RICHARDSON,
Chairman, Loyalty Review Board.

I regret to inform this committee that I also have a letter from Secretary of State Acheson couched in practically the same language, which came to me this morning, which I would also like to read into the record.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 27, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: In your letter of March 22, 1950, you request that the subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee acting under Senate Resolution 231 be permitted to examine the files of the Department of State concerning the nine persons mentioned by Senator McCarthy in open hearing before the subcommittee and the 50 persons against whom charges were made by Senator McCarthy in a speech on the Senate floor on February 20, 1950.

In view of the nature of the investigation and the terms of the resolution, the files which you request would appear to be the loyalty and security files of the Department of State concerning these individuals. The action of the Department in response to your request is therefore governed by the President's directive of March 13, 1948, which provides as follows:

"The efficient and just administration of the employee-loyalty program, under Executive Order No. 9835 of March 21, 1947, requires that reports, records, and files relative to the program be preserved in strict confidence. This is necessary in the interest of our national security and welfare, to preserve the confidential character and sources of information furnished, and to protect Government personnel against the dissemination of unfounded or disproved allegations. It is necessary also in order to insure the fair and just disposition of loyalty cases.

"For these reasons, and in accordance with the long-established policy that reports rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other investigative agencies of the executive branch are to be regarded as confidential, all reports, records, and files relative to the loyalty of employees or prospective employees (including reports of such investigative agencies) shall be maintained in confidence, and shall not be transmitted or disclosed except as required in the efficient conduct of business.

"Any subpoena or demand or request for information or files of the nature described, received from sources other than those persons in the executive branch of the Government who are entitled thereto by reason of their official duties, shall be respectfully declined, on the basis of this directive, and the subpoena or demand or other request shall be referred to the Office of the President for such response as the President may determine to be in the public interest in the particular case. There shall be no relaxation of the provisions of this directive except with my express authority."

This Department must, therefore, refer this request to the Office of the President for such response as the President may determine to be in the public interest.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON.

Are there any questions, Senator Green, of the witness?

Senator GREEN. No.

Senator McMAHON. I have one question. Dr. Brunauer, I was particularly interested in a letter which you received from Senator Ball.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Has your association with Senator Ball been over some period?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir; since 1943.

Senator McMAHON. I believe you referred to him as a neighbor?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. He is also a neighbor, but we discovered the fact that the Balls lived near us after we had made public contact. The acquaintance began in 1943, when Senator Ball, together with Senators Hatch, Burton, and Hale, presented the popularly called "B2H2" resolution on international organization. The American Association of University Women for a generation had supported and urged international organization, so I got into contact with Senator Ball and held a number of conferences about his proposal, and from that time on we have known the Balls, though our personal friendship came a little later. We have been personally acquainted since about—I don't know exactly when we started our personal contacts.

Senator McMAHON. Those contacts have been rather frequently through the years?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, through our being at the Balls' home and their visiting at our home. They live about three blocks from us.

Senator McMAHON. You put only part of this letter in the record.

Mrs. BRUNAUER. I would be glad to put it all in the record.

Senator McMAHON. I think it would be well if you would put it all in the record. Will you read it?

Mrs. BRUNAUER (reading):

Re Esther and Stephen Brunauer.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS. I was considerably startled to read that Mr. and Mrs. Brunauer had been accused of Communist leanings and disloyalty before your subcommittee.

As you may perhaps recall, I helped as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee in the Eightieth Congress to initiate investigations which I believe assisted the State Department in eliminating employees who had demonstrated Communist leanings or were shown to be poor security risks. I am as anxious as anyone to rid our Government of any employees whose loyalty is doubtful. However, erroneous accusations, even though made in good faith, hurt that objective more than they help it.

I am convinced the accusations against the Brunauers are completely erroneous.

I first met the Brunauers in 1943, and Mrs. Ball and I have known both of them intimately since 1945. We live only a few blocks apart here in Washington and have spent many evenings together. Our conversations inevitably have dealt at length with politics, with international problems and issues, and with the so-called cold war.

In all of our many hours of conversation, neither Esther nor Stephen has ever revealed the slightest indication of Communist attitudes. On the contrary, both of them are most strongly opposed to the ideology and practices of communism. As you know, Stephen Brunauer was born in Hungary and spent his youth there. Many of his boyhood friends have been victims of Communist dictatorship. He is perhaps the most violently anti-Communist person I know.

I have no hesitation in vouching for the complete loyalty of Stephen and Esther Brunauer to the United States and to our way of life.

With best regards
Yours sincerely,

JOSEPH H. BALL.

Senator McMAHON. Thank you very much.

Another letter was just handed to me. It is a letter from Senator Benton. May I read that at this point, sir?

Senator TYDINGS. You certainly may.

Senator McMAHON (reading):

In response to an appeal I have received from Mrs. Esther Brunauer, I am glad to attest to the fact that I knew her well while I served as Assistant Secretary of State. Indeed she worked closely with me, and played a most important role in all of the early developments which led to the formation of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. She gave me guidance and counsel on the negotiations and policy questions upon which I leaned heavily. I saw her a great deal and there was not only no remote indication of any pro-Communist leanings but, on the contrary, I remember the vigor with which Mrs. Brunauer espoused policies for UNESCO diametrically opposed to those of the U. S. S. R. and its satellites.

I found Mrs. Brunauer to be a most admirable public servant, of the highest character—devoted to her work, intelligent, industrious, persistent, hard-working and courageous. Further, I never saw anything about her to indicate that she was other than discreet, or other than thoroughly loyal to the United States.

As with Ambassador Jessup, to which I referred on the floor of the Senate on Wednesday, I feel that the charges against Mrs. Brunauer—as well as those against Haldore Hanson, who also worked closely with me when I served from 1945 through 1947 as Assistant Secretary of State—are indeed irresponsible.

WILLIAM BENTON,
United States Senate.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Brunauer, the letters which have been read, and the list of letters which you read in connection with your statement, did you ask these people to write those letters in your behalf?

Mrs. BRUNAUER. Yes, sir, and I asked them to send them to me so that I could file them, because I was afraid that if they came in singly to the chairman it would give the appearance of something I had no intention whatever of doing, which was to put on a pressure campaign. These letters are furnished in no sense as pressure but simply as a testimony of people who worked with me and know me. Naturally I had to ask them to describe my character, to let you know the sort of person I am, and they have been read in that light, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You will excuse me while I make this announcement.

I have been asked by members of the press frequently during the morning if I had received a letter from Dr. Bronk, the president of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

In view of the fact that this has gotten in the press I think it will be fair for me to read the letter so there won't be any misinterpretation of it:

THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY,
Baltimore 18, Md., March 24, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: Senator McCarthy's recent charges against Owen Lattimore are a matter of serious concern to me and to the university in which Mr. Lattimore holds a responsible position. As you know, Mr. Lattimore is in Afghanistan on a mission for the United Nations and is, therefore, not in a position to answer the charges.

The latest information I have from the United Nations headquarters is that he will leave Afghanistan about March 27. With perfect travel conditions he should be in this country by the 1st of April, but it is probably unsafe to anticipate his return until some time toward the end of the first week in April.

I am sure that you will agree with me that both the national interest and simple justice require that Mr. Lattimore be given the earliest possible opportunity to appear before your committee. I hope that he will be permitted to do so immediately upon his return.

Yours sincerely,

DETLEY W. BRONK,

Of course we will give Dr. Lattimore an opportunity when he does get back to familiarize himself with what is going on here, and a chance to be heard.

Without objection, the committee will stand in recess until 3:30 this afternoon.

(Whereupon, at 12 noon, the committee recessed until 3:30 p. m. of the same day.)

AFTER RECESS

(The hearing was resumed at the expiration of the recess, at 3:30 p. m., Senator Millard E. Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee.)

Present: As previously noted, plus Senator Lodge.

Senator TYDINGS. Before going on with the witnesses the chairman would like to make two announcements.

I have received word that Mr. Owen Lattimore, who was mentioned in some of the open hearings here as one of the accused, is on his way back to the United States; that it is estimated he will arrive here either on the 31st of March or the 1st of April.

After consultation with the committee, we have set April 4, Tuesday, as the tentative date to hear Mr. Lattimore in this room. In the event, after Mr. Lattimore returns, he would like a day or so more to absorb the evidence that has been stated against him, the committee will, of course, give him that time. But we are setting April 4 tentatively as the date to hear Mr. Lattimore.

The second announcement is as follows, that any person desiring to ask any of the persons who are accused any question which is pertinent to this inquiry, if he will submit in writing the question he desires to have put to the witness, the committee will ascertain whether the questions are relevant and pertinent, and if so, the committee will ask the questions, or such member of the committee as is requested will ask the question of the witness. The same right will be given to witnesses to ask questions through the medium of the committee of persons who have accused them of acts or Communist leanings, of the fact that they are Communists or not. We will take their questions in the same category.

We are very glad to have with us this afternoon Attorney General McGrath and Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI. Which of you gentlemen prefers to testify first?

Attorney General McGRATH. I should prefer to make my statement first, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. General McGrath, in view of the fact that the committee has the policy of swearing all witnesses who come before it, I would be grateful if you would rise while I administer the oath.

Do you solemnly promise and declare that the evidence you shall give in the pending matter before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Attorney General McGRATH. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, General. You may proceed in your own way, and at your request no questions will be asked until you have read your statement. Proceed, sir.

STATEMENT OF HON. J. HOWARD McGRATH, ATTORNEY GENERAL

Attorney General McGRATH. Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity of appearing before your committee today, together with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in order to discuss with you a serious problem that has arisen in the course of the investigation that you are conducting pursuant to Senate Resolution 231. There has been a great deal of talk about the production before your committee of loyalty and investigative files relating to the persons against whom Senator McCarthy has brought charges of disloyalty. I think that it is well that we should discuss this matter together at this time in the interest of clarifying some of the issues.

I need not remind you that it is only a matter of months since I myself was a Member of that great body of which this committee is a part, the United States Senate. Having had the privilege of serving in the Senate, as well as in the executive branch, I am fully aware and indeed extremely sensible of the degree of cooperation that must exist between the legislative and executive branches of the Government if we are to make our tripartite system of government work.

Cooperation, however, is but one facet of the key to the solution of our problem. If our tripartite system is to work each branch must also carefully avoid encroaching upon the prerogatives of the other. This is such a basic principle that it was recognized as early as the administration of our first President. On February 22 last, the very day on which the Senate agreed to the resolution under which this committee is proceeding, the Farewell Address of President Washington was read in the Senate Chamber. I call your attention to one paragraph of that Address, which appears on page 2158 of the Congressional Record of February 22, and which to me aptly states the principles by which we must be governed. President Washington stated:

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. * * * If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

President Washington was speaking from personal experience with the very problem we now have before us, namely, a request by congressional committee for the production of documents which in the opinion of the executive branch must be held confidential in the public interest. The problem, you see, is as old as our Government itself.

In March of 1792, the House of Representatives adopted a resolution establishing a committee to inquire into the causes of the failure of the expedition under Maj. Gen. St. Clair, and empowering that committee to call for such papers and records as might be necessary to assist the committee in its inquiries. The House based its right to investigate on its control over the expenditure of public money. When the committee asked the President for papers relating to the campaign, President Washington called a meeting of his Cabinet. Present were Thomas Jefferson, Secretary of State; Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury; Henry Knox, Secretary of War; and Edmond Randolph, the Attorney General. The President stated that he had called his Cabinet together because this was the first demand on the Executive for papers within his control and he desired that insofar as the action taken would constitute a precedent, it should be rightly conducted. President Washington readily admitted that he had no doubt of the propriety of what the House was doing, but he did conceive that there might be papers of so secret a nature that they ought not be given up. The President and his Cabinet came to a unanimous conclusion as follows:

First, that the House was an inquest, and therefore might institute inquiries. Second, that it might call for papers generally. Third, that the Executive ought to communicate such papers as the public good would permit, and ought to refuse those, the disclosure of which would injure the public.

The precedent there set by President Washington and his Cabinet was followed in 1796 when he refused to comply with a resolution of the House of Representatives which requested him to lay before the House a copy of the instructions to the United States Minister who negotiated a treaty with Great Britain, together with the correspondence and documents relating to that treaty. In declining to comply, President Washington stated:

As it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the various departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duties of my office * * * forbids a compliance with your request.

It was because of such experiences that President Washington felt called upon to refer, in his Farewell Address, to the importance of maintaining the independence of our separate branches of government. Later, President Jefferson refused to allow two members of his Cabinet to supply documents in the trial of Aaron Burr. In 1852, President Monroe declined to comply with the request of the House of Representatives to transmit to the House certain documents relating to the conduct of naval officers. In 1833, President Jackson refused to comply with a Senate request that he communicate to it a copy of a paper reporting to have been read by him to the heads of the executive departments relating to the removal of the deposits of public money from the Bank of the United States. In 1886, President Cleveland supported his Attorney General's refusal to comply with a Senate resolution calling for documents and papers relating to the removal of a district attorney.

Similarly, in 1843, a resolution of the House of Representatives called upon the Secretary of War to communicate to the House the reports made to the War Department by Lieutenant Colonel Hitchcock relative to the affairs of the Cherokee Indians, together with all information communicated by him concerning the frauds which he had been charged to investigate. The Secretary of War advised the House that he could not communicate information which Colonel Hitchcock had obtained in confidence, because it would be grossly unjust to the persons who had given the information. The House, however, claimed the right to demand from the Executive and heads of departments such information as may be in their possession relating to subjects of deliberations of the House. President Tyler, in a message dated January 31, 1843, said in part:

And, although information comes through a proper channel to an executive officer, it may often be of a character to forbid its being made public. The officer charged with a confidential inquiry, and who reports its result under the pledge of confidence which his appointment implies, ought not to be exposed individually to the resentment of those whose conduct may be impugned by the information he collects. The knowledge that such is to be the consequence will inevitably prevent the performances of duties of that character, and thus the Government will be deprived of an important means of investigating the conduct of its agents.

President Tyler also declined to comply with a resolution of the House of Representatives which called upon him and the heads of departments to furnish information regarding such members of the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses as had applied for office in the executive branch. In so refusing, President Tyler stated:

• Applications for office are in their very nature confidential, and if the reasons assigned for such applications or the names of the applicants were communicated, not only would such implied confidence be wantonly violated but, in addition, it is quite obvious that a mass of vague, incoherent, and personal matter would be made public at a vast consumption of time, money, and trouble without accomplishing or tending in any manner to accomplish, as it appears to me, any useful object connected with a sound and constitutional administration of the Government in any of its branches.

In my judgment, a compliance with the resolution which has been transmitted to me would be a surrender of duties and powers which the Constitution has conferred exclusively on the Executive; and, therefore, such compliance cannot be made by me nor by the heads of departments by my direction.

These are only a few of the precedents to be found in the constitutional history of our Government; many more could be referred to.

Although I have mentioned only a few of the precedents, I might add that almost every President has found it necessary at some time during his administration to decline, for reasons of public policy, to furnish confidential papers to congressional committees. The courts have recognized this constitutional prerogative of the Chief Executive, and the great constitutional scholars uniformly agree that it is for the President to determine what papers and information in the executive branch must be retained in confidence in the public interest. William Howard Taft, following his term as President and prior to his appointment as Chief Justice, summarized the situation succinctly and accurately when he wrote in his book The Chief Magistrate:

The President is required by the Constitution from time to time to give to Congress information on the state of the Union, and to recommend for its consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, but this does not enable Congress or either House of Congress to elicit from him confidential information which he has acquired for the purpose of enabling him to discharge his constitutional duties, if he does not deem the disclosure of such information prudent or in the public interest.

It is against this background, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that we must consider President Truman's directive of March 13, 1948, concerning the confidential nature of loyalty files.

Against this same background we must consider this committee's request for the production of such files.

In his directive, the President stated:

The efficient and just administration of the employee-loyalty program, under Executive Order No. 9835 of March 21, 1947, requires that reports, records, and files relative to the program be preserved in strict confidence. This is necessary in the interest of our national security and welfare, to preserve the confidential character and sources of information furnished, and to protect Government personnel against the dissemination of unfounded or disproved allegations. It is necessary also in order to insure the fair and just disposition of loyalty cases.

For these reasons, and in accordance with the long-established policy that reports rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other investigative agencies of the executive branch are to be regarded as confidential, all reports, records, and files relative to the loyalty of employees or prospective employees (including reports of such investigative agencies), shall be maintained in confidence, and shall not be transmitted or disclosed except as required in the efficient conduct of business.

At the time of issuing this directive, the President specifically referred to some of the precedents that I have mentioned this afternoon and called particular attention to the sound reasons of public policy requiring the maintenance of the confidential status of loyalty files. The President referred to an opinion rendered by Attorney General Jackson at a time when, at the direction of President Roosevelt, he declined to furnish certain reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the House Committee on Naval Affairs. Attorney General Jackson wrote as follows:

Disclosure of the reports could not do otherwise than seriously prejudice law enforcement. Counsel for a defendant or prospective defendant could have no greater help than to know how much or how little information the Government has, and what witnesses or sources of information it can rely upon. This is exactly what these reports are intended to contain.

Disclosure of the reports at this particular time would also prejudice the national defense and be of aid and comfort to the very subversive elements against which you wish to protect the country. For this reason, we have made extraordinary efforts to see that the results of counterespionage activities and intelligence activities of this Department involving those elements are kept within the fewest possible hands. A catalog of persons under investigation or suspicion, and what we know about them, would be of inestimable service to foreign agencies, and information which could be so used cannot be too closely guarded.

Moreover, disclosure of the reports would be of serious prejudice to the future usefulness of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. As you probably know, much of this information is given in confidence and can only be obtained upon pledge not to disclose its sources. A disclosure of the sources would embarrass informants—sometimes in their employment, sometimes in their social relations, and in extreme cases might even endanger their lives. We regard the keeping of faith with confidential informants as an indispensable condition of future efficiency.

Disclosure of information contained in the reports might also be the grossest kind of injustice to innocent individuals. Investigative reports include leads and suspicions, and sometimes even the statements of malicious or misinformed people. Even though later and more complete reports exonerate the individuals, the use of particular or selected reports might constitute the grossest injustice, and we all know that a correction never catches up with an accusation.

With respect to files which this committee has requested their disclosure would, it seems to me, seriously impair the effectiveness of the employee-loyalty program. It would subject the persons in question to a type of double jeopardy which is contrary to sound concepts of good government, fairness, and justice. It would also make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to perform its investigative duties. The Federal Bureau of Investigation conducts all investigations under the employee-loyalty program. Loyalty files, therefore, are for all practical purposes FBI files. Mr. Hoover is here to give you his views. He has held these views for many years, views of the damaging effect that would be caused by the disclosure of such files. I know of no one better qualified to speak on this subject. I am in thorough accord with his views in every respect.

It is my opinion, members of the committee, for the reasons stated, that loyalty and investigative files of the Department of Justice should be preserved in strict confidence.

Mr. Chairman, over the week end I gave much thought to the fact that we are all here united in a common effort. There are times when we seem to be falling victims to ancient techniques of divide and conquer. I had thought of making a plea to this committee to permit a sane and logical approach to the very delicate and difficult problems with which we are faced. However, when I picked up the New York Times of this morning, I found that Mr. Henry L. Stimson, our former Secretary of State and War, has said everything that I possibly could say on that subject, and certainly with more eloquence than I could ever bring to my command. I would like at this time, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, to place in the record of this committee this very fine statement of Mr. Stimson, with which I associate myself completely.

Senator TRIDINGS. General McGrath, the committee would be very much obliged to you if you would read it into the record, if you do not mind. I think many of us might have missed it. I have missed it myself. So long as we are on one phase of the matter, it might be a good idea to make the record complete.

Attorney General McGRATH (reading):

The present charges against the Department of State have not in my view deserved much attention. But the very widespread notice they have received prompts me to make certain comments.

First, this is most emphatically not the proper way to insure loyalty of Government employees. If that had been the real purpose of the accuser, he would have used the fully developed and tested procedure of the executive branch of the Government, under which charges are investigated and weighed by men of both parties and unimpeachable integrity. Any constructive result which may eventuate from the present charges would have been achieved far more surely and effectively by use of the existing procedures. The fact that the accuser has wholly ignored this well-established method indicates that his interest is of a different character.

Second, no matter what else may occur, the present charges have already scattered mud upon individuals of the highest integrity, and in the present state of the world the denial cannot always overtake the accusation. It should by now be wholly clear that indiscriminate accusations of this sort are doubly offensive; they damage the innocent and they help protect the guilty. For, if the accuser is so stupid as to connect a man like Ambassador Jessup with communism, are not all such accusations made suspect?

Third, and more important by far, the method of the present charges directly and dangerously impedes the conduct of the foreign affairs of our Government. It creates abroad a feeling that we are frightened and suspicious of each other; it diverts our attention, at home, from the genuine and pressing problems of our foreign affairs; it requires of many high officials that they desert their proper duties in order to prepare and deliver such extensive replies as that of Mr. Jessup. Not one of these effects would have resulted from a disinterested study of the loyalty of any suspected State Department employee; each of them is the direct result of the manner in which these charges have been made.

Fourth, it seems to me quite clear that the real motive of the accuser in this case is to cast discredit upon the Secretary of State of the United States. This man is not trying to get rid of known Communists in the State Department; he is hoping against hope that he will find some. Fortunately, the Secretary of State needs no defense from me. No one who knows his extraordinary record of able and disinterested public service can believe that he is in any danger from these little men. It is already obvious that in any test of personal confidence the men of honor, in both parties, will choose to stand with the Secretary.

But there is more at stake in this matter than the rise or fall of individuals. What is at stake is the effective conduct of our foreign policy.

Every Secretary of State, second only to his President, and alone among appointive officers of the Government, stands before the world as the representative of the United States of America. No man who holds this office can fail to feel the extraordinary responsibility he carries for service to the country and its peace. No man has a greater right to ask the sympathetic support and the cooperation of his fellow-citizens, and none is more properly exempt from the ordinary trials of politics. The man who seeks to gain political advantage from personal attack on a Secretary of State is a man who seeks political advantage from damage to his country.

The American Government, led by the President and the Secretary of State, is currently engaged in a major effort to give leadership to the country in a time of changing international conditions and grave world tension. This effort will require as part of our democratic process widespread and earnest public consideration of the great problems now before us, so that the ultimate decision will surely reflect the basic soundness and faith of our people. In such public consideration there is always room for honest differences, but now, as for many years past, the formulation of foreign policy most urgently demands an adjournment of mere partisanship.

This is no time to let the noisy antics of a few upset the steady purpose of our country or distract our leaders from their proper tasks. This is rather a time for stern rebuke of such antics and outspoken support of the distinguished public servants against whom they are directed.

HENRY L. STIMSON.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., March 24, 1950.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, General. Have you any questions, Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. No questions.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper, have you any questions?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes; I would like to ask a few questions.

General McGrath, you have made it clear that you in your authority over your Department will not give this subcommittee access to the loyalty and investigative files in the specific list of names that have already been requested.

Attorney General McGRATH. I am prevented from doing so by the President's Executive order. I speak in this regard for myself. The President has not directed me to turn over the files, and only on a Presidential direction would I do so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am referring to your statement. I do not want to labor this point, but I am merely stating my conclusions. On page 5, near the bottom, and it is all through there, through several pages, you refer to these precedents on which refusal has been made, and I take it now that that is your position.

Attorney General McGRATH. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you take the position, General McGrath, that the turning over of these files to a subcommittee of the Senate which has made no suggestion that under any circumstances it would attempt to make any part of these files public is considered a substantial risk, that the integrity involved is such that the risk would be great of surreptitious disclosure of the contents of those files?

Attorney General McGRATH. The risk can be one of degree, depending on the type of committee, of course. The thing that is important is to not break the principle, because when the principle is broken for one committee there is no way that you can refuse other committees of the Congress. The executive offices of the Government are not in a position to judge between the integrities of members of varying committees that may be appointed by the Congress from time to time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know how many clerks and other minor officials have access to these confidential files in the Department of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or agents or others who are employees?

Attorney General McGRATH. I will say this. Mr. Hoover is here and he can answer that question, but I will say this to the Senators, that even the top officers of the Department have very rarely, if at all, ever seen the files, the raw files, of the Bureau of Investigation. When we want information from those files we request it of the Bureau and it is given to us in memorandum file, and we never go near the raw files because he hold them in such sacred trust.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There are, nevertheless, people in your Department who can have, if occasion demands it in your judgment, access to those files?

Attorney General McGRATH. Anyone can have excess to the files that Mr. Hoover will permit to see the files or the Attorney General may direct that they be seen.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Hoover is subordinate to you in the Department of Justice, is he not?

Attorney General McGRATH. Yes, he is.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Therefore, your orders to him would be controlling in his official actions, would they not?

Attorney General McGRATH. I don't think I would give Mr. Hoover any orders. I think we would counsel together and I am sure we would come to the same conclusions.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I understand your relationships are very cordial. I am asking a question with regard to the technical flow, the chain of command. If you issue an order in your official capacity to him in his, it would be his duty as a subordinate Department within your Department to obey that order, would it not?

Attorney General McGRATH. I believe it would be, and I believe Mr. Hoover would obey it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have no doubt he would.

Now then, may I ask you this: Do you consider the turning over of certain specific files for confidential information, without any proposition of making those files public, to a subcommittee of, for instance, the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, to be a hazard and a risk of publicity of those files that exceeds the hazard and risk of publicity of subordinate employees in the Federal Bureau of Investigation or in other departments of your Department which might have access to them?

Attorney General McGRATH. I am not going to pass judgment on the integrity of this committee or any other committee of Congress. I say that there is great risk involved in breaking the principle that these files should not be made available.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General McGrath, let me ask you this question: Do you know whether or not confidential investigative files have ever been turned over for access to congressional committees and for examination by congressional committees?

Attorney General McGRATH. I think I may say with certainty that the raw files have never been turned over. There have from time to time been submitted to committees reports prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation indicating the information that may be contained in the files.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you aware whether or not the Judiciary Committee of the Senate has for a number of years requested and received investigative reports, especially in the case of Federal judges, from the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Attorney General McGRATH. It does with the authorization of the President and the approval of the Attorney General. That is quite a different situation. When a man presents himself for the favor of a Presidential appointment to the judiciary of the United States, we feel that he should be willing that that be done, and that no damage can come to him. He should be willing to have the committee which passes on his qualifications for this lifetime job see his file. In that instance an exception is made and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is permitted to see a summary of the file as prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, not the raw file. Never the raw file.

Senator TYDINGS. Do I understand you to say that in the case of these judges the raw file is not turned over, only a summary of what is in the file?

Attorney General McGRATH. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In pursuing that just a step further, by the "raw file" I take it you mean the file containing the actual names and identification, for instance, of all informants; in other words, the complete background of all information.

Attorney General McGRATH. I mean by the "raw file" everything that the Department has on the subject of an investigation goes into the file—the notes of the interviewers, statements that are made by those that are interviewed, exhibits, all such material as that goes into what we call the raw file. These raw files in some instances run into many volumes and into many filing cabinets.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But in the summary of these files, which may or may not contain actual names of informants, for instance, all of the information in the raw file is presumably digested for the information of those who examine the digest and the report.

Attorney General McGRATH. It is evaluated, yes, and put into a narrative form.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And do you know whether Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate have on occasion been given access to the investigative files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Attorney General McGRATH. Not to my knowledge. I have no knowledge that that is so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General McGrath, I notice in your statement that there runs through it consistently in the precedents "resisting the turning over of investigative files or summaries of these files." By the way, I take it that your objection would go just the same to turning over the summarization of the files, as is customarily done, for instance, for the Judiciary Committee. Your objection would go just the same to turning over a summarization of the files by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to this subcommittee?

Attorney General McGRATH. I think the situation is different here than it is in the case of the Judiciary Committee considering the life appointment of a Federal judge. My objection runs to turning over a summary of the files.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I say this without any declaration one way or the other, but it is entirely possible that there are occasions when the very lifeblood of this country depends upon certain information which may be acquired in proper places, as well as the lifetime appointment of a judge.

Attorney General McGRATH. Such a situation could arise and the President has the power to make an exception if he sees fit to do it.

I was going to suggest that we are probably covering some ground that may be the subject of the Director's testimony, and while I am merely suggesting to you that Mr. Hoover be permitted to make his statement and I shall be glad to answer any questions after that, I only make that suggestion in the interest of probably saving some time, as he in discussing the procedures of his Department may have the answers to some of these questions.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have just a few other questions, but then other members of the committee may want to question the General, and I do not want to take an undue amount of time at this time.

Senator TYDINGS. Proceed in any way you wish, but I would like to say Mr. Hoover will testify immediately following General McGrath, and many of the technical things Mr. Hoover could perhaps answer in more detailed fashion than General McGrath. Whatever way you wish to proceed will be proper.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Especially with reference to the matter I was mentioning a moment ago, about the confidential nature of the receipt of information in these files, at the bottom of page 8 you again emphasize as follows:

With respect to files which this committee has requested, their disclosure would, it seems to me, seriously impair the effectiveness of the employee loyalty program.

Attorney General McGRATH. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I merely emphasize that because so much of the objection to this has been bottomed on the fact that this subcommittee is going to take the files and disclose what is in the files.

Attorney General McGRATH. This committee has requested access to the raw files and it has requested the right of its staff members to go into its files, and that we very strongly object to.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I ask you this: If the subcommittee modified its request and said, "We want to have delivered to us for our examination the customary and standard summarization of the raw files, such as is ordinarily made up by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for these various groups," would that change the picture any?

Attorney General McGRATH. It doesn't to my mind. I would like you to direct that question to Mr. Hoover after he finishes his statement.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is not a constitutional department, isn't that true? It was, that is, created by an act of Congress? It has a longer history than that, but it is now operating as a result of legislative recognition?

Attorney General McGRATH. It is part of the executive branch of the Government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And it gets its authority as a result of statute at the present time?

Attorney General McGRATH. The same way that the Department of Justice gets its authority. It was created by an act of Congress.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Could the Congress abolish the Federal Bureau of Investigation and its activities, do you believe?

Attorney General McGRATH. Yes, it could, and it could abolish the Department of Justice if it wishes to.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Could it abolish the Civil Service Commission by an act of Congress?

Attorney General McGRATH. Yes, it could.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you hold that the Congress can direct the duties and the activities of departments and agencies which it has the authority to set up?

Attorney General McGRATH. Congress can make the laws that govern the executive agencies. The President administers those laws.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And, for instance, I take it that you agree that Congress in setting up an agency, or a department, even though Congress may elect to put that department under the executive branch of Government for convenience of administration or for other purposes, has the right, in the law that sets up that department, to prescribe the duties of that department which it creates?

Attorney General McGRATH. It can prescribe them within the limits of the Constitution. If it creates an executive agency it must leave it to the President to administer that agency. It cannot keep it within the legislative branch. If the Congress wished to create a Bureau of Investigation that was part of the legislative branch of Government, I suppose it could do that, if it would justify its needs as an aid to the functions of the legislative branch. It has not seen fit to do that, however. It has created an independent agency in the executive branch, and therefore, under the Constitution the power of administration passes on to the President.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you consider that Congress in setting up an agency of government can require that agency to make reports to Congress periodically?

Attorney General McGRATH. It can go to some extent. It cannot go to the extent which is indicated here by your request for files of this kind. I think that would be decided by the courts to be an encroachment upon the executive function. I think such an attempt would be struck down.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you believe that Congress could create an investigative agency and in the act creating it say that it shall investigate and inquire into certain activities of individuals and businesses and make periodic reports to the Congress, meanwhile putting that agency in the executive department for administrative purposes?

Attorney General McGRATH. No. If it puts it in the executive branch, then it cannot require it to give its reports to the Congress unless the President sees fit to permit it. If the Congress wishes an agency of that kind, it can establish it as part of the legislative branch of government, and then the Executive has no control over it whatsoever.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then I take it that the reports of the Immigration Service and of the Federal Communications Commission and all of the rest of the agencies of government that are required by law to make periodic reports to the Congress are being made only at the sufferance of the President, according to your view?

Attorney General McGRATH. The President could make a finding that it was not in the public interest in a particular instance to make those reports available and prevent them from being made. He would have to make that finding, however. It is not reasonable to suppose that a President is going to make a finding in matters of that kind. He has to reach the conclusion that the making of a particular report is or is not in the public interest.

I may remind the members of the committee that the Congress itself is pretty jealous of its prerogatives. Only 2 weeks ago one of the Federal courts issued a subpoena to the House of Representatives to produce the minutes of a meeting of a committee of the House of Representatives, and the committee politely refused to submit to the subpoena, and sent word to the court that the judicial branch of the Government had no control over the legislative branch, and indeed I am sure the committee of the House of Representatives was correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, I don't care to argue that point, particularly. I call your attention to the fact that these Federal agencies that we have been referring to have been created by the Congress and their duties have been prescribed by the Congress. The Congress was not created by this Federal court, and it does not get its authority nor its power from the Federal court.

Attorney General McGRATH. Once Congress conceives them, and brings them into being, they take on a different character. Once Congress is through with the law creating them, they then pass to the control of the Executive, and they are from thenceforth part of the executive branch of the Government, which is quite independent of the legislative branch.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I suppose that the legal interpretation of that would have to rest with the courts anyway, and I do not care to burden you with further discussion on this matter.

Attorney General McGRATH. I think the courts have been passing on that for 150 years, and there isn't a dissent that I know of.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that there is very excellent argument that does not quite sustain your position, but then there is argument that can be used to sustain it also.

It is a close question, and I think this particular question has never been squarely passed on by the courts. But I merely wanted to get the position of your Department firmly fixed as to your Department's rejection of the request of this subcommittee for a delivery of either the raw files or, wanting that, the summarized files, which are not so-called raw files of the Department.

I believe that that is all the questions I have.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon, have you any questions?

Senator McMAHON. I have a question or two for the Attorney General, but I would prefer to ask him after Mr. Hoover finishes his testimony.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you remain with us until Mr. Hoover finishes his testimony, Mr. McGrath?

Attorney General McGRATH. I certainly will.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge, have you any questions?

Senator LODGE. Yes, I have one.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator LODGE. Have the raw files ever been made available to a court?

Attorney General McGRATH. In the Coplon case. I think perhaps Mr. Hoover can answer that. No request has ever come to me since I have been Attorney General for a raw file, but Mr. Hoover has had 25 years' or more experience in these matters, and he probably would be able to answer your question.

Senator LODGE. I wondered if there was any inconsistency between their making the raw file available to the court and not making it available to the Congress.

Attorney General McGRATH. If it was made available in the Coplon trial, and I am not sure that it was, it would have been done with the consent of the President via the Attorney General. I happen to know there were considerable differences of opinion as to whether the Government should have made as many files available in that case as it did. Whether it was the complete raw file or not, I don't know.

Senator LODGE. Your statement applies only, does it not, to FBI files, and not to State Department files or Civil Service files?

Attorney General McGRATH. Oh, yes, Senator. I have nothing to do with the files of the other departments, except that we would object to your securing those files if they contained our FBI reports, which I think they do, because the FBI is the agency that does all of the investigating for the loyalty program. We would have no objection, of course, to your obtaining the personnel files of any department. We have no objection to your obtaining the Civil Service Commission files on employees, so long as those files contain no part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's work.

Senator LODGE. Thank you. That is all.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Hoover, will you rise and hold up your right hand?

Do you solemnly promise that the evidence you shall give in this case as outlined in Senate Resolution 281 shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. HOOVER. I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, sir.

Before you begin testifying, Mr. Hoover, I want to take this occasion to thank both Attorney General McGrath and you, sir, for accepting my invitation to come up here today and give your personal viewpoints on the matter that is pending before this committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, just before Mr. Hoover testifies, I was handed a memorandum at the door as I came in from Senator McCarthy's office. It is as follows, on his stationery:

MEMORANDUM

To: Senator Bourke Hickenlooper.

From: Senator Joe McCarthy.

I would appreciate it very much if you would inform J. Edgar Hoover that I deeply regret that I shall be unable to hear his testimony this afternoon because of the fact that I am completely and inescapably tied up with the preparation of material which I expect to present on the Senate floor tomorrow.

I am sure that Mr. Hoover will understand that my absence under the circumstances does not even remotely indicate any lack of interest in his testimony. I shall obtain his testimony at the earliest possible moment for careful study.

Will you also inform Mr. Hoover that I shall greatly appreciate it if he will have one of his agents available when I address the Senate tomorrow so that I may turn over to him documents in the Lattimore case which I consider of some importance. Thank you.

JOE MCCARTHY.

Mr. Hoover. That request will be complied with.

Senator TYDINGER. Mr. Hoover, will you proceed in your own way? We will not interrupt you.

STATEMENT OF HON. J. EDGAR HOOVER, DIRECTOR, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Hoover. In the 26 years during which I have been privileged to serve as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, I have always maintained the view that if we were to fully discharge the serious responsibilities imposed upon us, the confidential character of our files must be inviolate.

A cardinal principle of success for any agency having a responsibility for investigations is its ability to secure information. To do that, it must be able to maintain confidences. Any person furnishing information must have the security of knowing that when he furnishes information on a confidential basis, he will not at a later date find that confidence broken. When that occurs, the ability of the investigative agency to discharge its responsibilities in the future is materially lessened.

The public record clearly proves that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, because it does maintain confidences, has been able to develop valuable sources of information which have a direct bearing on the internal security of the Nation. I need refer only to the Government witnesses who testified in the trial of the 11 Communists leaders in New York last summer. Seven of these witnesses risked their lives as undercover employees of the FBI.

The question of opening the files of the FBI involves a grave matter of principle. In taking the position that the files of the FBI should remain inviolate, I would not, of course, presume to discuss files other than those of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

These files contain complaints, allegations, facts, and statements of all persons interviewed. Depending upon the purpose of the investigation, particularly in security cases, they contain, not only background data on the individual but details of his private life which bear upon the investigation. In these files also are the identities of our confidential sources of information and full details of investigative techniques. In short, they consist of a running account of all that transpires.

A file is maintained in each case because the FBI has received information, allegations, or a complaint which if proven comes within the sphere of our responsibility, in pursuance of either congressional or Executive directives. After the investigation is completed, when indicated by Department procedure or judgment, a summary of the facts developed is furnished to the Department of Justice or United States attorneys. In other types of investigations, the reports of special agents are submitted to the interested agency of the Government. Details and information dealing with administrative operations and confidential sources of information remain in our files. The contents of these files were never intended to be disclosed and, unless we drastically change or circumscribe our procedures, they should not be disclosed.

The question of divulging contents of the files of agencies of government is not a new one. When confronted with the question of divulging the files of an executive department of the Government in 1909, the late President Theodore Roosevelt said:

Some of these facts * * * were given to the Government under the seal of secrecy and cannot be divulged and I will see to it that the word of this Government to the individual is kept sacred.

The disclosure of the contents of the files of the FBI would reveal confidential procedures and techniques. If spread upon the record, criminals, foreign agents, subversives, and others would be forewarned and would seek methods to carry out their activities by avoiding detection and thus defeat the very purposes for which the FBI was created. Each exception undermines this principle, establishes a precedent, and would result in a complete collapse of a traditional policy which has proven its soundness.

A disclosure of FBI reports would reveal the identity of confidential sources of information and, if it did not place the lives of such persons in actual jeopardy, it would certainly ruin their future value and effectiveness.

The disclosure of FBI reports would make otherwise patriotic citizens reluctant to furnish information. Already, as a result of some unfortunate disclosures of our files in court proceedings, our special agents frequently are being told by persons from whom they seek information that they will decline to be interviewed for fear the information will be misused by some agency other than the FBI.

In the conduct of official investigations, information of a highly restricted nature having a direct bearing upon national security often finds its way into the files, which, if disclosed, would be of considerable value to a foreign power. Increasingly, we have observed efforts of a foreign power to seek intimate personal details concerning many of our leaders in government and industry. They should not be aided by having these details made public for their use and advantage, thereby crippling the important work of the FBI.

So far, I have directed my remarks against a disclosure of FBI files on security grounds. There are other compelling reasons why the files of the FBI should remain inviolate. For the want of a more apt comparison, our files can be compared to the notes of a newspaper reporter before he has culled through the printable material from the unprintable. The files do not consist of proven information alone. The files must be viewed as a whole. One report may allege crimes of a most despicable type, and the truth or falsity of these charges may not emerge until several reports are studied, further investigation made, and the wheat separated from the chaff.

I, for one, would want no part of an investigative organization which had the power of discretion to decide what information would be reported and what would be omitted. An item of information which appears unimportant today may provide the solution of a case when considered with information received at a later date, or it may later establish the innocence of the accused.

Should a given file be disclosed, the issue would be a far broader one than concerns the subject of the investigation. Names of persons who by force of circumstance entered into the investigation might well be innocent of any wrong. To publicize their names, without the explanation of their associations, would be a grave injustice. Even though they were given an opportunity to later give their explanation, the fact remains that truth seldom, if ever, catches up with charges. I would not want to be a party to any action which would smear innocent individuals for the rest of their lives. We cannot disregard the fundamental principles of common decency and the application of basic American rights of fair play in the administration of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The FBI has the obligation, within the scope of Federal law, not only to protect the rights, lives, and property of our people, but also to protect the confidential relationship of the individual when he patriotically serves his Government by providing information essential to our security.

FBI reports set forth all details secured from a witness. If those details were disclosed, they could become subject to misinterpretation, they could be quoted out of context, or they could be used to thwart truth, distort half-truths, and misrepresent facts. The raw material, the allegations, the details of associations, and compilation of information in FBI files must be considered as a whole. They are of value to an investigator in the discharge of his duty. These files were never intended to be used in any other manner and the public interest would not be served by the disclosure of their contents.

In taking this stand, I want to reiterate a principle is involved. I would take this same stand before the Attorney General, as I already have, or before any other body. The fact that I have great respect, confidence, and a desire to be of assistance to a committee of distinguished Senators, however, in no way detracts from a principle. I say this because I do not want any misinterpretation of my remarks, nor do I want it said that this and other committees of Congress do not have my respect and confidence. I would, however, be derelict to my duty, untrue to my conscience, and unworthy of my trust if I took any other position.

Senator TRINING. Thank you, Mr. Hoover.

Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. Mr. Hoover, there has been a good deal of evidence, although no direct statement, to the effect that the process of screening these respective individuals is entirely inadequate. Will you give the committee a description of what screening is done from the bottom up?

Mr. HOOVER. Do you mean in these loyalty cases? Are you referring to those?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. HOOVER. In the loyalty cases the procedure which is followed is for the Civil Service Commission to send to us various loyalty forms of the employees of the Government. Those forms are first searched against the name files of the FBI, and if in the name check there is found any reference to subversive activities, or activities of a disloyal character, that loyalty form is returned to the Civil Service Commission with the notation that an investigation has been opened. If there has been no disloyalty information developed from that check, the notation is made "No disloyal data—FBI files."

In the first group of cases, those upon which we find evidence of subversive activities, we initiate a full field investigation. A case is sent out to our appropriate offices, and information is developed as to his background and the allegations which are or may already be in the files of the FBI. Those reports are sent in to the Bureau and are there reviewed.

The report as you see it in the Bureau, the working file or the raw file, will contain the identity of all informants, the source of the information, and the method by which it was received. The report is then digested, and transmitted to the Civil Service Commission with administrative details and confidential sources remaining in our files.

In the cases where informants are willing to appear and testify, their identities are set forth. In cases where they do not wish to have their identities disclosed, they are designated by a symbol.

I may say for your benefit, Senator Green, that that procedure of not disclosing the informant was not my decision, it was the decision of the Presidential Loyalty Review Board, which decided that the identities would be kept confidential in those cases in which the informant desired that there was anything to be kept in such confidence.

The reports upon a particular case go to the Civil Service Commission. They in turn, I understand, refer them to the agency of the Government in which the employee is at the time assigned, and that agency will review those reports and the Loyalty Board will in due time have a hearing and accord the employee the opportunity to be present with counsel and to answer such questions and charges as the Board may prefer. If they desire any agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to appear at those hearings to testify as to matters of which the agent may have first-hand knowledge, and not hearsay information, agents appear and testify.

Then the employee, if he is found to be disloyal under the Presidential directive, has a right of appeal to the Presidential Loyalty Board. That is a very general statement. There are a lot of minor steps I have omitted for purposes of brevity.

Senator GREEN. That is a rather elaborate course of screening.

Mr. HOOVER. Yes; I would say it is a rather elaborate course of screening.

Senator GREEN. Is it a course which you would say was easily adopted?

Mr. HOOVER. I think it was the most practical program that could be adopted at the time it was adopted. Maybe there are a few kinks in the program that could be ironed out. The President has at all times been studying that. I know very recently he requested the Attorney General and myself to offer any suggestions or views that would be of assistance toward improving or tightening that program. We have given earnest consideration to that. I think all in all it was a very fair procedure.

In the early stages of the loyalty program, Senator Green, there was a great hue and cry on the part of some of these pseudo liberals that it was a so-called "thought control" or "thought policing." It has been found after checking over 2,000,000 loyalty forms that there have been very few abuses, if any, that have actually taken place, either in the investigating or the hearings that have been reported, and in the investigations where there was some minor slip, corrective measures have been, of course, taken.

I think it has worked very well and I think that is the consensus of the better thinking members of the press who have had an opportunity to view it and observe it first hand.

Senator GREEN. I thank you very much for that statement, because I think it will restore confidence on the part of a great many people where it has been somewhat shaken.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I notice again in your statement, as I noticed in the Attorney General's statement, a repeated and continued emphasis upon the opening of files for public disclosure. It has never been my thought as a member of this committee, and I have heard no mention on the part of the subcommittee, that any of these files were to be opened by this committee for public disclosure. Also, the question of so-called raw files has come up in the Attorney General's statement.

As you stated a moment ago, I believe that you either symbolize or give reference by number to the source of information on the part of those people who do not like to have their names disclosed.

Mr. HOOVER. That is correct, and when we submit that report to the Civil Service Commission in the loyalty cases it is a summary of the investigation by the Bureau.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. A great many of your reports adequately serve the purpose when they are in fact summaries of all the information which you have gathered about an individual is that not the case?

Mr. HOOVER. I would assume that that is the case. We have had very few complaints about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you aware of loyalty files that have been made available to individual Members of Congress or to Congressional committees of either the House or the Senate?

Mr. HOOVER. By whom?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. FBI reports or files.

Mr. HOOVER. By whom? Just a minute. Who made the files available to Members of Congress? Not anybody in the FBI ever made them available.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I did not ask about the individual. I said, are you aware of any occasions when FBI investigative files have been made available by anybody to congressional committees or to individual Members of Congress?

Mr. HOOVER. I am not aware of any loyalty reports being made available to any committee by any agency or any individual in the Government, because there is a direct Presidential directive prohibiting it. I know insofar as the Federal Bureau of Investigation is concerned, no confidential reports of the Bureau have ever been made available to anybody.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What is the situation about the Senate Judiciary Committee in connection with the investigation of Federal judges?

Mr. HOOVER. In connection with the Senate Judiciary Committee, there is again a so-called summarization of a file. The raw file is not made available to the committee, by reason of the fact as the Attorney General has explained this afternoon, that there is a different principle involved in making available to a committee passing on the qualifications, for confirmation, of a man to a judicial post than there is involved in this over-all problem of internal security.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you consider that problem more important than the question of making available information to a committee that is trying to investigate alleged subversive activities which may go to the heart of the national defense or our whole national security?

Mr. HOOVER. I am not endeavoring to evaluate which is the most important or which is the least important, Senator. I am stating to you that as Director of the Bureau, in the years I have been Director I have consistently urged the Department not to yield access to these raw working files or to the summaries in the internal-security cases. I can be overruled in that opinion by the Attorney General or the President. Up to the present time the Attorneys General have supported that and the various Presidents have supported that position. I think there is a great difference between an active file; a file that is in question before this committee upon which this committee was seeking access to the records is an active working file in current investigation. I do not think that file should be made available to you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the event this committee made it clear that what the committee was seeking was an accurate summarization of the active working file, rather than the active working file itself—

Senator GREEN. May I draw my distinguished colleague's attention to the fact that we were directed to obtain by subpoena, if necessary, and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of Government employees in the Department of State, and so forth? Nothing was said about summaries.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Getting back to the question that I was asking you, Mr. Hoover—

Mr. HOOVER. I will answer the question, Senator, that I would certainly recommend to the Attorney General that any summarization not be made available to the committee in an active internal security case, for the very reason that even though we summarize the file, the person reading that summary could very readily draw certain conclusions and deductions therefrom as to where the information might have been obtained. It might be to the embarrassment of informants, and again it is a matter of principle and one of degree. I have the utmost respect for this committee and for its integrity, but if we yield in this one case we break a precedent that will plague the Department and certainly, I think, materially interfere with the efficient operation of the FBI in future years to come. Other committees will ask for it. It is entirely within the realm of possibility, maybe not probability, that there might be a committee in which we would not have the same confidence we have in this committee. There have to be certain principles set and adhered to or the floodgates will be opened.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I ask you, Mr. Hoover, a question I asked the Attorney General, which he said you were better qualified to answer, and I believe that is true. How many clerks and stenographic personnel and other people have access to the information, or at least substantial parts of the information, that are contained in these files, by way of compilation?

Mr. HOOVER. I would say, Senator, that there would be probably not more than half a dozen. That would be a maximum number, a half dozen employees of the Bureau who would have access to the entire, whole working file. There are many clerks who will file certain papers into a certain file and will make an index card, but the file is restricted to requests from a particular supervisor or supervisors who are supervising that case, and from the Assistant Director in charge of that division and myself. The file is not allowed to be examined by any clerk or employee just for the purpose of curiosity.

I may also say, Senator, that each one of those employees of the Bureau has been thoroughly investigated as to their integrity, their loyalty, and as to their security risk, and we have never had a leak from those files. I don't mean to infer that any committee on the Hill or any of its staff may not be as good a security risk as our employees, but I do not know whether they have been investigated, I do not know whether they have been checked as thoroughly as our people, and again, as I say, the danger of a leak from the Bureau—and I do not say it is beyond the possibility of a leak in an organization that has 10,000 employees, but to date we have never had that occur to us.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I might suggest, Mr. Hoover, that there are at least two or three members of this committee, I think, that have had access to a great many files. The Senator from Connecticut and I have had access to many files of the Atomic Energy Commission that are investigative files. I believe the Senator from Maryland has had access to certain files and information, and I do not believe any of us as a result of that have leaked any information. I do not know about Senator Green or Senator Lodge.

Senator TYDINGS. Just for the record in case there is a leak, the Senator from Maryland has not read any of these summaries, purposely.

Mr. HOOVER. I want to make it very clear that I am not insinuating any lack of security on the part of this committee. As I tried to treat the point in my statement, it is a matter of principle. If we yield in this particular request of this committee, which probably has members equally as secure as any high officials in Government, you are setting a precedent and opening a floodgate that is going to plague the Department of Justice and materially interfere with the security work of the FBI.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I can understand your zeal, Mr. Hoover, in the inviolate protection of your files and your investigative procedures. But I do want to observe that this committee has been specifically charged with investigating certain allegations and charges. It is beyond my conception as to how this committee can investigate the subject matter of the individuals charged, in their own interest and in the interest of the public, now that the charges have been made, if we are denied and have the door shut in our faces on information, pro or con, which is officially in the hands of the Government, but which we cannot see and which we cannot use in evaluating the merits or the demerits of this investigation. That is the impasse to which we seem to have come, and I would be the last one—I am not perhaps the last one; I do not mean to discredit anyone else. There are a great many other people that would defend the integrity of your files and the integrity of your investigative system to the utmost. I am perfectly willing to do that. But I am anxious for someone to tell me how I can discharge my responsibilities as a member of this subcommittee when I do not have access to information in the hands of the Government upon which to make up my own independent judgment as to the merits or the demerits of these charges. That is the impasse that confronts me as a member of this committee, and I personally feel that there is not only no intention, but no possibility, of any disclosure of specific information in any of these files that would be made by this subcommittee unless and until full consultation and agreement with the proper authorities had been later had that such disclosure was all right.

Mr. HOOVER. I agree with you in that conclusion. On the first I cannot give you any assistance, as to how to break that impasse.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I sadly agree that you cannot give me any assistance on that.

Senator TYNDING. I am going to defer to my colleagues in asking questions and save mine until the last, but I would like to ask you one question about something you have touched on with reference to judges.

I would assume that one reason these summaries of the FBI files are made known in the case of an applicant for appointment to be a United States judge, whether it be for one of the lower United States courts or the highest, would be predicated on the fact that once he has assumed office, he cannot be gotten off the bench except by death, retirement, or impeachment, whereas in the case of all other individuals who work for the Government who are not elected, they can be discharged or released without that situation requiring impeachment. Is that one of the reasons, in your opinion, for this exception to what might be called the strictness of the FBI in not disclosing the files?

Mr. HOOVER. I think the Attorney General can answer that probably better than I.

Attorney General McGRATH. It goes beyond that. The applicant for the job knows in advance that the FBI is going to make an investigation and the results of that investigation are going to be made known to proper officials. He is in a much different position when he seeks that position than is the non-innocent or innocent employee who is suddenly subjected to an investigation of his personal affairs without any desire on his part so to be investigated. I think that makes a big difference.

Senator TYNDING. Furthermore, the judge sits with the power of life and death in many cases of the citizens of the community, and I am reminded that after the Punic Wars, when Solon was commissioned to write the laws for ancient Greece, for the first time he gave the people the right to vote only for the judges who would sit upon their crimes and misdemeanors, for the reason that that is one thing above all others that must have every security thrown about it, and if people elect their own judges, obviously they must have confidence in their integrity, and that was the reason that was done.

Attorney General McGrath. May I say to you that the record of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Department with respect to prosecution of all those against whom sufficient evidence has been secured is a splendid one, but this is not the time to discuss that undertaking. There are facts built up from day to day that this committee is not aware of as a whole, and it may be before you conclude the work of this committee I should like to come back and review with you everything that has been done in this field by the Department of Justice, because I think it is a splendid record. That record is so good that if any Member of the United States Senate thinks there are a lot of spies running around the United States, if he will tell us their names and a little information, we will soon bring them to justice.

Senator Tydings. Thank you.

Senator McMahon?

Senator McMahon. When was the loyalty program commenced, Mr. Hoover?

Mr. Hoover. In 1947, I think.

Senator McMahon. And under it all of the 2,000,000 employees of the Government have been checked?

Mr. Hoover. About 2,700,000 now, I think; that is, all of them have had a name check against the files of the Bureau. Of course, they have not been investigated unless some indication of disloyalty was present.

Senator McMahon. Can you tell us by whom this loyalty program was initiated?

Mr. Hoover. Originally the President named a committee, headed by Mr. Vanech, Assistant Attorney General of the Department of Justice, and upon that committee was Secretary of the Navy Sullivan and Under Secretary of the Treasury Foley and representatives of various other branches of the Government, who conferred at great length and made recommendations to the President as to the procedures to be followed in this particular program. Then there was a consultation with the appropriate committees of the House for the granting of the appropriations on it.

Senator McMahon. I remember there was about a 4 months' delay before the money was appropriated after the program was formulated, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Hoover. I think that is correct. The committees of the Congress gave it very careful study before the money was appropriated. I appeared before several of them on the House side.

Senator McMahon. Mr. Attorney General, you have just stated you do not consider it appropriate at this time to give us a review of the Department's work. I shall defer to your opinion as to its suitability at this time. It does seem to me, however, that since it is in this committee that charges have been made which have tended to shake confidence in the diligence of the Government's pursuit of wrongdoers, that it would be proper for you to briefly review some of the activities of the Department. I have in mind the 11 Communists in New York; I have in mind the successful prosecution of Alger Hiss; I have further in mind the prosecution of Mr. Bridges. I do not know whether that case is successfully concluded. And also of those persons who were in contempt of the committees of Congress for refusing to answer questions concerning their communistic affiliations.

I do not wish to press you on it, but those thoughts do occur to me, and it did seem appropriate to me that this was a place and a time in which proper reference to them could be made. However, if you feel that you wish to come back again, I do not press it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I might say for the benefit of the Attorney General that there are a number of questions collateral perhaps to his statement today that I would like to discuss with him. I refrained from asking those questions because his statement was confined to a certain limited area, and if the matter is to be opened up I merely wanted to say that I would have a great many questions to ask.

Attorney General McGINNIS. Senator Hickenlooper, that is exactly what I meant when I said I didn't think that it was appropriate today. We are here to discuss one question, the question of these files. But there is a very splendid story that ought to be known, because I think it would give confidence to the Members of Congress, I think it would give confidence to the public at large.

I may say that there is no instance in which the Federal Bureau of Investigation has completed a report involving disloyalty or subversiveness and referred it to the Attorney General where court action has not been instituted. And you may add to those you suggested that it was Mr. Hoover's organization that got the leads which resulted in the capture and arrest and conviction of Mr. Fuchs. Today we were successful in the prosecution of the Dennis case. We have a splendid record, and I think the country is entitled to know it, but I do not believe that while we are here to discuss this question of records that I ought to impose on the committee to talk about these matters, and I would like to come back at some future time and talk to the committee about what has been accomplished and to answer any questions that Senator Hickenlooper may have with respect to these matters.

Senator TYNDING. Senator Lodge, have you some questions?

Senator LODGE. Yes. There is one point that I think ought to be definitely elucidated for the record. Let me say I think you made a very convincing exposition of your reasons for not setting a precedent, and for what you describe as a matter of principle. I think I heard you say that these raw files had not been made available to anybody. I think I am quoting you correctly.

Mr. HOOVER. That is correct.

Senator LODGE. That prompts me to ask the question. Has the raw file not been made available to the courts in certain cases?

Mr. HOOVER. There has been one instance last year where certain very limited portions of the raw file were made available to the court in the Coplon case. Certain reports were sealed for examination by the judge in the last trial in New York City in the Gubichev and Coplon case. In the trial in the District of Columbia there was introduced into that trial certain copies of reports that had been forwarded to the Department of Justice, and abstracts had been made from them by Judith Coplon, and were found in her possession at the time we arrested her in New York City.

That again showed the evil of making certain portions of that available to the court, because in those files, just 1 or 2 reports taken out of a file of maybe 5,000 reports, there were mentioned the names of certain individuals. The president of a New England university was mentioned, and there were other very prominent people mentioned, upon whom there was cast an aspersion of subversive activities which had never been established or verified by the FBI, because we were not investigating that particular subject. Those reports were introduced in the court at the direct ruling of the judge who presided, Judge Reeves in that case, and it was over the objection of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice representatives. That is the only case I know of.

Senator LODGE. The Attorney General did not make the raw file available?

Mr. Hoover. He did not make the whole file available. He made available only the reports which Miss Coplon made reference to in the abstract slips. That occurred in the District of Columbia case. In the New York case there was made available for the judge certain reports, as you know, and sealed for the judge, for the examination of certain information obtained by wire tapping, in order that the judge might determine whether that evidence had been used to develop the case. The judge ruled it had not been.

Senator LODGE. Did you approve of those two instances?

Mr. Hoover. I did not.

Attorney General McGRATH. May I say that the decision in the Coplon case had to be made by the Attorney General as to either producing those files or dismissing the case against her, and against Mr. Hoover's recommendation, the Attorney General, who is to proceed with the case, made information from the file available under such restrictions as we could secure from the court.

Senator LODGE. Is it true that when those files were made available they were made available for public disclosure?

Mr. Hoover. The portions of the reports that were made available in New York City were sealed. Judge Ryan presided in this case—those reports were sealed, and he examined them in chambers. He did have some discussion, I think, with both the prosecuting United States attorney and defense counsel. They were not made available in open court. The particular portions were sealed for the examination of the court.

Senator LODGE. Were not parts of the raw file put in in the Washington trial?

Mr. Hoover. There were portions of the raw material that had been used in the Washington trial that were printed in the papers. On the excerpts that were made the court ruled that the whole report from which she had abstracted information had to be introduced for the information of the court.

Senator LODGE. That was the only part that was available?

Mr. Hoover. The raw files in that case I think ran to 10,000 or 12,000 pages, and all that was produced was some 26 reports, to my recollection.

Senator TYDINGS. If you will allow me to pursue one or two questions, in your prepared remarks, on page 2, I see this sentence in the middle of the second paragraph:

A file is maintained in each case because the FBI has received information allegations, or a complaint which if proven comes within the sphere of our responsibility, in pursuance of either congressional or Executive directives.

Then this:

After the investigation is completed, when indicated by Department procedure or judgment, a summary of the facts developed is furnished to the Department of Justice and to United States attorneys.

In other words, I imagine when you think you have completed a file and have made out a case that violates any of the laws of our country, that file is then sent by you automatically to the Attorney General or the United States attorneys, wherever the jurisdiction may lie, for proper action by the courts.

Mr. Hoover. Not the raw file. There is what is called a summary report made from the raw file, and there will be withheld from that report the sources and other confidential information that we do not desire to disclose.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not mean to say the raw file. What I meant to say, you say "We have completed the case; the evidence is there, and we send the summary for you to work with."

Mr. Hoover. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. You do not need to answer this unless you want to, but I can see no harm in it. I would assume that if you have not sent a file forward in any particular case, it would be for the reason that the case itself does not show such a conclusive state that you could forward it to the proper agencies for legal action.

Mr. Hoover. That would be, I would say, Senator in about 98 or 99 percent correct; for this reason I reserve the 2 percent: There are cases which we bring to conclusion in which we may have direct evidence of a violation of law, but for purposes of carrying on further inquiries to identify other members of the ring it is not forwarded at that time. I recall the days of the Duquesne case at the beginning of the last World War in New York City, where we had one or two men at the very beginning that we were certain had violated the espionage statutes. We held that case back for 18 months. When we went to trial we had 33 defendants, all of whom were convicted.

Senator TYDINGS. So that, except for the exception that you first enumerated, in each case where you feel you have gathered sufficient evidence you forward it then to the proper legal authorities for such action as is necessary.

Mr. Hoover. That is correct, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. And there would be no completed case in your files showing a breach of any of the Government's laws except for the reason you have given, that you would withhold it.

Mr. Hoover. That would be correct.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you very much, Mr. Hoover.

Senator McMAHON. There is one additional question I would like to ask.

Mr. Hoover, on the first page of your statement you say, at the bottom:

The question of opening the files of the FBI involves a grave matter of principle. In taking the position that the files of the FBI should remain inviolate, I would not, of course, presume to discuss files other than those of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

I assume that your feeling, however, would go to the files of other Government departments that contain your reports?

Mr. Hoover. We have a very definite understanding with the other governmental agencies that no reports of the FBI which are sent to them, whether it be loyalty reports or reports on security of the War, Navy, Interior, or Treasury, can be released by that agency upon request from any source without first clearing with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and if there is any question in my mind as to the propriety of it, I submit it to the Attorney General.

Senator McMAHON. That clears that up.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just one question that occurred to me that I do not think I quite follow up. I would like to ask Mr. Hoover this question. We were discussing the case of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate receiving summaries on Federal judges. Are you aware of any other instances where summaries developed by the FBI have been turned over to other committees of Congress?

Mr. Hoover. In the atomic-energy cases that has been done by reason of the very unusual, and I think very satisfactory, procedure which was worked out for having a joint committee of Congress created by Congress, having very definite responsibility for the checking of the activities of the Atomic Energy Commission. In that instance the Attorney General approved the requests that were made for making available to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy the summary reports in some of those cases. In each instance, however, they inquire of the Bureau as to whether there is any reason why this report should not be released at that particular time. There may be a current investigation going on, in which event we would not want it released.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In those cases it is my understanding in connection with the Atomic Energy Commission that the FBI claims no supervision or dominion over any files once the file that is in the Atomic Energy Commission has actually gone into the custody of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. Hoover. We do not claim full supervision over the file. We do claim a right to be advised if any portion of the file which they have received from the Federal Bureau of Investigation is to be made available.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I see.

Do you know of any other committee of Congress which has been given access to summary files developed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation other than the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. Hoover. I think in the case of the Committee on Expenditures last year or the year before, headed by Senator Ferguson, there were certain files made available to that committee at the direction of the Attorney General in connection with the Kansas City election-fraud causes. That is the only other instance I can recall that any files were made available. They have not been made available to the Appropriations Committees of either House of Congress.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Or any other committee of the House or Senate?

Mr. Hoover. So far as my knowledge goes, no.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That you know of.

Senator TYNINOS. I would like to thank you, General McGrath, and you, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, both for coming up before us at our invitation and conferring on the matter before us.

In the event the chairman may be absent for several days this week, I have designated Senator Green to act as chairman so as not to delay the work of the committee.

(Whereupon, at 5:10 p. m., a recess was taken until 10:30 a. m. of the following day, Tuesday, March 28, 1950.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1950.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER S. RES. 281,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 27, 1950, at 10:30 a. m. in room 318 Senate Office Building, Senator Theodore Francis Green, acting chairman, presiding.

Present: Senators Rydings, Green (acting chairman of the subcommittee), McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee), Wiley, and Tobey.

Senator GREEN. Come to order, please.

Is Mr. Hanson here?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Hanson, please stand. You are Haldore Hanson?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Hold up your right hand. Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you will give in this hearing before this committee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Hanson, you have asked to come here. I suppose it is in reply to certain charges that have been made against you by Senator McCarthy at the hearing on March 18.

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. You may proceed in your own way to answer what you think is relevant.

STATEMENT OF HALDORE HANSON

Mr. HANSON. I have a few character statements, sir, which I would prefer to read first, and then I will be glad to answer any questions of the committee.

Senator GREEN. Very well; proceed.

Mr. HANSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before your committee.

On March 18 Senator McCarthy testified before this committee that I had pro-Communist proclivities and that I was a man with a mission to communize the world. He even compared a book I once wrote with Hitler's Mein Kampf.

Mr. Chairman, communism is the nastiest word in the American vocabulary today. In this country the word Communist stands for an individual who is a sneak, a thief, a liar, a traitor. It makes no difference whether you qualify the word and say a man is pro-Communist or has an affinity for communism, or has pro-Communist proclivities. They all mean that he is the dirtiest, lowest type of man.

I deeply resent this attack upon my loyalty. I wish to state now, under oath, that I am not a Communist. I have never been a Communist. I have never belonged to an organization cited by the Attorney General as being a Communist-front organization. I have never knowingly associated with an espionage agent of a foreign power. I have never advocated the Communist form of government anywhere, at any time, for any people. I have never committed any act which was disloyal to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, if Senator McCarthy will say directly what he has insinuated, if he will call me a Communist in that kind of direct American English which Midwesterners are accustomed to using, and say it without the benefit of congressional immunity, I assure him that he will be called upon to answer to me in a court of justice at the earliest possible moment.

On what does Senator McCarthy base this serious charge that I have pro-Communist proclivities and that I have a mission to communize the world? Does he base these charges on evidence that I am a member of the Communist Party? Does he claim to have evidence that I have been associated with organizations which have been designated by the Attorney General as Communist fronts? Does he have any evidence that I have followed the Communist Party line in its slavish adherence to the needs of Soviet foreign policy during the past 11 years? Surely a man with a mission to communize the world would have performed some overt service for the Communist Party during this period. The reason Senator McCarthy does not have this evidence is because it does not exist. I am confident that an investigation of my political philosophy and my moral character will convince you that both compare favorably with those of any loyal American who is conscious of his duties of citizenship and is striving to live honorably in his community.

An examination of my record will disprove Senator McCarthy's accusations. That record has been examined by the Government through a comprehensive FBI investigation completed in 1948 under the President's Government-wide loyalty procedures. My activities in China as well as in the United States were covered and my writings were reviewed. Senator McCarthy produced no new facts before this committee which were not available to those investigators. In fact, he produced nothing that I hadn't put in a public library. After the FBI investigation, I was given a complete clearance by the Department of State.

In the course of these investigations, I made available to the officers concerned not only a full file of my public writings but even a personal diary which I had kept during the entire period that I was with the Chinese Communists.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly believe in the President's loyalty program, and I want to help in every possible way to maintain the public's confidence in the loyalty of its servants.

I believe that subversives can be ferreted out of the Government by the quiet, sober, thorough methods now used by the FBI. The kind of public denunciation, labeling, and hate-mongering with which we are now dealing is alien to the traditions of the United States and more closely resembles the purges of another political system.

Mr. Chairman, let me tell you what the impact was on me when my picture suddenly appeared in the newspapers under the caption "Red in State Department."

On March 13, without any warning or opportunity to present my side of the case, I was called out of a meeting in the State Department and told that Senator McCarthy had named me to this committee as one of the cases which he claimed would prove his charge that there were Communists in the State Department.

I spent the rest of that day and practically all of the following day answering queries from the press and radio.

By the third day, I acquired a false feeling of optimism that came from reading and listening to viewpoints that coincided with my own. Many editorials said Senator McCarthy had not proved his case. So did many columnists and commentators. Telegrams and letters from my personal friends told me it was ridiculous. Colleagues in the State Department told me not to worry about it. I thought that by the end of the week it would be forgotten, hoping that reasonable people who read the newspapers would know the charges were not true.

That was the point at which I got my second shock. I went to see an elderly neighbor about helping me with some fencing on a farm I own in Virginia. He is a man I have known for 5 years. He has helped me many times.

He told me that the day before he had been standing at his mail box when several other neighbors stopped by. One said, "Could you believe it, that we have had a Russian spy living in our neighborhood all these years and didn't know it."

I went on to the home of the man who has been feeding my cattle this winter. He lives about 4 miles from me. He said he had been asked by a number of persons in Leesburg, the county seat, whether he intended to keep on working for that Communist.

From a housewife in the village near my farm, Mrs. Hanson got word of a petition being circulated, calling my family undesirable and asking us to get out of the community. I have since verified this report from several sources. And, as I reported to the chairman in my request for this hearing, I understand the petition has now been withdrawn, because a lawyer advised the circulator of the petition not to continue his activities.

My latest information of this kind, which I did not state in my letter to the chairman, concerns a meeting of a country agricultural committee at Leesburgh at which a Virginia State official from Richmond, in the presence of a number of farmers, denounced the growing number of Communists in Government and named me as one of them. As far as I know, he had never heard of me until Senator McCarthy's charges.

Mr. Chairman, I do not recount these facts to appeal for sympathy. The farming community in which I live consists of no more than 50 families. It is noted for its active church and PTA. It is a good American community. I want you to know what is happening in this one community. It may be happening in other communities across the land. I learned one thing from these experiences. To many loyal Americans, who have read the assertions about Communists still in the Government, any American whose name appears in the newspapers charged with being a Communist is guilty until proved innocent. You have probably heard the story, Mr. Chairman, about the juror who was asked what his opinion was about the guilt or innocence of the defendant. He said, "Of course he's guilty. Why else would he be here?"

I deeply resent the action of a United States Senator, shielded by his congressional immunity, who makes charges without investigation, and thus starts a ground swell of hate.

Senator McCarthy recommended to this committee that it examine my background and philosophy. I would like to submit fuller information on this subject than Senator McCarthy was able to quote from the Department of State Register.

My Norwegian grandparents came to this country about 1870 and settled in the little town of Sparta, Wis., a little over 100 miles from Senator McCarthy's home town. The family home there is still occupied by Hansons. My various uncles, cousins, and nephews, including Thompsons, Olsons, and Lundquists, are scattered in many towns of Wisconsin.

My father and mother settled in the neighboring State of Minnesota, where I was born in the iron-mining town of Virginia, Minn., the second of five children. I went to public school in Duluth, Minn.

I was active in the YMCA at the age of 10. I went to YMCA summer camps and was president of the Hi-Y Club during my high-school years. From the age of 12 I was a Boy Scout. I became an Eagle Scout; I served as a Boy Scout camp counselor, and served as Scoutmaster during my first year of college. I was active in the Presbyterian Church, of which all my immediate family were members. My father was a Sunday-school superintendent.

During my senior year in high school I was awarded a summer in Europe as a result of an essay contest sponsored by a boys' magazine. The award included only my travel expenses from New York City to Europe and back to New York. I recall I went through a period of some uncertainty, when I was unable to raise the necessary travel costs to New York, but a neighbor, an architect for the United States Steel Corp., arranged for me to travel down the Great Lakes and back on one of the company's ore boats. I was then able to spend several months visiting in European homes, principally in Scandinavia.

I attended Duluth Junior College for 1 year and Carleton College at Northfield, Minn., for 3 years. By means of scholarships, a job waiting on table, and loans, I was able to finish my college education during the depression. I might say my family was trying to help three children through college at the same time. That is the reason this impressed me. I majored in history and political science. I was a debater and on the track squad. I was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

Carleton College for 40 years has maintained an affiliation with a Chinese high school, called Carleton-in-China, located in Shansi Province. I suppose it was through hearing about this school that I became interested in China. Before I decided to go there, I talked it over with an old newspaperman, Jeff Jones, of the Minneapolis Star, and with Dr. Walter Judd, who was then doing medical research at Mayo Clinic. He was on furlough from his missionary work in China. Both encouraged me. After graduation in 1934, I borrowed a small amount of money and made my way to Peiping, China.

At first I lived with a retired Chinese Minister of Finance, working as a secretary and teaching in a YMCA college. I might say that this retired official had a son who was my classmate in college. I had entertained his son in my home and it was a return courtesy. I studied Chinese. That year the Japanese Army was already holding maneuvers along the railroads east of Peiping, under an old treaty right, and there were a number of shooting incidents involving Japanese and Chinese.

My second year in Peiping I held several teaching positions and began free-lance writing for publications in Shanghai. I spent the winter and summer vacations traveling through 14 Chinese provinces and writing articles for magazines in China. During that year the Japanese Army smashed the Chinese Government authority over the customs service in North China by sending gangs of thugs to beat up the Chinese railroad guards. I wrote a number of stories on that and one magazine article.

My third year I taught English at Central China College, one of the 13 Christian colleges in China. I worked simultaneously as a "string" correspondent for the Associated Press and wrote editorials for the Hankow Herald. That was the year that Chiang Kai-shek was kidnaped, a truce was reached in the civil war, and the Chinese Communists agreed to fight against the Japanese under the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek.

I have recently looked over my writing files for the 3 years 1934 to 1937. Those were the years immediately preceding the invasion. There are some 600 pages of articles, mostly contributed to publications in China. I was preoccupied with two subjects: One was the menace of Japanese invasion; the other was the appalling social problems of China. I wrote articles about Chiang Kai-shek's military preparation, about the railroad network for defense, and about the Japanese battle over the customs. I also wrote about famines, flood control, the opium trade, the land tax, and experiments with new crops. I find I was quite interested in agriculture at that time, although I had no previous experience with farming. I find in that file no article about the Chinese Communists or communism.

Then came the war. When the invasion began on July 7, 1937, it was no surprise. Our small American community in China had witnessed years of Japanese Army arrogance, bullying, and deceit. No normal American in China in 1937 could avoid a feeling of bitterness toward Japan and an eagerness for successful Chinese resistance. That was the big political issue. It was the main topic of conversation. It was the principal story for newspapermen.

Two weeks before the war started I returned to Peiping, hoping to be around when the shooting started. For those 2 weeks I assisted a Japanese resistance magazine, and did feature writing for the Peiking Chronicle. I was out at the Marco Polo Bridge on the morning of the incident. I was assigned thereafter as a full-time correspondent of the Associated Press, and covered almost every front in China during the following year and a half.

I returned to the United States in January 1939. During that year I was married to Bernice Brown of Chicago, who had been a fellow student in college and later had served as a teacher at Carleton-in-China. We now have two children: A daughter, 4, and a son, age 1.

I rejoined the Associated Press at Chicago in 1939, on the day that Hitler invaded Poland, and served as a staff writer and editor until shortly after Pearl Harbor. During this period I studied French and German at the Berlitz School in Chicago, hoping that the AP would send me into the European war zone.

In February 1942, I entered the Government. It happened this way: The AP assigned me to cover a meeting of the American Historical Association in Chicago during the Christmas holiday season in 1941. I encountered a number of professors who had lived in China. This was about 3 weeks after Pearl Harbor. They told me that both the State Department and the Coordinator of Information were looking for people with China background. I wrote to both to find what they were offering. I found that the State Department was primarily interested in someone to recruit civilian advisers for the Chinese Government, and wanted a person with a current knowledge of conditions in west China where General Chiang Kai-shek was making his war base. I, of course, had just come back from that area approximately 3 years before. I was hired by the Department to undertake that assignment. I would like to submit, as an exhibit, a list of the jobs I have since held in the Department and the work I have done.

Senator GREEN. Do you wish to submit it now?

Mr. HANSON. I wish to put it in the record, sir.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, Senator McCarthy did read you from the State Department Biographical Register the official statement of my work in the State Department. This is an amplification indicating the kind of work involved.

Senator GREEN. Were there any discrepancies in his list?

Mr. HANSON. There is always a discrepancy, sir, between the official State Department Register, which is based upon personnel actions, and the dates under which a man actually entered on duty on a job. There is no other discrepancy—wait a minute; I will take that back. There were several minor misquotations, but they are not relevant to this particular point.

The important thing is, sir, that personnel actions requires a matter of months when a man is assigned to a new job, and I am giving you the dates on which I actually entered on duty on each job, and he was giving you the date on which the Civil Service Commission recorded that action.

Without going into details about my State Department work, I should like to correct a few false impressions given by Senator McCarthy.

In discussing my work with the Far East branch of the Public Affairs Overseas Program Staff in 1947-48, he implied that in this capacity I was responsible for political policies. That staff on which I worked was entirely concerned with the Department's far eastern information program, not with formulation of policies.

Let me add that during my 8 years in the Department I have never been assigned to the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs, which is responsible for our political policies in that area; nor have I ever held a position which involved any responsibility for such policies or in which my advice on such policies was asked.

Also, in discussing my present work with the Interim Office of Technical Cooperation and Development, Senator McCarthy quoted from the departmental announcement of the creation of this office a set of responsibilities which he said were those of my division. He was quoting, however, the responsibilities of the officer director, a position now filled by a Class 1 Foreign Service Officer, and to be filled under the new legislation now before Congress by an Administrator appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Senator McCarthy then read another set of responsibilities which in actuality are those of not one but three Assistant Secretaries of State for the various regional bureaus—that is, Assistant Secretaries Butterworth, McGehee, and Miller—and concluded, "This is all to be done by the unit to which Hanson has been assigned as Chief."

I appreciate the promotion, but my role is actually of a more humble nature.

Senator GREEN. Do you wish to deny that categorically or only by inference?

Mr. HANSON. I most emphatically do deny it directly and categorically.

Mr. Chairman, my only major private interest today, outside of the Department of State, is the management of a 270-acre cattle farm in Loudoun County, Va., which I bought in 1945. Last year I fattened 60 head of cattle and produced approximately 100 hogs. I have spent from 40 to 60 days a year during the last 4 years, including most week ends and all my vacations, working on this farm, putting up new fences, repairing buildings, and helping with the animals. I live there with my family 7 or 8 months of the year and commute to Washington.

My wife has been in the real-estate business here in Washington, between having babies, and her earnings helped to pay for a new silo and two cattle ponds at the farm.

If I have any "mission," other than trying to do a good job at my work, it is to make that a model farm which will pay back the substantial amount invested in new buildings and fences.

I should now like, Mr. Chairman, to take up some of the specific items which Senator McCarthy cited as evidence.

I take first his reference to my newspaper dispatches which were smuggled out of guerrilla territory by arrangement with Chinese Communist couriers.

Senator GREEN. It says in my copy "by arrangement with Chinese Communist generals." Is that incorrect?

Mr. HANSON. Of course the actual smuggling was done by couriers for the Chinese Communists.

Senator McCarthy neglects to state that I was with the Communist Army by assignment as a war correspondent of the Associated Press, that this was during the Japanese invasion of China; that at the time the Chinese Communists had signed a truce with Chiang Kai-shek and were fighting against the Japanese under the supreme command of Chiang Kai-shek.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Hanson, let's get this straight right there. At the time you were assigned by the Associated Press to cover the work of the Chinese Communist armies, to amplify your statement were the Chinese Communist Armies exclusively under the direction of Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Were there any Chinese Communist armies that were not under his leadership?

Mr. HANSON. Not to my knowledge.

Senator TYDINGS. Were all the Chinese Communist armies that you served with under the direction of Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

As a reporter, I found that the Chinese Communists were putting up a good fight against the Japanese, and I wrote about them as I saw them.

Now, it is grossly misleading to take objective journalistic reports about the Chinese Communists in 1938, at the time of a united front with Chiang Kai-shek against Japan, and to deduce from them my attitude toward the Chinese Communists, 11 years later, in the midst of a cold war between the democracies and world communism.

I hesitate to draw such a comparison, but Senator McCarthy could conclude with equal logic that Winston Churchill is guilty of pro-Communist proclivities going back to 1943 because back in November 1943 he said:

That monstrous juggernaut engine of German might and tyranny has been beaten and broken, outfought and outmaneuvered by Russian valor, generalship, and science.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say that so far Mr. Churchill is not one of the men we are set up to investigate.

Senator McMAHON. We had better wait and see.

Mr. HANSON. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, in my mind that since VJ-day the Chinese Communists have been guided by their joint interests with the international Communist movement.

Incidentally, Senator McCarthy stated under oath that I had spent 2 years with the Chinese Communists. Actually, as my book shows, it was 4 months.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you spend any other time than the 4 months you have related with the Chinese Communist Armies?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir. I have never associated with nor been in contact with any Chinese Communists other than what was related in my book.

Senator TYDINGS. Then the sole time you were with them was the time you were assigned to be with them by the Associated Press?

Mr. HANSON. That is correct. In 1934-37, when I was a free agent writing about China, I never visited the Communists and never wrote an article about them.

Senator TYDINGS. Were there any other writers assigned by the Associated Press or working with the Chinese Communists at that particular time?

Mr. HANSON. I can't verify this at the particular moment, sir, but throughout the 8 years of the China War every regular correspondent of the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune as well as the Associated Press visited at some time with the Chinese Communist armies.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you have an opportunity to read some of the reports that these other correspondents you have designated made for their associations?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. In what respect, if any, were yours substantially different from theirs?

Mr. HANSON. Only in that I believe I was the only correspondent who entered the area east of the Pekin-Hankow Railroad, and covered a Communist military movement that others did not have an opportunity to see.

Senator TYDINGS. Leaving aside the difference in area, were these reports substantially alike?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. HANSON. Senator McCarthy also concluded that the mere fact I was able to travel with Chinese Communist troops was evidence that I was pro-Communist. I went to Chinese Communist territory because I was ordered there by Associated Press and also because as a good newspaperman I wanted to go where the news was. It makes no more sense to say that I was pro-Communist because I spent 4 months behind the Chinese Communist lines than to say that I was pro-Japanese because I spent 11 months behind the Japanese lines.

Senator TYDINGS. When did you spend those 11 months behind the Japanese lines?

Mr. HANSON. From August 1937 to July 1938.

Senator TYDINGS. So that both the time you were behind the Communist lines for 4 months and the 11 months you were behind the Japanese lines you were on assignment from the Associated Press, and this assignment was before we were in the war?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

I might add that I also spent several months behind Chiang Kai-shek's lines.

I find that I am coming to that in my text. I was later cleared by Chiang Kai-shek's Army Intelligence for an assignment at his general staff headquarters, living in the same hotel with the staff.

If there had been anything pro-Communist about those dispatches of mine, I am sure my own AP superiors would have been the first to protest. I looked in my AP file for that period and found a letter from my New York office dated November 30, 1938. It is signed by John Evans, chief of the AP foreign service. It reads in part:

I send you my own and others' compliments on the guerrilla stories. The attached clipping shows how a half dozen of your stories were dovetailed to make two long stories in the Sunday Service. You know that McDaniel—

another AP correspondent—

had a hand in shaping up your notes and messages.

The stories were used widely and attracted such attention that Reader's Digest asked to reprint them. * * *

The page from Time magazine is another proof of general interest in the human narrative you pulled out of Interior China. The world is somewhat tired of war communiques but it welcomes a fresh view of life behind the lines and the blood and iron that carries on the war.

I received a further letter from the Associated Press Office in New York dated December 18, 1938. It was signed by the general manager, Mr. Kent Cooper. Mr. Cooper described the arrangements with Reader's Digest for publishing some of my stories on the guerrillas and concluded: "May I add my personal congratulations to you on the excellence of your work in this connection?"

Now, the book about which Senator McCarthy spoke is entitled "Humane Endeavor, the Story of the China War." It is a book of 380 pages, published in the fall of 1939 by Farrar & Rinehart.

It was my first and, so far, my only book. It was published when I was 27 years old. It is not a great book. It did not sell very well. I consoled myself at the time that its publication was almost simultaneous with Hitler's invasion of Poland, a fact which focused attention on Europe.

The book attempted to give a balanced picture of the China war. I devoted 12 chapters to my experiences with the Japanese Army, 9 chapters to my experiences with the Communist guerrillas, and 10 chapters to the military and economic effort of Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist forces.

But I don't believe the excerpts chosen by Senator McCarthy give a balanced picture of my book.

For example, Senator McCarthy used the following characterizations in an attempt to show my pro-Communist feelings. These are each a phrase pulled out of the text to describe an individual, and each of the ones I am going to read are Communist leaders, whether generals or otherwise:

General Ho Lung:

He is a living picture of Rhett Butler from the pages of Gone With the Wind.

General P'eng Teh-huai: A "most rigid disciplinarian" and "the most persistent student of world affairs."

Mao Tse-tung:

The least pretentious man in Yenan and the most admired.

And for the group of leaders:

My attitude toward Communist China's leaders was a mixture of respect for their personal integrity and a resentment of their suspiciousness. They impressed me as a group of hard-headed straight-shooting realists.

Incidentally, that was a misquotation by Senator McCarthy. What I wrote, and he can check this in the book, was "hard-headed, hard-shooting realists." There is quite a difference in the connotation of that midwestern colloquialism.

If the committee will turn to the section of the book devoted to Chiang Kai-shek's government and armies, it will find even more favorable references to Nationalist leaders.

For example, I referred to "the progress toward honest government which Chiang Kai-shek is promoting in China." And here are some other such references:

Chang Chun, governor of Chiang Kai-shek's war base:

"A reputation for integrity, diplomacy, and absolute loyalty."

Madame Chiang Kai-shek: After I had described her war orphanages I said:

Such a development is extraordinary in China where people have so long been indifferent to the welfare of the lower classes. The credit must go to the Madamissimo and her American ideas of philanthropy.

Dr. F. C. Yen, Chiang Kai-shek's Minister of Health:

As fearless a crusader against quackery as Dr. Morris Fishbein of the American Medical Association Journal.

Dr. Wong Wen-hao, Chiang Kai-shek's Director of Economics: "An able executive and an excellent judge of men. * * *" I said of him, "One of Wong's first acts in office was to insinuate into Government an able group of professors from Peiping and Tiensin. This little clique of nonpartisans included Dr. T. F. Tsiang, recent Ambassador to Russia," and, I might add here, the present representative of Chiang Kai-shek at Lake Success, bearing the brunt up there:

Dr. Hu Shih, Ambassador to the United States, and a score of scientific experts in engineering, mining, and agriculture. The scientists of this group now form a brain trust for the Ministry of Economics. * * *

Mr. Chairman, this book is a report of what I saw, what I was told, and what I recorded as accurately as I could at the time.

No author is a competent witness regarding his own book. I think it is pertinent what the newspapers and book reviewers had to say about this book at the time of its publication. Surely, if this book had been biased, some reviewer would have said that it was pro-Communist, or that "here is a man with a mission to communize the world."

I have about 100 clippings, the kind of thing that a first author generally keeps in a scrapbook in his attic. I will skip mere literary criticism and give you the comments which will help you to judge my objectivity.

The Associated Press, September 10, 1939, signed by John Selby. He is the regular AP book reviewer:

Hanson is that priceless thing, a good and objective reporter. * * * He comes to some reasonable conclusions about the fracas in the East, now overshadowed by the geographically nearer drama on the European stage. * * * The author has, first, an eye for the colorful fact. He has sympathy without sentimentality.

Turning now to the Philadelphia Inquirer, December 13, 1939, a review signed by Mr. Alexander Kendrick, whom I do not know:

All the other books on the Chinese war, and there have been many, have simply kept the seat warm for Mr. Hanson, who was the Associated Press correspondent in North China from the time of the Marco Polo bridge "Incident" in 1937 until a few months ago. Hanson's news accounts, as any copyreader knows, have been a model of unbiased understanding and vivid reporting. Now, reading his book, the first full and comprehensive account of the long war, it is easy to see why he made such an excellent job of things.

May I state, Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat embarrassing for me to go back to these old accounts and read things that are in praise of me, but I think they are equally pertinent in view of the things that have gone before.

Senator TYDINGS. We can stand it if you can.

Senator McMAHON. You can also increase your modesty by the fact that you said the book did not sell very well.

Mr. HANSON. The Herald, Durham, N. C., December 17, 1939:

Haldore Hanson's new book on the Sino-Japanese conflict does not preach any doctrines; it does not seek to warn us of any danger which might come to us out of the Chinese nightmare. His job is a piece of straight reporting, like his newspaper work for the Associated Press, and he has done it well.

The News and Courier, Charleston, S. C., January 7, 1940:

By far the best of the personal-experience stories that has come out of the China war is Humane Endeavor by Haldore Hanson. * * * Hanson, although frankly critical of Japan and sympathetic toward China, nevertheless reveals China's vast military impotency; the treachery of some grafting generals, and the lack of support given to the Chinese Communist Army—which all writers seem to agree has the best military record of any combatant unit on the Chinese side.

I think that is worth rereading, Mr. Chairman. It bears upon the earlier discussion of the writings of other correspondents. Let's just go back and reread:

Hanson, although frankly critical of Japan and sympathetic toward China, nevertheless reveals China's vast military impotency; the treachery of some grafting generals, and the lack of support given to the Chinese Communist Army—which all writers seem to agree has the best military record of any combatant unit on the Chinese side.

Now, the Chicago Tribune, December 18, 1930:

Just at the time when Russia's excursion into western imperialism is indirectly spotlighting the Chinese-Japanese stalemate, Haldore Hanson, a young war correspondent, gives us an exciting three dimensional panorama of that eastern conflict.

Hanson went to Japan and China in 1934 as a steerage passenger, found friends among the natives, ate their food, learned their language, eventually taught their children. When war came he understood the strangely dissimilar philosophies that had so much to do with shaping its course. * * * He was first to get into the guerrilla territory. Free-lance newspaper work had given him a background of information about China and Japan that lends authenticity to his reports.

That is all I shall read of those reviews.

In commenting on the book, Senator McCarthy used partial quotation from it as a basis for the statement that "this young man has a criminal record in China where he was arrested, not by the Communists, but by the anti-Communists."

Let me state for this record, I have never been arrested by anti-Communist officials of the Chinese Government. I have never been arrested by any other kind of officials of the Chinese Government. My only arrests in China were by Japanese Army military police, when I tried to investigate atrocities.

Senator McCarthy's false statement that I was arrested by anti-Communist officials is based on a careless quotation from page 349 of my book. I was talking about actions which threatened Chinese unity and might lead to a reopening of the civil war in the midst of the Japanese invasion. This passage in my book, which he read, reads as follows:

Anti-Red officials within the Government were taking every possible opportunity for indirect attacks upon the Communists. Local police made raids in a dozen cities upon book shops that handled Communist publications. Leaders of the Communist youth corps were arrested by military officers at Hankow. I myself was the victim of one of these incidents and found that local officials were the instigators.

That is what Senator McCarthy read to this committee, but the very next sentence goes on to explain what the incident was. It reads:

When I arrived in Sian from guerrilla territory and told the police that I was proceeding to the Communist headquarters at Yen-an, my American passport was seized and held for 9 days.

Let me add that after my passport was returned to me by direction of the Chinese Foreign Office, the official who seized my passport gave an official dinner in my honor attended by other high officials at Siam and he issued a public apology.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Hanson, before we leave that, in that incident where your passport was held up, you were not incarcerated, were you?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Your passport was being examined and your credentials looked into?

Mr. HANSON. That is correct; yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Were you told that you could not leave the city, or put under military or civilian guard?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Was your freedom in any way restricted?

Mr. HANSON. Wait a minute. You asked if I was put under civilian guard. There was a man who followed me during the period that I was in Siam. I will say that as a newspaperman, on every front that I have ever gone to in wartime I have been followed by an agent of somebody. I am not saying this of myself but of every newspaperman.

Senator TYDINGS. I mean, were your movements circumscribed in any way.

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Whatever the circumstances of this detention of my passport, one would expect that a United States Senator would at least read these two or three sentences twice and perhaps make inquiry about them, before publicly branding an American citizen as a criminal.

Mr. Chairman, I have noted in Senator McCarthy's statement before this committee numerous errors in quoting from documents. I am not talking about his opinions; I am talking about actual misquotations where the document was in his hands and what he said to the committee was not in the text of what he had. I mean textual misquotations. In my experiences with a press association, if a reporter made one factual error, he was required to explain the circumstances to the city editor. If the error was of a character which might be libelous, the bureau chief was required to report to New York on the circumstances. One libelous error could ruin a newspaperman. If Senator McCarthy were a newspaperman, he would almost certainly be fired for writing the story he gave this committee.

Senator McCarthy cites three other writing activities which he believes will show that I am "a man with a mission to communize the world." They are:

1. That I was a contributor to Pacific Affairs.
2. That I wrote for the magazine Amerasia.
3. That I was running a Communist magazine in Peiping when the Japanese-Chinese war broke out.

There were only a few American magazines devoted to far eastern affairs when I was writing about China. Among those few, one was Pacific Affairs, put out by the Institute of Pacific Relations, and another was Amerasia. What was more natural than that I should offer articles for sale to these magazines? I may say I was paid for them. I sold two to Pacific Affairs and two to Amerasia. The Amerasia articles were chapters from my book, adapted for magazine use.

Senator McCarthy has played up the association of these magazines with a doubtful character or two, and has played down their connection with eminently respectable American citizens. And having in this manner associated the magazines with communism, or disloyalty, or illegality, he has tied me to the same stump by pointing out that I sold articles to those magazines.

When I sold my few articles to Pacific Affairs and Amerasia they were eminently respectable journals, dealing with far eastern matters, and they carried articles by leading scholars on far eastern affairs. Pacific Affairs still does. Amerasia is dead. But that is beside the point. The point is that if we have got to the point in America where writers must assume responsibility for the political opinions, the morals, and the public activities which all of the editors or owners, or stockholders or writers that magazines may hold or later develop, then we have traveled far indeed from those basic principles upon which this country was founded. For my part, I do not believe that we have reached this point. I believe that base and loose charges of this sort, and those who prefer them, will receive the scorn and contempt of the American people that they deserve.

In connection with my Amerasia writings, Senator McCarthy stated that Philip Jaffe, the editor, was "arrested, indicted, and found guilty of having been in illegal possession of several hundred secret documents from the State, Navy, War, and other Government Department files." The arrest of Mr. Jaffe took place 6 years after I sold two articles to him.

Senator TYDINGS. Right there, Mr. Hanson, you had no connection with Mr. Jaffe in the theft of these articles, if he did steal them?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You were not charged with stealing them?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Let me say one further word about Senator McCarthy's charge that I "was running a Communist magazine in Peiping when the Japanese-Chinese war broke out." The Senator apparently is referring to a Chinese magazine devoted to resistance against Japan. The name of the magazine was Democracy. It appeared twice a month for 3 months in the spring of 1937. My name was on the board of editors for two issues and I attended one board meeting. On the board of editors were four professors from Yen-Ching University, one of the 13 Christian colleges in China, three newspaper writers, and one social welfare worker at the Peiping Union Medical College, the Rockefeller Foundation institution. Not one of these, to my knowledge, was a Communist. One that I know of, however, was a member of Chiang Kai-shek's executive committee in the Nationalist Party. The aim of the magazine was to promote a united front against Japanese invasion; and, with all due respect to Senator McCarthy, I submit that that was a laudable effort.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion may I say I am a young man. I am not a national figure. My friends and associates are not national figures. I have tried to bring the best testimonial that is at my disposal—my own story of my life and what I have stood for.

I am a loyal American and I believe that I am entitled to have this committee say so. I deeply appreciate its attention. But the corrective action of this committee cannot attain the same headlines, reach the same people, or fully counteract the suspicions and hatreds which Senator McCarthy's charges have unleashed. Congressional immunity may protect him from lawsuit, but it will not save him from moral accountability.

Senator GREEN. Have you finished?

Mr. Hanson, you are willing to answer questions of any members of the committee, I assume?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. I regret that Senator Tydings was not here at the opening. Have you any questions to ask, Senator?

Senator TYDINGS. None.

Senator GREEN. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, I have some questions.

I would like to say again in this case, just to keep the record straight, Mr. Chairman, that I do not consider any questioning of this witness, or participation here, to be in the nature of a genuine investigation and in the interest of the witness himself and in the interest of an investigation I again call attention to the fact that we do not have access to all of the information which the Government has in its possession in connection with this case. That information undoubtedly would be illuminating and might entirely change the course of any questions that I might ask.

But in view of this curtain of refusal to have access to this information that confronts us, I can only explore certain things here in order to get answers to the questions.

I have made some notes on this statement as we have gone through it.

Mr. Hanson, first, just exactly what is your job with the State Department now?

Mr. HANSON. For the past 18 months I have been executive director of the Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation. It is a committee which spends about $3,000,000 a year providing technical advisers to other governments and bringing their technicians to the United States for training. Recently, under the order read to this committee by Senator McCarthy, the work of my committee and the staff which I direct have been transferred from the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs to the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs in preparation for the point 4 program. What we are doing is a forerunner in a very small way of the types of things that are proposed under point 4.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And what will your job be under this new arrangement?

Mr. HANSON. Since the interim organization is only now charged with drawing up materials for presentation to the Congress, I cannot say for sure. As the title in the announcement indicates, "Chief of Projects Staff," I would describe it somewhat as supervisor of the activities which it has been decided to carry out. There is a division which is responsible for economic analysis and the determination of policy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you over that division?

Mr. HANSON. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have charge of that division?

Mr. HANSON. No. There is another division that supervises the transfer of funds to other agencies and sees that they carry out that job well.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you connected with that division?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you head of that division?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any other duties?

Mr. HANSON. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you prepare or develop or pass on policies that are brought up for recommendation to any other departments or the Congress?

Mr. HANSON. I am member of a staff which prepares papers for an interdepartmental committee on point 4. I have not myself had time to work on point 4.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have authority to work on point 4?

Mr. HANSON. Oh, yes, sir; yes, sir. I have worked all last year on the United Nations side of point 4. I was out of the country during most of the year attending United Nations meetings.

At the moment I am engaged more or less full time in working on the direction of our present activities abroad, and I have been consulted on the preparation of the budget of point 4, which is coming down to the Congress.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Have you described fully the complete extent of your duties or assignments, either at the present time or under the new arrangement that is now proposed, as you understand them?

Mr. HANSON. I believe so; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I want to go through the mimeographed statement that I was furnished, made by Senator McCarthy here some days ago in connection with your matter. Do you have a copy of that statement?

Mr. HANSON. I do not, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I just have the mimeographed statement. I do not have the transcript. I will read the statement that I want to ask you about. The statement is as follows, from Senator McCarthy:

Hanson's appointment is not made by the President but by the State Department and is not subject to any Senate confirmation.

Is that a correct statement?

Mr. HANSON. That is correct; yes, sir.

Is it pertinent for me to add, sir, that there is an official to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate who will perform the duties that Senator McCarthy read to this committee, but that is not I?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Will you be subordinate to that official?

Mr. HANSON. I will; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On page 5 of this mimeographed statement—I am sorry I will have to refer to that in order to identify it because I do not have the transcript and I went through this hurriedly this morning so I may have missed several things that I should give you an opportunity to answer—is an alleged quotation from your book, chapter 23, entitled "Political Utopia on Mt. Wut'ai"—I hope you will correct my Chinese pronunciation, if necessary. In describing a meeting with an American Major Carlson, here is what he had to say:

We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet.

Mao Tse-tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as "the most selfish man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living 50 years ahead of his time." And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Army, was "the prince of generals, a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee."

That conversation, I take it, did actually take place with Major Carlson?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you adopt that philosophy with regard to those Chinese generals mentioned as your own philosophy? Did you believe that to be true at that time?

Mr. HANSON. Let me say first, sir; that that is a description rather than a philosophy. I cannot speak now of what my views were in 1938 when I wrote that, but it is my recollection from my one or two meetings with Chu Teh, the military commander, that he was humble, that he was tenacious, and that he was kindly. I don't think I myself would have picked those particular phrases to describe him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I ask you this, then. Did that conversation with Major Carlson lead you to adopt, or convince you, or lead you to lean toward, that idea about these men?

Mr. HANSON. I can't say what influence it had at the time. I don't think my meeting with Carlson one night in the course of a war would greatly influence my thinking on any subject.

On page 349 he—meaning Hanson—

condemns the right-wing groups in the Chinese Government for "fighting against the democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tse-tung and the Communists."

Now, I have been unable to get a copy of your book.

Mr. HANSON. I will be glad to make one available to you, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will be glad to see it.

Senator GREEN. May I offer you a copy of the book?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You have been far more successful than I have, Senator. I would like to know the magic of your touch.

Senator GREEN. I would like to share my success with you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are always generous in sharing material things.

Let me say my failure to get your book is no criticism one way or the other. I have tried to get it and have not been able to locate one.

May I read a little further, now that I have the book? This is the beginning of the first full paragraph on page 349:

The expulsion of Wang Ch'ing-wei cleared the Chinese of any further talk about surrender, but it did not eliminate the fundamental source of friction between the Nationalists and the Communists. Right-wing groups in the Chinese Government still insist on a one-party administration. They are fighting against the democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tse-tung and the Communists. Even the minor privileges given to the Communists are strongly opposed by the old guard of the Nationalist Party.

I have read the full paragraph. I do not know what else is contained on the page.

But what I want to ask you is, Do you believe that the Communist movement in China under Mao Tse-tung is a democratic movement as we understand it?

Mr. HANSON. Let me commence first—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I say, did you believe it at that time? If you did, do you still believe it now? Say whatever you want to say about it.

Mr. HANSON. By coincidence, Senator, I have a letter in my hand which includes a copy of an article in the Manchester Guardian, published last week. The article is written by a man who lived in China at the time I did. I don't ever recall meeting him, although I know his name. His name is Michael Lindsay. He writes to the Manchester Guardian about Senator McCarthy's charges about me. He reports here something that I never heard before. It says, and I am quoting this from the Manchester Guardian:

I visited the Communist headquarters at Wut'AI in 1938 soon after Mr. Hanson had passed through, and was told that relations had become rather strained because of several heated arguments in which Mr. Hanson had maintained that the American type of democracy was greatly superior to the Communist type.

Now, let me go on and add: Mao Tse-tung was using the term "democracy" or "new democracy" as the general description of the Communist program in China. I did not put it in quotation marks; perhaps I should have. At least in 1950 as I look back perhaps I should have. It was the common term in newspapers of the day that Mao Tse-Tung was talking about a Communist type of democracy. I devoted an entire chapter in the book because I thought it was of value to American readers to find out what he meant by the term "democracy." You will find it in there, for he explained at length what his ideas of democracy are.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I refer again to this statement, and I quote it again, which as I read the paragraph—and I might get a different connotation if I get the entire chapter—has no indication that you were referring at all to the Communist attitude, but that it is purely your conclusions and your own statement. It is as follows:

They are fighting against the democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tse-tung and the Communists.

Now, the only question I am asking, and I think you are a little better source of authority about what your attitudes are than somebody who is writing for the Manchester Guardian is, did you believe at that time that the Communist movement was a democratic movement as we understand a democratic movement?

Mr. HANSON. No sir, and I think if you will look at the chapter in which I go at length into what the Chinese definition of democracy is, you will find I put it right out in the open for anybody in a public library to read. There is nothing secretive about the term "democracy" as applied to communism. I did not think then, and I do not think now, and I have quoted you one outside source who is no personal friend who said that my ideas of American democracy were different from the Communists', and I thought they were superior.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am concerned with your views as to what you believe and not what somebody else's views of what you believe may be. I want to hurry over this, because I want to give you opportunity to make a statement about these various quotations. That is my purpose.

Mr. HANSON. Could I go back for a moment, Senator, to the prepared statement that I read, in which I pointed out that the greatest danger to the defense of China was the hazard of a reopening of the civil war in the face of the Japanese invasion; that I, as most of the reviewers of my book commented, was partial to the Chinese cause. I wanted to see them win the war against Japan. In the face of that I was critical, in 1938, of those Chinese officials under Chiang Kai-shek who were hamstringing the efforts of the Chinese Communists to carry on a united front through Chiang Kai-shek.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Hanson, the language you used was "the democracy as proposed by the Communist leaders", was it not?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir. The Senator quoted me correctly.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Further on page 6 of this mimeographed statement is a statement with regard to the seizure of your passport—that episode. I quote:

I finally used the 8th Route Army radio to communicate with the Chinese Foreign Office and secured an order for the return of the passport. The man responsible for this illegal action was Gov. Chiang Ting-wen, one of the most rabid anti-Red officials in China.

I understood you to say in your original statement that the Japanese had taken this passport.

Mr. HANSON. No, sir; no, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. He said that the Chinese did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I just inquired about the matter.

I want to go through these specific references that were made in your book in this statement, because I have no other references.

There is a statement here at the bottom of page 7, and I quote from Senator McCarthy's statement:

In this connection I might say that he very frankly points out that the Communists do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side.

That statement, I take it, was made in reference to your being with the Communist forces?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have a comment on that?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir. I spent 1 full day reading my book trying to find that statement that Senator McCarthy refers to but does not quote, and I did not find it anywhere in the book. So I went through all of my magazine articles of 1939, and I finally found the quotation which a Member of the House of Representatives had quoted in 1947 out of context in making some charges against me. The statement is found in Pacific Affairs, September 1938. It says:

Since the emphasis of all propaganda is anti-Japanese—writing now about the Central Guerrilla Headquarters—

the scapegoat of China's problems is no longer the landlord but the Chinese trader, or Lan chien, a phrase applied to any Chinese who works for the Japanese Government, sells Japanese merchandise, smokes opium, or refuses to cooperate in the struggle against Japan. The guerrillas do not tolerate neutrality. A man is either for them or against them.

I was writing about the Chinese propaganda campaign in central Hopeh, in which the guerrillas were seizing the property of any Chinese landowner who had cooperated with the Japanese and had not supported the Chinese guerrillas. It had nothing whatever to do with those who were newspapermen writing about communism or nationalism or any other ism.

Senator TYDINGS. How do you designate what you have just read, so I can come back to it?

Mr. HANSON. It is a quotation from Pacific Affairs, September 1938, page 200.

Senator McMAHON. Who was that Congressman?

Mr. HANSON. Representative Busbey, of Illinois.

Senator McMAHON. He is an "ex"; isn't he?

Mr. HANSON. Yes.

Senator GREEN. How many years ago was that?

Mr. HANSON. That was in 1947.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On page 205 there is a statement—I have not found it here in the book yet—"Should this book ever fall into Communists hands, I must record that these two lonely men made excellent company during my 3 weeks in Yen-an." I am not certain of the names of these men. Do you recall the two that are referred to?

Mr. HANSON. I cannot give you the exact quotation, but I can tell you the circumstances.

The Chinese Communists had living in their political capital two foreigners. They were the only two foreigners who were permitted to live there. All others were transient newspapermen like myself. One was a German general from the First World War who went out and joined the Chinese Communists, helped to direct their civil war, and was broken in rank for mistakes that he made. He was a complete outcast in Yen-an. Nobody would talk to him. He was naturally glad if some outsider came along with whom he could have a duck dinner and talk.

The other was an American medical man whose background I do not know. He would not give us his name. I know he was from New York City. He used only a Chinese name. I believe it was Ma Hai Di; at any rate, Ma was the name under which he went.

These two men were, I should say, of no respect among the Chinese Communists, and when I was shut up in my hotel for approximately 10 days—the Chinese Communists were holding a meeting of some kind after I got to Yen-an, and, rather than let any inquisitive foreigner find out what they were doing, I was kept in my hotel room during that period. The only time I was allowed to go out was to a restaurant, where these two outcasts joined me. I found their company congenial, and I said so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Further, on page 9 in Senator McCarthy's statement is this quotation:

Some recent visitors to Yen-an have spread a report that the academics are supported by Russian rubles—a thin piece of gossip. I was told by several Chinese leaders, including Mao Tse-tung, that the largest contributors came from American sympathizers in New York.

What about that statement? Have you canvassed that?

Mr. HANSON. One of the principal news stories of that time was an attempt to track down what was the actual Russian relationship to the Chinese Communists. At the time that I wrote this book I had been on almost every front on which Chinese Communist soldiers were operating, and I had been to their political headquarters; I had been to their field headquarters, where they were directing some of the guerrilla governments. In that time I had never found a Russian.

I had never found a piece of Russian equipment. There were only American guns that were coming through Chiang Kai-shek to the Chinese Communists or the Japanese equipment that they captured, or locally manufactured Chinese weapons. I found no evidence of any outside financial support for the Chinese Communists except from Chiang Kai-shek, and this one quotation which, to my surprise, I had no prior information and no subsequent information on. Mao said they were receiving money from a group in New York. I know no more information about it than what I stated. I assume it is something quite secretive, if Communists in New York are sending money, and I think it is significant to report to the American people if Chinese Communists say they are receiving money from New York.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But you did conclude that the rumors that the academics are supported by Russian rubles were a thin piece of gossip?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir. I will say I was somewhat emotional about it, because some of the Chinese leaders who were fighting with the Communists kept up this kind of insinuation against the Communists in the midst of the Japanese invasion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any comment on the quotation from page 303, contained on page 9 of Senator McCarthy's statement, as follows: This is quoted from your book, I believe:

My attitude toward Communist China's leaders was a mixture of respect for their personal integrity and a resentment of their suspiciousness. They impressed me as a group of hard-headed, straight-shooting realists.

I know that you commented on that statement in your original statement, but I would like to amplify that just a little by asking you if you became convinced that they were earnest people, not connected with Moscow, and trying to do a humanitarian job.

Mr. HANSON. I became convinced, sir, that they were doing an honest job of fighting the Japanese, which was the main event of the period that I was writing in China.

Now let me comment on the word "integrity," which has puzzled me somewhat because it appears in this book as an adjective describing in one place a Japanese, in another place a Communist, and in a third place one of Chiang Kai-shek's officials. I assume what was in my mind was that against the background of corruption and instability and traitorism that characterized so many Chinese war lords whom Chiang Kai-shek drove out, the kind of corruption that had persisted in China for a hundred years, against that background a few officials were showing up who were honest and hard working and devoted to the national interests, and I think the Chinese Communists at the period I am writing of them here, in alliance with Chiang Kai-shek, were showing that kind of devotion to the national interest.

The correction that I made, of course, Mr. Hickenlooper, was that I had not said "straight-shooting realists," which has a certain moral applaud in it, and that is what Mr. McCarthy quoted to you, but I said "hard-shooting realists," and I am afraid some subsequent history has verified that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There is a statement at the top of page 10. I do not know what page of the book it is found on. Perhaps you have checked it. It is a quotation alleged to be from the book, as follows. This is Senator McCarthy speaking:

After an interview with Mao Tse-tung, he—referring to Hanson—states:

"I left with the feeling that he was the least pretentious man in Yenan and the most admired. He is a completely selfless man."

Is that still your opinion of Mao Tse-tung?

Mr. HANSON. I can't say, since I have not seen him since 1938, whether he is pretentious today. I can't say whether he is admired, because obviously I am talking about other people's opinions, not my own. I can't even say today whether he is a selfless man, because I haven't seen him. I think that this reflects in general an article that appeared only a week ago Sunday in the Washington Post, a long story written by three Associated Press correspondents who were asked to give a summary of the present position of Mao Tse-tung in China, and his general characteristics. I was quite surprised to see many of the qualities that I described in him 12 years ago repeated in that story. At least three correspondents stated they were writing from their own experiences as Associated Press correspondents.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you know, at the time you wrote, whether or not Mao Tse-tung and some of the other Chinese Communist leaders had been in Moscow, or were in Moscow for indoctrination in the Communist schools there?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir. I think I gave some of the first information to the American public on the number of Chinese Communists who had been to Moscow. Mao Tse-tung had not been. He made his first trip to Moscow somewhat after I was there, and I gather his recent trip to Moscow, which was in the newspapers, was an additional trip, but my book gives the information. In fact, I commented in the book, Mr. Hickenlooper, that the number of Chinese Communists who had been trained in Moscow was surprisingly small, and that the positions to which they had advanced in Chinese communism were particularly surprising because the Chinese Communist leaders distrusted most of those who had come back from Moscow. This is irrelevant to the point we were talking about, but it is all in my book.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. A statement here on page 10, and this is quoting Senator McCarthy, says:

Following is Hanson's description of how the Reds took over. I quote from page 102: "Whenever a village was occupied for the first time, the Reds arrested the landlords and tax collectors, held a public tribunal, executed a few, and intimidated the others, then redistributed the land as fairly as possible."

Did you quote that in your book with your approval of those procedures?

Mr. HANSON. The comment I would like to make is on a group of three paragraphs. Senator McCarthy took from my book a quotation about 1933, when the Chinese Communists were fighting against Chiang Kai-shek. He put it in this testimony alongside of another quotation in 1938, when I had been observing the Chinese Communists fighting the civil war, and it leaves you with the impression that those two were written in juxtaposition. They were in periods completely unrelated to each other.

Senator TRIDING. Will you mark that page, Senator Hickenlooper, so I can refer back to it again?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Page 102.

I have, I think, just two more questions, Mr. Chairman.

A quotation from the bottom of page 32 is as follows, quoting Senator McCarthy:

On page 32 of his book, Hanson justifies "The Chinese Communists chopping off the heads of landlords—all of which is true—because of hungry farmers."

Now, I think I should read these several sentences here, and you may read others if I do not cover it sufficiently. This is the first full paragraph beginning at the middle of page 32, quoting from the book:

I have often wondered whether it is possible to apply static criteria of good and evil in judging such a desperate situation. The outspoken YMCA orator, Sherwood Eddy, has horrified audiences all over the world by his description of the Chinese Communists chopping off the heads of landlords—all of which is true. But I wonder if Mr. Eddy would express the same moral indignation if he had met some of those hungry farmers in Kiangsi, the stuff that Chinese communism was made of.

I think the connotation here—and I would like to have your comment on it—was that you were in accord with the summary action of the Chinese Communists in chopping off the heads of landlords. I just want you to comment on it, is all.

Mr. HANSON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that you are entitled to draw that conclusion in one interpretation of what I wrote. I puzzled over this paragraph when I reread the book. I had not seen it for 11 years. I think I can say what I thought I was writing about then. There are situations in this world where two forces, both of them evil, collide, and it is a matter of choosing between the least of the two evils. I was expressing my doubt that there was complete moral justification on one side and complete lack of moral justification on the other.

If you do not mind, Senator, I will read a couple more sentences just beyond that which may help.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Read anything you want to read. Go ahead!

Mr. HANSON. I said:

These men were not hungry through any act of God. It was a man-made famine. There were no good years and bad years, no ups and downs. Some families had been hungry for three generations.

The reason I happened to put this section in my book, I went down to that region after Chiang Kai-shek had driven out the Communists and was conducting what he called the reconstruction of the region. I wrote some very enthusiastic articles about that reconstruction. I wrote about the health work, the schools, the efforts to reduce the interest rates on debts for the Chinese farmers, the new laws on reducing rent, all of which was getting at the one point that the Chinese farmer is interested in, which is how he can fill his rice bowl.

The Chinese farmer has no interest in communism, nationalism, democracy, patriotism, or any other ism. He is primarily interested in a desperate struggle for life and how can he fill his rice bowl, and I am not surprised that in all of the writing I have done about the Chinese farmer I should have been somewhat sympathetic with this group who were preyed upon by the Communists and who saw one thing—how to take care of the appalling situations that were causing hunger and hardship in their families.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then you were committed at that time to the theory that that was an agrarian revolution and not a revolution supported and inspired through Moscow stimulation of one kind or another?

Mr. HANSON. Senator, there was an agrarian revolution going on in China since 1860. The Communists did not invent it; the Chinese were fighting an agrarian revolution for the last 90 years. The Communists have exploited it. There is not question about that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. By the Communists, do you mean Mao Tse-tung?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He has exploited the agrarian revolution?

Mr. HANSON. I think so; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That gets me down to this situation: Do you believe that the so-called revolution, the leadership and the authority controlling it, beginning with the leadership of Mao Tse-tung, is a Communist Marxist inspired revolution, leaving out the people who follow the armies and all that, but talking about solely the leadership and the programing of this revolution? Do you believe it is a Communist Marxist revolution now, and that the leaders are Communist, Marxist, cooperators with Moscow, or do you believe that it is still an agrarian movement so far as its leadership and the planning and the control of the organization?

Mr. HANSON. Senator, I believe now it is.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is what?

Mr. HANSON. I believe now that it is directed by Moscow and the International Communist movement, and I wrote in 1938 in this book that we are speaking of the following quotation from Mao Tse-tung, which I thought was significant, because others had said that the Chinese Communists were not real Communists. Senator, there were writers in 1938 who told the American public that the Chinese Communists were not real Communists; they were just agrarian reformers. I think any fair reading of my book will show over and over again that I pointed out that he had Marxist translations of all of the principal Russian works; that they had had people trained in Moscow; they used a hammer and sickle flag which I was the first to photograph and send back to American newspapers, and so on. There is nothing concealed in this book about the Communist nature of the Chinese Communists.

I would like to read this quotation from Mao Tse-tung which bears directly on the seeming contradiction that I understand your questions are getting at:

On page 308 of the book—I am quoting Mao Tse-Tung:

The Chinese Communist Party—

he began—

has not ceased to be Communist. Our final goal is unchanged, but the forces of revolution have recently shifted, and we must alter our program accordingly. Ten years ago the chief enemy of the Chinese masses was the village landlord and money lender; in other words, the forces of feudalism * * * but gradually the danger of Japanese invasion overshadowed the evils of Chinese feudalism—and then he goes on to explain their resistance against Japan.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let me ask you this: Did you support the theory at the close of the Japanese phase of the war, and shortly after that, that there should be a coalition government in China between Chiang Kai-shek or the Kuomintang groups and the Communists, and that the Communist representatives should be taken into the Government of China?

Mr. HANSON. Senator, I have never had any position in the State Department that required me to have an opinion on the political policies toward China. In fact—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I ask you the question, not that you are official, necessarily, but you spent some time in China and wrote a book on China, and I think you know a lot about it.

Senator GREEN. He had not finished his sentence.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am just trying to get my question answered.

Senator GREEN. He was answering it and he was interrupted in the middle.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am very used to interruptions, so they don't bother me.

Mr. HANSON. I was merely going to say, Senator, that during the period that I worked on China cultural relations during the war and the Information program with China during 1937-38, I was subordinate to the policies laid down by the Secretary of State. I was told what the official political policies of the State Department were and that is what we carried out in conducting our action program.

As to the specific question you asked about 1946, I have never seen the documents which General Marshall was given. I have never seen the premises under which his mission was undertaken, and frankly I have never fully understood the assumptions that were made in undertaking that mission.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Maybe I can make my question a little clearer. I wasn't asking about General Marshall's attitude or anybody else's attitude; I was asking about your attitude and position as a result of your experience in China and your writing. What was your attitude about the matter at that time, 1946, let's say? Should, in your opinion, at that time, the Communists have been taken into a coalition government with Chiang Kai-shek's government? That is my question.

Mr. HANSON. The big question in China at the period that General Marshall's mission went to China was whether the Chinese Communists in their previous assertion that they wanted to develop China in a peaceful coalition were sincere or whether the outbreak of a sporadic civil war in 1945-46 indicated that they had already abandoned any previous statement that they had made and were ready for an all-out drive to take over China.

I don't know; I don't think anyone but those who were giving it full-time attention knows enough of the facts to judge whether it was a 50-50 chance that General Marshall was going on, or whether there was a likelihood at that time that a peaceful Chinese Government and peaceful progress could have come out of such a situation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Again may I ask, did you have any independent personal opinion as to what should have been done on that line in 1946? If so, I shall be glad to have you express it.

Mr. HANSON. I can't recall, sir. I stated in my formal statement here that since VJ-day it has been evident that the Chinese Communists have been guided in their actions by the international Communist movement.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In other words, you can't recall whether you had any position in your own mind as to what should have been done by way of a coalition government at that time, or not?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will preface this question to you, Mr. Hanson, by stating that were you here testifying on behalf of the State Department I would not ask you, in your official capacity, to express a personal opinion which might diverge from the position of the State Department.

You are here at your own request, testifying on these matters, therefore I feel justified in asking you this question, and I would like to have your personal opinion, irrespective of that fact that you are employed by the State Department now. That is, are you in agreement with the position as announced by the State Department and the Government, and what has been interpreted by many people to be an abandonment of the Nationalist Government of China so far as active support is concerned, and the apparent willingness to see all of China taken over by the Communists?

Senator McMAHON. Before that question is answered, I would like to know the purpose of it. Is that a question to test his loyalty to the Government for which he is working?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The purpose of it is to secure an answer.

Senator McMAHON. I presume so. But I would like to see some relevancy demonstrated, although I realize that it certainly is not a test that can be applied in committee procedure.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think there are many things involved. I am merely exploring Mr. Hanson's attitude toward the whole complex Chinese situation there, and I think it is very pertinent for him to express his attitude. As I said, I would not have asked him the question had he been here as an official representative of the State Department expressing State Department policy. Inasmuch as he is here at his own request, and has volunteered to testify, I feel justified in asking the question.

Senator GREEN. He is here at his own request, but he is here to refute the charges that have been made against him. That is a distinction.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So I would renew my question, Mr. Hanson.

Mr. HANSON. I do not mind answering the question. I do not think I have any comment to make that is of any expert value to this committee. I have found in my 8 years in the State Department that any policy of the State Department is based upon an enormous amount of evidence and enormous reading of documents and enormous numbers of meetings, and I have frequently found when I have not been in on those documents and those meetings and have subsequently seen the evidence on which a policy was based that I understood it where I had not previously.

I have not been concerned with China policy or with any communications from China for the past year and a half. I have seen none of the documents on which our present policy is based. Under such circumstances, toward China or toward any other region of the world

I am willing to believe that the officers of the Department who are responsible and who are being directed by the Secretary of State to assemble the evidence have done a good job. Beyond that I have no independent judgment on the matter.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In other words, your position is that you follow the policy that is laid down.

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will say now, Mr. Hanson, that one of the reasons I asked you that question is that if you are placed, either now or later, in a position of recommending policy and formulating programs, your particular attitude, which is bound to be reflected in recommendations that you would make, would become very important indeed as to our future actions and so on in the Orient. That is one of the purposes that I sought to serve in asking you that question.

Mr. HANSON. Could I comment further, Senator, that if I were later put in a position of recommending policy or advising on policy, I assume I would be given access to all of the pertinent documents, and I am sufficiently independent in judgment that I would make up my own mind at that time. At the present time that is not my responsibility. I do not have the facts and I am therefore willing to defer to those who do and who know more than I do about it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is all. Thank you, Mr. Hanson.

Senator GREEN. Senator McMahon, do you have any questions?

Senator McMAHON. The charge has been that there are 250 card-carrying Communists in the State Department; 57 on another occasion, and 81 on another occasion. I take it that you do not come within any one of those three figures?

Mr. HANSON. I was not in the 81, I am informed by the Department officers who determined who the individuals were. As to the 205 I have no way of knowing. Senator McCarthy submitted no list of 205.

Senator McMAHON. Of course, the committee does not know that either.

In other words, you are not a card-carrying Communist, and never have been.

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator McMAHON. That is all.

Senator GREEN. Senator Lodge, do you have any questions?

Senator LODGE. Mr. Hanson, from December 1941 to 1945 were you in this country all the time?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. You were working for the State Department?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. Is that the only Government agency for which you ever worked?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. You had no connection with the Army, Navy, or Air Force?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator LODGE. Do I understand you to say that you were the subject of a very thorough examination by the FBI?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. And they without any reservations whatever cleared you?

Mr. HANSON. You understand, Mr. Lodge, the FBI does not clear, but on the basis of the FBI report the State Department cleared me both for loyalty and security.

Senator LODGE. So you are cleared for top secret information?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir. It is my understanding also that I could not be in my present job if that had not been reviewed by the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board more than a year and a half ago, although I have seen no direct report of what action they took.

Senator LODGE. You believe that you have been cleared by the FBI, by the Civil Service Loyalty Board, and by the State Department itself?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir; subject to the comment I just made, that the FBI expresses no findings. It submits the full investigative report.

Senator LODGE. That is all.

All right; thank you.

Senator GREEN. Senator Tydings?

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Hanson, I would like you to turn to the paragraph in Pacific Affairs for December 1938 so we may have it in one place in the record, and read, if you have it, what Senator McCarthy took out of this paragraph, and then I would like you to read the whole paragraph, immediately thereafter. Can you do that?

Mr. HANSON. It will take me a moment to find the quotation.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read two paragraphs from the article. I had not previously looked this up. I see there are two paragraphs that are quite pertinent to this misquotation.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you quoting Senator McCarthy or your own article?

Mr. HANSON. I will quote first my own article and then what Senator McCarthy said about the article, or I can give it to you reversed, if that is the way the committee would like it.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like for you to have it reversed, because that is the way it came to the committee. Take your time and do it accurately.

Mr. HANSON. I am quoting Senator McCarthy, on page 195 of the committee record:

In this connection I might say that he—referring to Hanson—

very frankly points out that the Communists do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side. This is what Hanson himself said—they do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side.

Senator TYDINGS. That was one of the charges against you, I believe. Now read the whole paragraph as you read it from Pacific Affairs.

Mr. HANSON. The passage from Pacific Affairs, page 290—I do not see the date on it—

Senator TYDINGS. December 1938.

Mr. HANSON. Thank you. It reads as follows:

Despite the fourth purpose—revolutionary force—there is not a word about communism in the school books, magazines, posters, slogans, or speeches.

I am writing, Mr. Chairman, about a visit to the guerrilla headquarters.

At public meetings the Kuomintang flag was always displayed with a Communist hammer and sickle emblem, but I never heard communism mentioned in mass propaganda.

Naturally the political leaders, trained in the anti-Japanese academy, are familiar with the writings of Marx and Lenin, and have not abandoned their hopes for a Socialist Republic in the distant future. But there is not the slightest evidence of immediate revolutionary plans.

Since the emphasis of all propaganda is anti-Japanese, the scapegoat for China's troubles is no longer the landlord but the Chinese trader or Lan chien, a phrase applied to any Chinese who works for a Japanese Government, sells Japanese merchandise, smokes opium, or refuses to cooperate in the struggle against Japan.

And here is the sentence you wanted:

The guerrillas do not tolerate neutrality. A man is either for or against them. Even the Kuomintang representative who attended the conference of guerrilla leaders during January 10-15, 1938, blamed the 10 years of civil war upon the traders.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all right. Now stop right there. Can you locate in Senator McCarthy's testimony the reference to Major Carlson, and will you take out of the paragraph that contains his reference what Senator McCarthy said, and then read the whole paragraph? Here is the book, if you want it.

Mr. HANSON. In the transcript of the hearing before this committee, on page 189, Senator McCarthy stated:

In chapter 23, entitled "Political Utopia on Mount Wut'ai," in describing a meeting with an American Major Carlson, here is what he had to say:

"We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet. Mao Tse-Tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as 'the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living 50 years ahead of his time.' And Chu Teh"—

still quoting from Hanson—says—

"And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Army was 'the prince of generals, a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee.'"

Senator TYDINGS. Now read it in the book.

Mr. HANSON. The book states:

"We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet. Mao Tse-Tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as—

Senator TYDINGS. Now you are quoting Carlson? I want you to tell me when you have finished quoting Carlson.

Mr. HANSON (Continuing):

"the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living 50 years ahead of his time."

That is the end of the quote from Carlson, and then I continue:

And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Eighth Route Army was "the prince of generals, a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee."

Senator TYDINGS. Then both of those statements were made to you by Major Carlson?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You obviously could not have made them yourself because you had never seen these men. You were just on your way to see them.

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. So the connotation in the transcript is that you made that description, but the connotation in the book shows that you are simply quoting Major Carlson.

Senator HICKLENLOOPER. I thought I pointed that out very clearly when I read this and asked for his comment.

Senator TYDINGS. A little emphasis won't hurt on this particular thing.

Who is Major Carlson?

Mr. HANSON. Major Carlson was at that time assistant United States naval attache in China.

Senator TYDINGS. Was he a regular officer in the United States Navy?

Mr. HANSON. He was in the Marine Corps; yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Was he afterward in charge of "Carlson's Raiders," who made one of the first attacks of the war on one of the islands in the Pacific?

Mr. HANSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. This is the same man who led "Carlson's Raiders" on Makin, I believe.

So that the whole quotation is not your quotation but the quotation of Major Carlson, who was telling you of his estimation of these gentlemen, and you reported what his estimation was?

Mr. HANSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Had you at that time ever seen the two men to whom the quotation refers?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You had not?

Mr. HANSON. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all.

Senator GREEN. Are there any further questions?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just to be sure that the chairman does not understand that I was attempting to say that Mr. Hanson had said all this, I call his attention to the fact that I called attention to the Carlson quotations, and the only question I asked him was, did he later come to that opinion himself?

Senator TYDINGS. The only object I had in asking these questions is that I got the definite opinion from Senator McCarthy's testimony that there were the words of the witness, and not the words of Major Carlson, and I wanted to clear that up beyond peradventure of doubt at one place in the record, for future reference.

Senator GREEN. Are there any further questions or observations?

Senator McMAHON. I will save those.

Mr. LOUISELL. Mr. Chairman, the exhibit to which Mr. Hanson referred concerning his statement of duties with the Department of State, 1942 to date, is available.

Senator GREEN. Will you give your name and so forth for the record?

Mr. LOUISELL. David W. Louisell, counsel for Mr. Hanson.

In case the text of Mr. Hanson's letter to the chairman of this committee has not already been placed in the record, we would like also to submit that.

Senator GREEN. If there is no objection. They are received as exhibits 58 and 59.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are a local Washington attorney?

Mr. LOUISELL. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are not connected with the Government?

Mr. LOUISELL. No, sir.

Senator GREEN. Is there anything further? If not, the committee stands adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 12:35 p. m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene on Wednesday, April 5, 1950, at 10:30 a. m.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on March 28, 1950, at 10:30 a. m., in the Caucus Room, room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings, Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will come to order. Because we have asked the whole State Department Loyalty Board to be here; and, because we have asked Mr. Seth Richardson to be here at 11:30, to explain the procedures of his Board, I would like to start promptly, even though the full subcommittee has not come in, in order that these gentlemen may return to their work and Mr. Richardson may keep an engagement which he has for the forepart of the afternoon.

Before proceeding with the matter, I would like to say that this meeting this morning is called for the purpose of acquainting the committee and the public with the procedures that are in effect in passing on employees in the State Department, either for employment or after they are employed; what steps are taken from time to time and—how it is done—to check the loyalty of the employees of the State Department.

We are devoting this morning primarily to procedures, to find out whether those procedures are adequate, and whether the gentlemen who may testify have any recommendations to make, either in the form of legislation, or any other form which will make the procedures for the checking of loyalty cases of employees in the Government more effective than they are now, so that when you do testify, please keep such thought in mind for the information of the committee.

Now, I understand that it would be in the interest of orderly procedure if the first witness were to be Mr. Nicholson, who I believe is in charge of this particular operation in the State Department.

Mr. Nicholson, will you hold up your right hand.

Do you solemnly promise that all the evidence you shall give in the matter pending before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I do.

TESTIMONY OF DONALD L. NICHOLSON, CHIEF OF THE DIVISION OF SECURITY, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Senator TYDINGS. Give us first your name and occupation, as well as your age.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, my name is Donald L. Nicholson, 44 years of age, I am presently Chief of the Division of Security of the Department of State.

Senator TYDINGS. Where do you live, Mr. Nicholson?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Chevy Chase, Md.

Senator TYDINGS. How long have you had this position?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Since June 1948.

Senator TYDINGS. What did you do prior to that?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, prior to that, let me go back and give you considerable of my background——

Senator TYDINGS. Just a brief account, not extensive, so we will have some understanding of your experience.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I have an A. B. degree from Bucknell University, and an LL. B. degree from George Washington University. After graduating from George Washington, I accepted a position in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and worked with the FBI until——

Senator TYDINGS. Were you an FBI agent at one time?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. How long has it been since you left the FBI?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I left the FBI in November of 1935.

Senator TYDINGS. How long were you with the FBI?

Mr. NICHOLSON. From August of 1931 until November of 1935.

Senator TYDINGS. So you served there approximately 14 years——

Mr. NICHOLSON. No, sir; until 1935.

Senator TYDINGS. How long would that be, 4 years?

Mr. NICHOLSON. A little over 4 years.

Senator TYDINGS. And in the course of that experience, did you have occasion to get statements in reference to individuals who were under investigation by the FBI?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Oh, yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you have occasion to notice the procedures practiced by the FBI?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. I suppose from that experience, you have used a great deal of the same technique and procedure in the State Department?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. I think you have qualified yourself sufficiently so, if you have a written statement, you may proceed to give it to us.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no written statement, but I do have and would like to present the over-all program from the charts which are exhibited to my left, and photostats.

Senator TYDINGS. Before you do that, there is one other question that ought to be in the record.

How long has this particular program been in effect in the State Department?

Mr. NICHOLSON. The program I will discuss this morning was established in the Department of State in 1947.

Senator TYDINGS. What time in 1947?

Mr. NICHOLSON. In the summer months of 1947.

Senator TYDINGS. How did it come about? Was it done by legislation or otherwise?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Partially by legislation—well, not legislation, but the President's Executive Order 9835, which established the President's loyalty program.

Senator TYDINGS. So that this loyalty program was set up by Executive order of President Truman in the summer of 1947?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator TYDINGS. There was no program prior to that time, comparable to this?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, sir.

Mr. NICHOLSON. From the chart, I would like to present the loyalty and security program in the Department of State as it exists today.

The charts, as I previously stated, are to my left—the large chart. The members of the committee and of the press have copies of the photographs of the chart.

I would like to start with the chart that is exhibited now, showing the chain of command for personnel security in the Department of State. You will notice that Mr. Peurifoy, the Deputy Under Secretary—

Senator TYDINGS. Let me interrupt you long enough to say, when you discuss each one of these charts, will you say, "I hand this one to the reporter for the record," so the record will show what chart you are discussing.

Mark that first one as exhibit 60.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The first chart which has been introduced as exhibit 60 reflects at the top that the command of the security and loyalty program is under the direction of Mr. Peurifoy, who is Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration.

Directly under Mr. Peurifoy is Mr. Boykin, who is Chief Director of the Office of Consular Affairs. Within the Office of Consular Affairs there are several divisions, one of which is the Division of Security, of which I am Chief.

Senator TYDINGS. So, you come under Mr. Boykin.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. What is the title of your office?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Division of Security.

Senator TYDINGS. All right; go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Which is one of the divisions under Mr. Boykin's supervision.

As we move down the triangle to the operating staff, the Division of Security shows myself as Chief. For the purposes of this particular program, it is broken down into three branches which are significant here. First is the Investigation Branch which is headed by Travis Fletcher, who has been an investigator of security work in the Federal Government for well over 20 years; the Evaluation Branch, which is crewed by specially trained evaluators of the current fronts, Communist-front organizations, Communist Party lines, meaning and significance of membership in organizations, the changes in the Communist line, and the whole areas that go to make up an evaluation of that sort of information. That is headed by Mr. Joseph W. Emshey.

The other branch you will notice is the Foreign Service and Domestic Security Branch, which is under Mr. Merrill Blevins, and under that is our physical security, the document control in our Washington office, and foreign missions; so that these three branches are the heart, so to speak, of the loyalty security program.

Senator TYDINGS. Mark the next exhibit as B.

Mr. NICHOLSON. You will note one other point: That the large arrow on the left shows that on February 18, 1947, Secretary of State Marshall delegated to Mr. Peurifoy full authority for and responsibility to carry out the loyalty security program of the Department.

As we move then to the next chart—

Senator TYDINGS. Which is 61.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Which is exhibit 61, you will notice the chart is headed "Enforcing the President's loyalty program."

Now, this chart, we must bear in mind, applies to employees who were enrolled prior to October 1, 1947, which was the cut-off date as established by the Seth Richardson Loyalty Review Board. Those were persons who were employees of the Department of State, and that is the processing that is given them by the—

Senator TYDINGS. By the State Department Loyalty Board?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir; and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. You will notice on the left, the wedges with little round tops indicate employees who were on the rolls of the Department of State as of the effective date of October 1, 1947. As of that time, biographic sketches on all of the employees, fingerprint records of all the employees were forwarded to the FBI for a check. In processing, in the FBI, if the information came back that they had no disloyalty data on those persons, they were moved over into the cleared area. If the FBI had any information which raised any question, questions of their loyalty, the FBI conducted a full field investigation to run out all of the information pertaining to the allegations or the information which they had. That full FBI investigation then was submitted to the State Department Loyalty and Security Board.

Now, of that Board, the chairman, Mr. Conrad Snow, is here. He is here today, and will discuss this in more detail; that is, the operations of the Board.

Those cases were considered by the Board, the Loyalty and Security Board of the Department of State, which would submit to Mr. Peurifoy their recommendations for action.

Mr. Peurifoy then either followed their recommendation, either for dismissal or for clearance, and if it was for separation the employees had a right, under the Executive order, of appeal to the Secretary; and if the separation was upheld by the Secretary, had the right to appeal to the Loyalty Review Board of the Civil Service Commission.

Senator TYDINGS. That is the Board that Mr. Richardson handles?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is the Seth Richardson board.

Senator TYDINGS. All right; go on.

Mr. NICHOLSON. If the individual, after consideration by the Department of State Board, was thought to be cleared, or the recommendation was to clear him, that report and that decision is post-audited by the Seth Richardson Board of the Civil Service Commission before they go up into the large circle marked "Cleared."

That does not mean that once the employees have gone through this procedure they are cleared forevermore.

We have in our own Department, in my own division, a constant screening and checking of our employees, over and above this immediate processing, so that if we see that, or have information that, anything has gone wrong, or is going wrong, we have a complete investigative staff to run those out and thus keep a constant check on our own people.

Senator TYDINGS. So, if you get a report or a rumor or an allegation, or circumstances unusual enough, there is a recheck and it is run down until they are cleared again.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is true.

Senator TYDINGS. And in the event you find that a man on a recheck probably should be separated, he has the right to go back to the Seth Richardson Loyalty Review Board?

Mr. NICHOLSON. If on our recheck we find that information indicates that the person may be disloyal, that information will be turned over to the FBI for a complete loyalty investigation and it then would take this processing again.

Senator TYDINGS. I see.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have him elucidate a little bit more on this procedure that is followed, after the person has been cleared and he or she is in the Department.

The original clearing, we will say, takes 3 or 6 weeks, whatever it is, and then a long haul begins of work in the Department.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator LODGE. Which, of course, is the important phase of it. Nobody can do any harm while he is being considered. No damage can be done until after they are in.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator LODGE. Now exactly—do you just sit back and wait for information on people, or for people to come in and tell you things, or do you have an accurate supervision—

Mr. NICHOLSON. No, Senator. We have an accurate recheck. We do, of course, get tips and information from persons within the Department that something may be wrong; but we have an accurate progressive program on a recheck basis.

I would hesitate frankly in a public hearing to disclose all of the techniques we use.

Senator LODGE. I do not want you to do that.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But it is an accurate and active program. It is not sitting back and being smug, but on security, it is moving things, and to be sure that things are relatively safe.

Senator LODGE. Tell me as much as you can now. I realize that some of these things have to be secret. I think the more details you can give the public about what you do, about after the people are in, the more reassuring it will be.

Mr. NICHOLSON. What we do is, if persons for instance are going into a code room, or in a sensitive area, we recheck everybody that goes into the code room. As persons change jobs, we recheck the persons, if they are going into higher positions, and things of that nature. We have a constant check on the documents, so that if anybody becomes careless with documents we know about it. We investigate the individual, not only for carelessness, but as to what actually he does take.

to determine whether he does not take documents, and we check as to why he is careless with documents and jack him up on that, and quite frequently go so far as to suspend persons and reprimand them and things of that nature, when they are careless with documents.

We frequently reinvestigate on our own, when we get information from within or without the Department that persons are associated with people that do not look right, and we have a constant——

Senator LODGE. Outside of office hours?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir; and we have a constantly moving program covering all of those things.

• Senator LODGE. When they get a code, for instance——

Mr. NICHOLSON. Get one?

Senator LODGE. When someone gets a code——

Mr. NICHOLSON. No one handles codes, as such, Senator. It is not that type of an operation. We have a certain form of control over what we call top-secret documents and there are signed receipts for the documents, and it is a document control.

Senator LODGE. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Mr. Nicholson. Have you finished with exhibit 61 now? If so, take the next and call it exhibit 62.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Looking at exhibit 62, then, which is entitled "Screening of Civil-Service Applicants," we must remember that our previous chart showed the incumbents, the processing of incumbents who were on the rolls of the Department as of October 1, 1947.

Senator TYDINGS. These are for new people coming in since October 1947.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Now, we are moving into that specific area, Mr. Chairman. You will notice on the chart that the left part of the chart is entitled "Security Screening." The applicants are designated on the left, and before an applicant comes into the Department, they are completely investigated by our own investigative staff; and certain other applicants by law are investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. That applies particularly to the International Information and Education Exchange program in which there is a specific provision of Congress that they be investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation prior to appointment.

Now, after those investigations are conducted on the applicants, the reports are evaluated in the Evaluation Branch of the Division of Security. Applicants who are investigated on the strength of seeking employment with the Department, if there is anything in their record that we do not like, we disapprove them as an applicant, and there is no right of appeal because they are not employees and they are disapproved for employment in the Department.

Now, if in our security evaluation the applicant is approved for employment, he or she is then enrolled as an employee.

That is where you come then to the large black line up and down the chart.

Senator TYDINGS. And then they go through the same processing that they went through on chart 61?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator TYDINGS. From the beginning to end?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is true.

Senator TYDINGS. So that the new employee, after he has had what you might call preliminary screening and security clearance, must then go through the whole process that the old employee had to go through who was on the roll prior to October 1947?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

I would like to make this exception to that: We consider it more than a preliminary screening; it is a full-blown investigation. We know those people when we bring them in, but as you say, it is quite true that after they come in, then the President's loyalty program comes into effect, and they go through the same procedure.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes, Senator.

Senator LODGE. A good deal has been made of the distinction between checking someone for loyalty and checking someone for the question of whether or not they are a bad security risk. Some people may be perfectly loyal, but, for some reason or other, they are not good security risks.

Now, as I gathered, you endeavor to cover both aspects thoroughly; is that right?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator LODGE. You are aware of that distinction?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, indeed; yes, indeed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I notice on your chart that you go through the Department investigation and evaluation, and if the employee clears that, he is then enrolled as an employee.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then thereafter the FBI investigation takes place.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, it may not be an investigation, Senator Hickenlooper. It may be this processing under the loyalty program—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am just reading from the chart. It says "FBI full field investigation"—after he becomes an employee.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is where, in checking under the President's loyalty program, there is information that the FBI may feel is such that the loyalty investigation should be made.

Now those, I can assure you, are very, very few in number.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, in fact, unless something comes up in either your investigation or other information that you get, there is no full field FBI investigation of employees after they become employees of your Department.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true. However, they are checked under the President's loyalty program, with the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is that check made before they become employees, or afterward?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is made afterward.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The point I am trying to reach is this: As to why it is not in the interest of efficiency and proper operation to have them checked first, before they actually acquire the rights of employees? There is a difference between an employee and an applicant, in my judgment.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I quite agree with you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And you can either disapprove or reject employment of an applicant, much easier than you can discharge a person after he becomes an employee, because then the rights of appeal and degree of proof probably changes a little bit, and your latitude is cut down considerably, is it not?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I quite agree.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And it just occurs to me that even though the cases may be comparatively few, that even the file check with the FBI, and others should be done before the applicant actually ripens into an employee with certain rights surrounding him.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, the reason for that is that there are certain administrative difficulties involved in it. The FBI may, in making a check, desire to have a fingerprint record. Now, it is very difficult to get a fingerprint record before the employee reports for duty, or a fingerprint chart as the applicants are scattered all over the United States; and it is quite difficult to get fingerprint charts.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, do you do this, Mr. Nicholson—I realize that there may be some very pertinent reasons why it is impractical to have a full field investigation by the FBI of every applicant for a job, many applicants, there are no places for them, and it is not a question of their security risks, or their loyalty, you just do not need them—but is there any reason, or do you, I should say, ask for an FBI file check on applicants for jobs during the course of your consideration and before they become employees?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No, we do not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would that not probably be helpful and might, in a few cases turn up things—

Mr. NICHOLSON. It may be, but it would require then a double check of the FBI, after we obtain the fingerprints, and under our investigations, we are quite sure of people when we enroll them as employees.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Mr. Nicholson.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The chart on the screening of civil-service applicants, as Senator Hickenlooper pointed out, there may be in very rare cases an FBI check—

Senator TYDINGS. Let us clear that up a little. I think it will save time.

After a man is cleared through security screening and becomes an employee, you get his biographic sketch and his fingerprints and then you have an FBI record check.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. If that record check, or any other information shows that this man should receive further screening, then the FBI makes a full field investigation; but there is a record check by the FBI in every case, regardless.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The other distinction then, on this, is that in the event a full FBI investigation is made, that investigation goes to the Civil Service Commission Regional Loyalty Board, rather than to the Department of State loyalty and security board, for a determination of the case; and, after their determination, of course, it is postaudited by the Seth Richardson board.

Senator TYDINGS. So that in the case where there is an FBI full field investigation, the Civil Service Commission Loyalty Board, that is, the Regional Board, goes over that and makes a finding?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. But that finding is not permanent until the Central Board here in Washington also goes over the matter and approves or disapproves it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Then, the next chart, exhibit 63, is entitled "Screening Non-Civil Service and Foreign Service Applicants."

On this, the distinction is made between civil service employees and/or applicants for civil service positions, and non-civil-service applicants. The procedure up to the black center line is exactly the same, where we do our own investigation and screening.

Senator TYDINGS. We are on chart 63 now, are we not?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Mark that, so we do not get confused.

What you are saying now applies to chart 63.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right, non-civil-service.

Now, since these individuals are not civil service employees, not under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, in the event the FBI should conduct a full field investigation after they are on the rolls, that report goes to the State Department loyalty and security board for a determination, rather than to the Civil Service Regional Loyalty Board. That is our own responsibility, because these people are non-civil-service people, they are not under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission.

However, after our board makes the determination as to—

Senator TYDINGS. Does that go up as high as Ambassadors and Ministers?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. It would take all the Foreign Service people from Ambassadors down to—how low, clerks?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Down to the clerks.

Senator TYDINGS. In foreign embassies?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. After Mr. Peurifoy makes the final decision, if the decision is to separate the individual, the individual has the right of appeal to the Secretary, and to the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board because it is still a loyalty case, even though they are not under the civil service regulations then.

If the decision is to clear an individual, that decision is postaudited by the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board, or the Seth Richardson board.

Senator TYDINGS. So that in cases where that is called into question, and the individual is deemed unsafe as a risk, let us say, he has the right of a postaudit examination by the Seth Richardson appeals board?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. So, the procedure after it gets going, is pretty much the same?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. There are other various technical distinctions on the different types of people.

Senator TYDINGS. Mark the next exhibit 64.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The Department investigation preliminary to hiring a person, I think you said a moment ago, you believe is quite thorough and you are pretty well satisfied when people become an employee.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, may I ask you if the only reason for the FBI getting into this at any time later, is because of the legal requirements? In other words, if it were not for the legal requirement, would you consider your own investigative method sufficient?

Mr. NICHOLSON. If it was not for the President's loyalty order?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes; I think we would.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You would not have the FBI investigate them at all, you would use your own investigative agency?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

However, we would in any event check with the FBI at some time, either before or after employment to be sure we had their information.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Again, the only point I am getting to is—it would seem to me that before these people acquire the rights of employees, and there are very definite rights that employees get when they become employees, it would seem to me it would be wise to have at least a file check of the FBI on them before they finally are hired, rather than to wait until they are hired and then have the file check. That appeals to me at the moment, at least.

Mr. NICHOLSON. If it was not for administrative difficulties, it would be worth while; although, as I say, the instances where we do not know about something and the FBI does, are very, very few.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It would seem to me the administrative difficulties would be no greater prior to the employment of the individual, than afterward.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Oh, yes, because the individuals, prior to employment, prior to reporting for duty, are scattered all over the United States; but, when they report for duty, they come, practically all, to Washington where we can get their fingerprints and perform all the administrative functions.

Senator TYDINGS. One question more. How many of these non-civil-service and Foreign Service applicants have to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I am sorry, Senator, I cannot answer that.

Senator TYDINGS. There would be Ambassadors, Ministers, consular agents, consuls, and all the, you might call it, higher echelons of management and so on in the foreign field, that have to come to the Senate, would they not, as a broad proposition?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. So, in addition to what everybody may do in this particular field, at least in the higher echelons they would also have to go before a Senate committee who could ask any questions they desired.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is quite true.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you. Proceed, Mr. Nicholson.

Mr. NICHOLSON. We will move on to the next chart, which we will identify as exhibit 64, which is a chart showing the technique for eliminating security risks.

We have, as I have pointed out, this constant checking of our employees. We obtain information by telephone, from letters, from persons within the Department, from persons outside of the Department, and on the basis of that information conduct investigations by our own investigative staff. That information goes to the Evaluation Branch, where it is evaluated. It may be cleared there. If it indicates that it is malicious gossip, that sort of complaint, we close it and drop it there. If it looks like there may be something to it, it is submitted to our State Department loyalty and security board for their determination.

Senator TYDINGS. What chart are you on now?

Mr. NICHOLSON. This is 64, "Eliminating Security Risks."

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I might point out also that in this process, if we at any time obtain information tending to indicate that there may be information which would come under the President's loyalty program, we would discontinue in the Department our investigation, and turn the information we have over to the FBI to conduct the loyalty investigation under the President's loyalty program.

Then, any separation under this, of course, since it is not internal, within-the-Department operation, the separation is subject to appeal only to the Secretary of State, and there is no outside appeal such as we have in the loyalty cases.

The next chart, which we will mark as exhibit 65, is a chart entitled "Composition of Loyalty and Security Board."

Gen. Conrad Snow, who is here with us today, will go into more detail on this subject.

I would like to point out just a few of the high lights on it.

At the consideration of a case, there is selected from the panel, three members. They are designated, with Conrad Snow in the middle, in the background of the picture; there is the executive secretary of the board, or legal officer of the board; the court reporter; the employee, who may be represented by counsel; and one witness in the room at a time who may testify either for or against the witness or the employee; and Conrad Snow, I am sure, will discuss in more detail the operations.

Senator TYDINGS. Are the examinations held under oath when the employee testifies, or does he testify without being sworn?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Could I check on that?

General SNOW. Under oath.

Senator TYDINGS. Under oath?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Under oath.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, go ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. We will move then, to the next exhibit, which will be marked "66."

Senator TYDINGS. Exhibit 66.

Mr. NICHOLSON. This is another composite chart showing all the action within the Department under the loyalty and security program.

You will notice on the left the "reports from Security Division," which may be our own reports, or they may be FBI reports, and which go into the loyalty and security board, which is represented by three individuals. The clearance then is a recommended action to Mr. Puerifoy. If it is a loyalty case, the post audit follows by the Seth Richardson Board and the individual employee moves into the cleared category.

Now, the board has, if they prefer charges against the individual, the individual has a right to reply in writing or request a hearing, which we depict here, with the employee indicated as such, being represented by counsel, and calling their own witnesses, testifying in their own behalf and introducing exhibits, and having the right to obtain and correct a copy of the transcript.

The recommendation from the board then goes to Mr. Peurifoy. If it is a recommendation to clear, it is postaudited by the Loyalty Review Board, by the Civil Service Commission; if it is a security recommendation for termination or separation, the employee has a right to appeal to the Secretary; if it is a termination under the law of the program, the employee has the right, subject to appeal to the Secretary, if the decision to separate is upheld, the employee has a right to appear and be heard by the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board, or the Seth Richardson board.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, Mr. Nicholson; and while we may have some questions, I do not want to cut anybody off, I will say that we are going to hear next from the Loyalty Board itself, so any questions we might ask Mr. Nicholson ought to be predicated on the fact that we will soon hear the Loyalty Board.

Senator McMAHON. I do have a couple of questions, if I may ask them now, Senator Tydings.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McMAHON. You would be what is termed "Chief Investigator"?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Have you done your duty?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir; I feel that I have.

Senator McMAHON. Are there 205 card-carrying Communists in the State Department?

Mr. NICHOLSON. There are not.

Senator McMAHON. Are there any card-carrying Communists in the State Department, as far as you know?

Mr. NICHOLSON. As far as we know, there is no card-carrying Communist in the State Department. If there were, they would be terminated by noon.

Senator McMAHON. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Take your seat again, please, Mr. Nicholson.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Nicholson, since this investigative procedure started, I believe, in 1947—

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right; yes, sir. We had a small investigative staff prior to that, Senator Hickenlooper, but the program, as a composite unit, started in 1947.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You investigate or pass on the questions of loyalty or security risks of persons that we send as our representatives to the United Nations; or do you?

Mr. NICHOLSON. To the United Nations?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I am not sure I quite understand your question. You mean, to the international organization?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Either to the international organization, or that represents the United States in international organizations of the United Nations.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Those persons who represent the United States, we do check; those persons who are employed by the international organization, we do not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is, those American citizens who are employed by the United Nations, itself, you do not check?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know whether they are checked by any agency of our Government?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No, sir; I am sorry; I do not know that answer, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, when you check individuals who represent the United States in organizations attached to the United Nations, what kind of a check do you give there?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, generally, since they are not becoming employees, we do not conduct as complete an investigation as we do for an employee. We round up, in those cases, all of the information within the files of the Government, and make inquiries if need be, as an investigative technique.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You have had considerable experience, Mr. Nicholson, in investigative procedures, I think; and I would like to ask if it appeared in the file of an individual that this individual had at various times belonged to 15 or 25 organizations that had been at least later, or at some time during their activity, declared to be a Communist-front or subversive organization by an official body such as the House Un-American Activities Committee, or the California investigative committee, or the New York investigation, or investigations of that kind—would that raise any question in your mind indicating that they should be looked into a little bit for an explanation?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I think what we would certainly have to look at is the nature of the association with the organizations, the date of the association, the participation in the activities of the association, and the complexion really of the association at the time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How would you make such an investigation, roughly? What would be your general procedure?

Mr. NICHOLSON. By and large, it would be a research situation, to determine the history of the organization, the internal struggles within the organization—it is quite common that a lot of the organizations were started as good organizations, and became infiltrated, some of them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Isn't that the characteristic of the usual Communist-front organization?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. They started with the name of a great many people, who were perfectly loyal, and became captured by the Communists?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right, and, of course, there are those organizations where there were attempts to infiltrate, and which have had serious internal struggles.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In your investigation, under such circumstances where an individual was reputed to be a member, or there was evidence that this individual had been a member of a very substantial number of these organizations from time to time, would you consider it a part of good investigative procedure to talk to the individual involved about it, to get that individual's reactions?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Not necessarily. I think it would be a matter of going back and getting the background of the association with the organizations, the tenor of the organization at the time of the association, and the participation of the individual in the association at the time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would there be any better source of getting an understanding of that, than to talk to the individual himself, about it, and get his views and explanation as to why he permitted himself to be associated with these groups?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, if the groups—or, if the association was before an infiltration or before the group was taken over, the association really would not mean a great deal.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, how could you—I think that that is a perfectly sound statement, but how could you tell the individual was not still associated with the organization, after it had been taken over—better than ask the individual himself?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, by and large, I think the investigation would disclose present activities, or activities over the past years of the individual.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, I take it you feel it would not be important to at least call the individual in and say, "What is the situation with regard to these memberships?"

Mr. NICHOLSON. I think it would depend entirely, Senator, on—as I have attempted to point out—the time factor in it, the nature of the organization, and the time of the membership, or the sponsoring of the organization; and, it is hard, really, to generalize on any particular situation of circumstances, or any particular set of circumstances. I think you have to consider each individual case on its individual merits.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It would seem to me to be utterly routine and essential that if some question is cast about an individual because of repeated memberships in a subversive or allegedly subversive organization or organizations, that you would call the individual in, or go to see the individual and say, "What about this? Here is what this shows. What do you have to say about it?"

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, I hate to be repetitive, but I think we still go back to—when did it happen, what was the nature of it at the time, what has been the individual's activity since that time, and—if someone was, for instance, a member of the Washington Book Shop many years ago, and was a member in order to buy books and records at a discount, and discontinued any activity, I don't think it will be necessary, if we knew those facts, to talk with the individual to determine why he was a member of the Washington Book Shop, or to determine whether he has or has not been active in it or a member of it since 1940, or something, because our investigation shows that—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That, of course, grants that your investigation gives you conclusive proof that those facts exist, but I am not going to continue this any longer, because we would get the same answers and I will make the same statements, but it would seem to me that it would be one of the first things that any investigator would do, if circumstances of that kind came up, for a person under consideration—to lay the facts down very frankly before the individual and say, "You know best whether you have been involved in that, or whether you have been active. What are the circumstances?"

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, I think it depends on how much you know about it, what is the nature, the timing, and a lot of elements really that go into that, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The purpose of my question is to find out how much investigative work you do in original sources to actually find out, whether you rely on collateral information or whether you go directly to the person involved, which would seem to me to be the direct and best way.

Mr. NICHOLSON. We do both, depending on the circumstances of the case.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, since 1947, when this program was set up, how many people have been separated from the State Department on the basis of disloyalty, we will say?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I do not have any statistics with me on that, on the loyalty statistics. I am sure that General Snow has them.

I can say this, and this is entirely from memory and I think this figure has been given to Congress before—that since January 1, 1947, we have separated 202 individuals from the Department of State on whom there was some question of security or loyalty. That does not mean that we knew they were disloyal, or knew they were security risks. They may have left before it was resolved, they may have been under investigation at the time they resigned, but there were 202, if I remember, relying on memory, and I think that is pretty accurate—there were 202 who left the Department where there was some question of their security at the time they left.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How long have you headed the Security Department that you now head?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Since June 1948.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. During that time, had you, in your capacity as Director, or head of the Department, made findings recommending that various individuals are bad security risks, and that they should be separated?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well; no, sir. We don't make—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will withdraw that. I should not have said that. I don't know what your authority is but have you made recommendations that in your judgment and in that of your Department individuals are bad security risks?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Recommendations, as such, we do not make in that nature; because our procedure is such that where there is information concerning an individual who is an employee, that information is submitted to the Loyalty and Security Board, and they make their recommendation to Mr. Peurifoy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that your Department makes no recommendations at all in that connection?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, that is quite true, with this exception: That on applicants we do. On applicants we make our own decision entirely.

On employees, they are submitted to the Loyalty and Security Board for their recommendation, to Mr. Peurifoy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, do you make any recommendations that a person should be cleared?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You do not make recommendations that a person should not be cleared; is that correct?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Now, wait—on employees, if we conduct a security investigation, we either clear that individual on the basis of that investigation as being unfounded, or if we feel that there may be something to it, and the employee possibly should be heard on it, we then send it to the Loyalty and Security Board for their handling.

Now, on loyalty cases entirely, those go to the Loyalty and Security Board, and those are FBI investigations that go to the Loyalty and Security Board, so really it goes in channels to the Loyalty and Security Board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When the information on an individual has come to its final conclusion in your Department, you either clear the individual or recommend clearance, or you transfer the file with that recommendation to the—

Mr. NICHOLSON. Loyalty and Security Board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Loyalty and Security Board?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, then, in transferring that file without recommendation for clearance to the Loyalty and Security Board, do you say in effect—there may be reason why this person might be a security risk, therefore we are passing it on to you?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No; we say that there are certain unresolved questions in this that we feel you, as the Loyalty and Security Board, as a judicious, well-founded, and competent body should look at and make your recommendation to Mr. Peurifoy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How many individuals, if you recall, have, let us say, civil-service applicants, who had been actually enrolled as employees after your investigation, have been later discharged either on the basis of bad security risk, after such enrollment as employees—within your experience?

Mr. NICHOLSON. You mean under this program, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes. In other words, after you have investigated them and put them on as employees, then they go through the Loyalty investigation program, and how many have been separated after that point?

Mr. NICHOLSON. To my knowledge, there have been none. I am sure there have not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Who, in the Department, in connection with the investigation of these employees, who does make recommendations, or are any made? Does the Loyalty and Security Board make recommendations?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Oh, yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And those recommendations go to—

Mr. NICHOLSON. To Mr. Peurifoy.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Go to Mr. Peurifoy?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And then, after Mr. Peurifoy's decision, if it is adverse to the employee, that employee can appeal to the Secretary; is that correct?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct, and if it is under the President's loyalty program, in other words, if it is a disloyal decision, he has a right to appeal also to the Seth Richardson Board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. As a matter of fact, in your specific Department you have no authority to deny clearance to an individual?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Or to an applicant?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I mean, not deny clearance, because if you don't grant it, you would be in effect denying it temporarily, but you can grant clearance; is that right?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Your Department has authority to grant the clearance if the individual is found worthy of it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, if something is developed in the information that you have at hand which prevents you in your judgment from giving clearance, then I understand that you do not make any recommendation that clearance be denied, you merely pass the file on; is that right?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. For the evaluation of the Loyalty and Security Clearance Board?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is all for the moment, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. When was the last time that someone was separated from the service as a result of your procedures?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Speaking, I take it, Senator Lodge, of an employee?

Senator LODGE. Who else would there be?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I prefer to let General Snow answer that. I am not sure of the date on it.

Senator LODGE. Roughly, was it a month ago, 2 months ago, 3 months ago?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I think in about December 1949.

General SNOW. I don't have the date of separation from the service, if that is the question.

Senator LODGE. I was wondering what was the last time someone was separated. I think you can probably get that.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I don't have the dates.

Senator LODGE. You can get that, can you not?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Oh, yes.

Senator LODGE. How many people have been processed altogether by your procedure?

Mr. NICHOLSON. The employees?

Senator LODGE. Who else is there?

Mr. NICHOLSON. There are the applicants.

There is a procedure in regard to the applicants, too, Senator.

Senator LODGE. Prospective employees?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, there have been, all told, roughly, about 17,000 employees processed. We investigate around 5,000 applicants a year, so that would be 3 years, well, 2 years actually, so it would, in the whole program, be roughly 27,000 persons.

Senator LODGE. Now, you say that 202 people who were employees have been separated?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, they left the Department, Senator.

Senator LODGE. They are not there any more?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is correct.

Senator LODGE. Of the five-thousand-odd applicants that you have a year, how many of them get in?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, that is a rather hard question, because they are not all disapproved for security reasons. Some are disapproved for character and suitability reasons by the personnel people; some of them take other jobs, but it runs that we appoint roughly one-half of the persons we investigate.

Senator LODGE. You appoint about half of them?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right.

That does not mean that the other half are bad people, because some may have gotten jobs some place else, or a number of things could enter into the picture.

Senator LODGE. I think it will be very useful to have a box score, an accurate box score furnished for the record, of what has been done. It has been going on about 3 years, with this procedure.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes.

Senator LODGE. I would like to know what you have accomplished, how many you have processed, how many you have let in, how many you have kept out, how many have been separated, and for what reasons. I would like to have that.

Now, the State Department has contact with people, on a brief basis, people coming in to lecture, coming in as per diem consultants or Advisory Board members. How do you process those people?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Generally, we do not, because they come in, and they are not employees. They come to lecture, and they do not handle our documents, do not handle classified information—

Senator LODGE. There is no reason for it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. There is no reason for it.

If they are coming in to work, or to have access to documents—yes; we check them.

Senator LODGE. If they are going to have access to papers?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Access to classified documents, or coming into work, then we do.

Senator LODGE. And the procedures are sufficiently rigid so that someone coming in as a consultant or a lecturer could not informally get access to documents?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No.

Senator LODGE. Unless he had been cleared?

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is right, and that is through the physical control of documents as distinguished from the person himself.

Senator LODGE. That is formal?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Oh, yes! indeed.

Senator LODGE. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, Mr. Nicholson.

I will ask General Snow now if he will take the stand.

Before you do, General, will you raise your right hand, please?

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in this matter pending before the committee shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

General SNOW. I do.

STATEMENT OF GEN. CONRAD E. SNOW, CHAIRMAN, LOYALTY AND SECURITY BOARD, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Senator TYDINGS. State your name, age, and place of residence.

General SNOW. Conrad E. Snow, 60, and my place of residence is Arlington, Va.

Senator TYDINGS. Where are you from, General?

General SNOW. Rochester, N. H.

Senator TYDINGS. How do you happen to be called "General?"

General SNOW. Because I was made so during the last war.

Senator TYDINGS. You served in the last war and earned that rank.

General SNOW. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. How long have you been connected with the State Department?

General SNOW. Since August of 1946.

Senator TYDINGS. What was your first job?

General SNOW. In the State Department?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

General SNOW. I have been continuously legal assistant to the Legal Adviser, or Legal Service Office of the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. How long did you stay there, and what job did you go to?

General SNOW. I have been in that position ever since 1946.

Senator TYDINGS. The work you are about to describe is sort of extracurricular to the work you originally undertook when you originally came in the State Department?

General SNOW. Entirely extracurricular.

Senator TYDINGS. When did you start in your position as the Chairman of the State Department Loyalty Board?

General SNOW. In 1947.

Senator TYDINGS. At the instigation of the program?

General SNOW. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. You have been with it ever since?

General SNOW. Yes, sir; continuously.

Senator TYDINGS. You have with you this morning the whole Board.

Before you testify, some of these gentlemen might want to return to their work, but I wanted the members of the committee to see the Board, and I wonder if you would introduce each and have them stand up as you introduce them, and they can take their seats again—before you start to testify.

General SNOW. It will be a pleasure.

Mr. Theodore Achilles, Mr. Willard F. Barber, John O. Bell, George Hayden Raynor, Mr. David A. Robertson, Mr. John W. Sipes, Mr. William P. Snow; and Mr. Arthur G. Stevens, Mr. Chairman, is in Europe.

I have one more introduction I would like to make. I would like to introduce Mr. Allen B. Moreland, the Legal Officer of the Board.

(Those named arose briefly, and were reseated in the hearing room.)

Senator TYDINGS. Now, all these gentlemen are employees of the State Department, are they not?

General SNOW. They are, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. And they, like yourself, have other duties besides this duty they are engaged on today?

General SNOW. That is right, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. And they have been designated from their respective positions to assemble at your call to proceed with whatever matter is before the Loyalty Board?

General SNOW. Right, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. How long have these employees been in the State Department—for a long while, as a general rule?

General SNOW. Yes, sir.

I have with me some biographical notes which I would like to make a part of this record here today.

Senator TYDINGS. For all of them?

General SNOW. For all of them.

Senator TYDINGS. That will be inserted in the record as exhibit 67, and that will save a lot of questioning, because it will be there.

General, I think you have qualified yourself pretty well.

Now, go ahead with any statement you care to make.

General SNOW. Thank you, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. And I will ask Mr. Nicholson, if he has not yet left, to remain in case we need him for some additional questioning.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I will be glad to, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, proceed, General.

General SNOW. Mr. Chairman, the Loyalty Security Board of the Department of State of which I am chairman is the organ of the Department to which are referred all reports from the FBI of full field investigations of Department employees, for determination as to loyalty and security risk. Its decisions are post-audited by the Loyalty Review Board of the Civil Service Commission, of which Mr. Seth W. Richardson is chairman, and to that Review Board go appeals from adverse decisions of the Loyalty Security Board. Both Boards are part of the President's loyalty program, initiated on March 21, 1947, by Executive Order 9835.

The purpose of Executive Order 9835, was stated to be: To assure (a) that persons employed in the Federal service are of complete and unswerving loyalty to the United States; (b) that the United States afford maximum protection against infiltration of disloyal persons into the ranks of its employees; and, at the same time, (c) that there be given equal protection to the loyal employees of the United States from unfounded accusations of disloyalty.

The Executive order itself stated the standard for the removal from employment of an employee on grounds relating to loyalty, which must be applied by both Boards. It is—that, on all the evidence, reasonable grounds exist for belief that the person involved is disloyal to the Government of the United States.

The Executive order sets forth various activities and associations, which, if present, may be considered in connection with the determination of disloyalty. They are:

(a) Sabotage or espionage—or knowingly associating with spies or saboteurs;

(b) Treason or sedition—or advocacy thereof;

(c) Advocacy of revolution, or of force or violence to alter the constitutional form of government of the United States;

(d) Intentional unauthorized disclosure of documents or information of a confidential or nonpublic character obtained as a result of employment by the Government of the United States;

(e) Performance of duties, or otherwise acting so as to serve the interests of another government in preference to the interests of the United States;

(f) Membership in, affiliation with, or sympathetic association with any organization or group of persons, which has been designated by the Attorney General as totalitarian, Fascist, Communist, or subversive, or as having adopted a policy of advocating or approving violence, either to deny to other persons their rights under the Constitution, or to seek to alter the form of government of the United States.

Some of these activities, were we to find them would by their very definition necessarily involve disloyalty to the United States—as to wit espionage, treason, sedition, revolution. Some of the associations, on the other hand, are only evidence on the issue of disloyalty. The President, for instance, in a statement to the press of November 14, 1947, said with reference to the Attorney General's list: "Membership in an organization is simply one piece of evidence which may or may not be helpful in arriving at a conclusion as to the action which is to be taken in a particular case." This was reaffirmed by the Attorney General, who added that: "Guilt by association has never been one of the principles of American jurisprudence."

What the President said, however, and what the Attorney General said, is not applicable to membership in the Communist Party. Under section 9A of the Hatch Act, of August 21, 1939, it is unlawful for any Federal employee to have membership in any organization advocating the overthrow of the constitutional form of Government of the United States. On February 5, 1943, under Executive Order 9800, 4 years before Executive Order 9835, the Department of Justice disseminated among Government agencies a list of organizations which were subversive under the terms of the Hatch Act. This list included the Communist Party of the U. S. A. This was reaffirmed by the Attorney General on May 27, 1948. Accordingly, were the Loyalty Security Board to find in the Department of State a member of the Communist Party, his membership would be not merely evidence of disloyalty; the dismissal of that employee would be mandatory.

Acting under Executive Order 9835, after appropriate investigation, the Attorney General, on November 24, 1947, transmitted to the Loyalty Review Board a list of organizations which was disseminated to the Department on December 4, 1947. An additional list was disseminated on May 28, 1948; and on September 21, 1948, the Attorney General furnished a consolidated list which contained the names of all the organizations previously designated, and segregated into categories as totalitarian, Fascist, Communist, subversive, advocating force or violence to deny others their constitutional rights, or seeking to alter the form of Government of the United States by unconstitutional means. Those lists include all the so-called front organizations, generally designed to trap the unwary liberal-minded individual, and not all by any means either infiltrated or controlled by Communists from the outset of their existence. I mention this particularly because in considering membership in, affiliation with, or sympathetic association with such organizations the boards have to take judicial notice of the fact that the characterization of these organizations by the Attorney General was first publicized to the employees of the Department, in some cases on November 24, 1947, in other cases on May 28, 1948. Membership or other association with these organizations in the late thirties and early forties has therefore to be considered with some circumspection as evidence of disloyalty or of security risk.

The problem of the State Department in implementing the President's loyalty program was facilitated by the fact that the Secretary of State has been granted by Congress, in the so-called McCarran rider of the Seventy-ninth Congress, and repeatedly in subsequent appropriation acts, the power in his absolute discretion to terminate employment whenever he shall deem such determination necessary or advisable in the interest of the United States. This power of summary dismissal is the basis of the right of the Secretary to dismiss on account of security risk, without having to resort to a determination, that on all the evidence reasonable grounds exist for belief that the employee is disloyal.

Acting in accordance with this power of summary dismissal, and 5 months before the organization of the Loyalty Review Board, the Secretary of State, General Marshall, on July 9, 1947, appointed a Personnel Security Board, of which I was appointed Chairman, and Maynard Barnes and Darrell St. Claire members. Both of those latter gentlemen have since left the Department, but only after a considerable service on the Board. The Secretary also designated four categories of employees as security risks, to wit:

(a) A person engaging in, supporting, or advocating treason, subversion, or sedition, or who is a member of, affiliated with, or in sympathetic association with the Communist, Nazi, or Fascist Party, or of any party which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means, or a person who consistently believes in or supports the ideologies and policies of such a party.

(b) A person who is engaged in espionage, or who is acting directly or indirectly under the instructions of a foreign government, or who deliberately performs his duties or otherwise acts to serve the interest of another government in preference to the interests of the United States.

(c) A person who has knowingly divulged classified information without authority and with the knowledge or belief that it will be transmitted to agents of a foreign government, or who is so consistently irresponsible in the handling of classified information as to compel the conclusion of extreme lack of care or judgment.

And finally, (d). A person who has habitual or close association with persons known or believed to be in categories (a) or (b) to an extent which would justify the conclusions that he might, through such association, divulge such classified information without authority.

Under these security principles of the Department of State, adopted in 1947, it will be seen that the Personnel Security Board had to apply a standard much stricter than that prescribed for the loyalty program.

Not only Communists were proscribed as security risks, or persons affiliated with, or in sympathetic association with the Communist Party, or who consistently believed in or supported the ideologies and policies of the Communist Party, but even persons who had habitual or close association with such persons, so as to justify the conclusion that they might voluntarily or involuntarily divulge classified information without authority.

The President's loyalty program was put into effect on December 17, 1947, by the issuance by the Loyalty Review Board, under Seth W. Richardson as Chairman, of five directives, one requiring the establishment of departmental loyalty boards, and four regulating the initial hearings, and the determinations by the boards and the matter of appeals from their decisions. The State Department promptly followed suit, by adopting the loyalty standards of Executive Order 9835 and transforming the Personnel Security Board, of which I have spoken, with the same membership, into the Loyalty Security Board, with the functions of applying both the loyalty standards of the Executive order and the security principles of the Department of State. Those are the standards that have applied ever since and apply today.

The Loyalty Security Board is not an investigatory body.

It performs a judicial function, and the basis for action on its part is always a report from the FBI. The FBI, in its name check of all the employees of the State Department, has found itself in possession of certain derogatory information regarding an employee, and has consequently conducted a full field investigation and submitted its report to the Department. The report is exceedingly complete in most cases. It covers the life history of the employee, from his college days and, in some cases high-school days to the present. Everyone who remembers the employee, and many who don't has been contacted—neighbors, teachers, friends, enemies, and associates. Everything they say is put down, whether it bears on loyalty or security. Most of the information is imparted to the FBI agent in confidence, and the greater part of the witnesses refuse to sign statements or to appear before a loyalty board. Many of the witnesses are anonymous to the board, and are designated in the report simply by letters and numbers, with some suggestion either that their reliability is unknown, or that they have hitherto been found to be reliable. The good is reported as fully as the bad. The report, of course, particularly in the field of association with other persons, contains derogatory information regarding these other persons, with supporting testimony. The reports are completely objective; they make no attempt to evaluate the information, derogatory or otherwise, and draw no conclusions on the evidence.

Those FBI reports are submitted to the Loyalty Security Board in triplicate, and are at once passed to a panel of three out of the nine members of the Board selected by the legal officers of the Board on the basis of availability. Each member of the panel reads the report by himself, and makes up his own mind as to the action indicated. Then a meeting of the panel is held, and, under the Regulations of the Loyalty Review Board, the Board may come to any one of four conclusions:

(a) It may conclude that in some respect the FBI report is incomplete, and refer the report back to the FBI for further investigation;

(b) It may direct a written interrogatory to the employee, but may not question him otherwise, under the regulations;

(c) It may make a finding clearly favorable to the employee. Because of the full nature of the FBI reports this is possible in a large proportion of the cases;

(d) It may propose removal action, which is done by a notice to the employee in writing stating the charges in factual detail. The employee, either in writing or orally, is informed of the names of all the organizations with which he is accused of having been connected, and of all persons with whom he is charged with associating.

In case the panel decides to make charges of disloyalty or of security risk, the employee is entitled to reply in writing or to have an administrative hearing, at which he may appear personally, be represented by counsel of his own choosing, and present evidence. If a hearing is required, no one is present beside the Board, its legal officer, the stenographer, the employee, his counsel, and the witness who is testifying. A complete transcript is made of the hearing and is added to the file in the case. The Board is required and makes every effort to conduct the hearing with fairness, impartiality, and cooperativeness. It is an administrative hearing, not a prosecution.

After the hearing, the panel meets in executive session to decide the case. The regulations require that in its determination it shall state merely the action taken—it does not make detailed findings—which action may be either (a) to clear the employee, (b) that on all the evidence, reasonable grounds exist for belief that the person is disloyal, or (c) to recommend dismissal as a security risk. If the decision is adverse, the employee has an appeal to the Secretary of State or to a person designated by him. The Board has never been reversed on appeal. Every decision of the Board goes to Mr. Pourifoy, Deputy Under Secretary for Administration, for further action. The Administrative Office has never failed to execute an adverse decision of the Board.

Senator TYNDAL. That is a pretty good record you have made there, General.

Senator LODGE. How many of those decisions were there?

General SNOW. May I give the statistics later? I have them for you.

Senator LODGE. All right.

General SNOW. Every loyalty determination by a panel of the Board goes from the administrative office to the Loyalty Review Board of the Civil Service Commission for post audit. The Review Board permits itself any one of four actions:

(a) It may affirm the determination of the Loyalty Security Board.

(b) In case the Loyalty Security Board has decided the case without preferring charges it may remand the case for charges and a hearing.

(c) In case the Loyalty Security Board has decided the case without interrogation, it may remand the case for an interrogatory.

(d) It may hold a hearing itself and either affirm or reverse the decision of the Loyalty Security Board.

Since 1947, as of March 1, 1950, the Loyalty Security Board of the State Department has determined 246 loyalty cases; 109 of the cases have been postaudited by the Loyalty Review Board. Out of the 199 cases postaudited, three cases have been remanded for an interrogatory, one case has been remanded for a hearing, and no cases have been reversed. The Board has held 30 loyalty hearings. Of the 246 loyalty cases it has found 2 employees to be security risks; and 5 have resigned with charges pending. Does that answer your question?

I have served continuously as Chairman of the Board, and have participated as a member of the panel in 85 percent of the cases. I have sat on most of the hearings. I have tried to give every case my most careful and judicial consideration; I am sure that the other members of the Board have done likewise. If there are any Communists in the State Department, the Loyalty Security Board is uninformed of their existence.

It would not be appropriate for me to discuss the individual cases mentioned by Senator McCarthy, in view of the fact that the President has committed the entire list to the Loyalty Review Board for a rereview. Any discussion by me or by my Board of individual cases would presume, I think, on this function of the Loyalty Review Board.

Senator TYDINGS. General Snow, I apologize for asking you this question, but due to the interest that the people of the United States have in this whole proceeding, perhaps, would you mind telling the committee what is your normal or present political affiliation?

General SNOW. I am a Republican, sir, and have been for life.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I again suggest, Mr. Chairman, that every time a Republican is shown to be in Government it is a credit to Government.

Senator TYDINGS. I say it is a great credit to the Government's broad vision that in work of this kind a Republican of General Snow's eminence and transparent judicial and reflective ability has been put in charge of a delicate operation like this, and I want to compliment whoever appointed him for selecting a man of his eminence and great qualifications.

General SNOW. This is the end of my statement.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General Snow, you have given statistics in the last paragraph of your statement which I was somewhat interested in and wanted to ask you about. But does your Board confine itself only to the questions of loyalty involved in an employee, or do you go further and consider the question of security risks based on other categories than pure loyalty?

General SNOW. We cover both loyalty and security risks. Obviously any disloyal person would be a security risk without more, but we also cover the question of security risk by itself without disloyalty.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes. For instance, a person addicted to habitual drunkenness and bad associations, of a sufficient degree, if you considered that a security risk, that would be under your jurisdiction?

General SNOW. Technically that would come within our jurisdiction and we do give the matter consideration.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I merely use that as an illustration. There are other categories of risk perhaps that do not involve intentional disloyalty.

General SNOW. That is true, and also may I be permitted to say that there are easier ways of getting rid of a person who is unsuitable for employment than bothering to find he is a security risk; therefore on rare occasions if we detect in the files indications that the employee is unsuitable for employment, we call the attention of the administrative office to that fact and he is taken care of without having to bother with a determination as to security risk.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Under the McCarran rider and other provisions of law you can separate an individual or discharge him for no reason at all.

General SNOW. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In your loyalty hearings, the person against whom charges may be made is called in, as you have described here, but isn't it a fact that in many cases people who allegedly give derogatory information about an individual are not available for testimony before your Board?

General SNOW. As a general rule they are not available for testimony.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that in your inquiries or formal inquiries very often you are unable to determine whether or not these people who give derogatory information are telling the truth or not.

General SNOW. We have to do the best we can with the files before us.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that in the face of derogatory information let us assume—this may be an extreme case, but just for the sake of developing it let us assume—that the file is replete with derogatory information gained from specified information gained from specific individuals about the person charged, and that that information on the surface; that is, as contained in the file, looks pretty bad, but at the time of the hearing of this individual you are unable to produce any of the individuals, either because they have given their information under a pledge of secrecy or otherwise, you are unable to produce any of the individuals who gave this allegedly derogatory information, then in your hearing do you completely disregard the information in the file because you cannot produce the witnesses?

General SNOW. By no means, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What is your procedure in that?

General SNOW. Our procedure is entirely one-sided. The only evidence that is normally produced at the hearing is evidence put in by the employee. The Government presents no case, ordinarily. Under the regulations we invite those few individuals who have given testimony and have indicated a willingness to appear before the Board to appear, but they rarely do appear. But as a matter otherwise than that we present no case for the Government. The file which we have in our possession is part of the proceeding, and we give that file all the force that it would appear to warrant—that the file itself would appear to warrant. We consider the file as part of the case. We do not present it in evidence.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In other words, in considering this case, you do not take the position that simply because the employee appears and gives the only affirmative testimony which I think from a human standpoint would be self-serving so far as he is concerned, you do not consider that because the only verbal evidence that comes in before your Board is favorable to the employee and his side of the case, that that is your entire evidence?

General SNOW. Oh, not at all; no, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And you take the evidence in the file and weigh it for whatever it is worth, based upon your judgment and experience in the past and whatever sensible reliance you think you should put on it, is that correct?

General SNOW. Correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now let's take a case of this kind. Suppose an employee's file has been sent forward to your Board for review. You have a hearing, and there is considerable doubt raised as to the desirability of this employee, either as a security risk or on the question of loyalty, either one. There is a doubt, but that doubt is about 50-50. You could resolve it either way. Do you give the employee the benefit of doubt?

General SNOW. No. We give the Government the benefit of the doubt.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am awfully glad to hear you say that.

General SNOW. I can refer you to rule 393.32 in the State Department Regulations and Procedures, of which I shall be glad to make a copy available to the committee. If a reasonable doubt exists as to whether the person falls into one of the categories listed in section 393.1 the Department will be given the benefit of the doubt and the person will be deemed a security risk.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But that is in the question of a reasonable doubt. I am talking about the matter of where you may say, "Well, this may not rise to the full value of a reasonable doubt as legally interpreted, but still we can't be to sure that this fellow is affirmatively all right."

General SNOW. Are you talking about disloyalty or a security risk?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am talking about security risks or disloyalty, either category.

General SNOW. Disloyalty comes under a different modus operandi.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I understand there is a requirement on disloyalty for more specific proof.

General SNOW. Under disloyalty, the standard for the removal from employment is all the evidence—all the evidence—indicates reasonable ground exists for belief that the person involved is disloyal. Now we have to consider, under that head, all the evidence, and find, if we recommend removal, that there is reasonable grounds for belief that the person involved is disloyal.

That is a judicial function which is difficult but which has to be performed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But on that reference to "judicial" do you use that in the general sense of a sound judgment, or do you attempt to follow legal procedures?

General SNOW. I don't know whether it is judicial or judicious. I mean judicial in the sense that it is the function of a court. We consider ourselves to be a court. We do not, however, follow all the rules of evidence, if that is what you mean by a "judicial procedure."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is what I was asking, whether you attempted to hold your hearings on the basis—

General SNOW. No. They can put in all the hearsay testimony they want. It is mostly hearsay that we have against them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

I believe that you have covered this in your statement, but I want to merely ask you about it. The term "guilt by association" has been used a great deal, a term which, it appears to me, is not approaching exactly the full problem we have facing us. I think the term is much better "risk by association," especially in the security risk cases.

General SNOW. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Complete guilt often is impossible to prove, and yet there is often evidence of definite risk involved coming from association. Is that not true?

General SNOW. That's right. Guilt is a term more applicable to the accusation of disloyalty than security risk. Security risk is something that may be quite guiltless, as a matter of fact.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. From a loyalty standpoint?

General SNOW. From a loyalty standpoint and from any reasonable standpoint. A man may be quite loyal and not be guilty of anything.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. There is a distinction between loyalty and risk, very definitely.

General SNOW. Disloyalty is a state of mind, and security risk is a fact. A man is a security risk or he isn't in accordance with whether or not there is danger of his giving away classified information. That is all there is to security risk.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On page 3 of your statement you refer there to "association."

General SNOW. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not like to take the time to read all of that paragraph, but I will read part of it:

Not only Communists were proscribed as security risks, or persons affiliated with, or in sympathetic association with the Communist Party, or who consistently believed in or supported the ideologies and policies of the Communist Party, but even persons who had habitual or close association with such persons, so as to justify the conclusion that they might voluntarily or involuntarily divulge classified information without authority.

I would appreciate it very much if you would amplify what the degree of association has to be. I realize it is a rather twilight zone, perhaps, but what general attitude does your Board take on association? Is association on one or two occasions considered to be significant, or does the association have to be on a dozen or 25 occasions? Does it have to be over a period of a week or 30 days or 6 months? In other words, what is the scope, the reasonable scope, that delimits the category of association to the point where risk may be involved?

General SNOW. By definition the association has to be such as to justify the conclusion that the employee might voluntarily or involuntarily divulge classified information. That is the fundamental basis of a judgment.

Now, to apply that basis, the fundamental question is, What is the nature of the association?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It is that field that I am trying to explore.

General SNOW. It is that field that I am exploring for you. Is the association a normal association, for instance in line of duty? We have a great many cases where there has been association with known Communists and that association is normal because it has been in line of duty. They are delegated or directed to associate with those people.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is fully understandable, where they are doing a job, doing what they are told to do in keeping with their work.

General SNOW. Also we have cases where, in times past, they have associated with their own superiors, who have been castigated in a report as subjects of suspicion, who are no longer in the Department in question or are with some other department of the Government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let's pursue that a moment. If they have been in close association with their superiors, who have been separated because of their activities, and if they have continued that association, does that raise a question?

General SNOW. There is your point. It would raise a question, unless the continuance of the association was apparently perfectly normal—meeting on the street, meeting in the office, casual or otherwise, is not subject to criticism. What we are looking for in the matter of association is the kind of association that might lead to disclosure of classified information, because that is the fundamental purpose of the inquiry, to find out whether the employee is or is not a security risk. We are not prosecuting the employee for something he has done. We are trying to find out whether or not he is a security risk, and the matter of association must be regarded from that light.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I want to ask you the same question that I asked Mr. Nicholson, whether or not you consider that evidence of membership in a substantial number of organizations declared to be subversive by either the Attorney General or other official bodies—let's say membership in 10, 15, or 25 organizations of that kind—would raise a question of that person's associations and security risk that should be examined into.

General SNOW. Were the Board to find membership in a large number of organizations listed on the Attorney General's list, we would normally either submit an interrogatory to the person, to find out what his explanation was for such membership, or we would prefer charges and hold a hearing. That would be the normal procedure.

However, there might be cases in which on all the evidence it was perfectly clear that association with those organizations, such as sponsorship of dinners, parades, letters to the public, and one thing or another, or letterheads on which their name appeared as sponsors but which did not indicate membership, might be safely disregarded insofar as either interrogatories or hearings are concerned. It all depends on the nature of the association, and we must not forget that what we have to look at is the whole file in every case. We are not looking at just a derogatory piece of information standing by itself, and nothing more. We have the whole file before us for consideration, and we make our determination as to what to do on the whole file, not on a single isolated circumstance that the party back in 1940 or 1941 or 1943 was sponsor of a lot of things that had to do with this institution which in 1947 was declared to be subversive by the Attorney General.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Wouldn't it be a matter of interest to you to find out whether the individual were still a member of those organizations?

General SNOW. I said that if he was a member, that would be one thing. The question is, however, whether the evidence you are considering is evidence of membership or evidence of having been approached by the organization to lend one's name to some activity of the organization. There is a sharp distinction between the two things. I think in the case of membership I would have to say to you, Senator, that if we found the person was a member of the organization we would issue at least interrogatories.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It would seem to me, General, a person appearing as a sponsor of an organization, or as an adviser for the organization, would be pretty much of an indication that that person was supporting the organization and advancing its purposes and activities.

General SNOW. It depends again on what you have in the file. You can judge pretty well by the rest of the file whether that person is supporting that organization or not. If there is nothing else in the file derogatory except the fact that he lent his name in 1941 to sponsoring a parade that was initiated by an organization declared to be subversive in 1947, you are going pretty far to think that that is evidence of disloyalty or security risk.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, I think there are cases—isolated cases—where that would apply, but it would seem to me that if it occurred in case after case after case—

General SNOW. It doesn't, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think there is some evidence that it has occurred—that it would be a matter that would at least raise a flag of warning to make inquiry?

General SNOW. You are quite right as to that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am just interested in the procedure end of this, and what you people feel to be some kind of a trail to be explored.

General SNOW. You are quite right, Senator, that it would raise a flag of warning, and you are quite right to indicate the importance of the matter. The Board has in very many cases directed interrogatories to the employee to determine the reason for membership in one of the Attorney General's organizations. That is common procedure for the Board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, but it would seem to me to accentuate itself if that same person appeared repeatedly and over a period of a number of years—let's say 5, 6, 7 or 8 years—as the sponsor or the supporter of successive organizations which in turn successively are declared to be subversive.

General SNOW. Your assumptions are perfectly sound. It might in any given case, however, be overcome by the other evidence in the file. Just bear in mind that we always have the whole file to consider, not just that fact that you mention.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think all my questions have been answered.

Senator TRYING. Let me say, General Snow, Mr. Seth W. Richardson, who is here at my invitation today to testify, tells me he has a very important engagement at 1 o'clock, and I would like to ask the committee whether it would be agreeable to them to ask General Snow and the Board to remain a little while and let Mr. Richardson testify at this time, so he can leave and keep his engagement.

Senator GREEN. I have one question to ask which I think can be answered "Yes" or "No." I don't know that it will be.

I want to congratulate General Snow in the first instance on his very clear description of the functions of the Loyalty Security Board. Having taken such an active part in its functions throughout its whole existence, and having no doubt made modifications in the procedure during that period of time, and being able to make other modifications under the Executive order, I should like to ask whether there is any legislation that could be enacted which would in any way help either the Loyalty Security Board or the whole process of screening to protect our country against either disloyalty or security risk.

General SNOW. No, sir; I have no particular recommendation. I might say that the Board has no power of subpoena and no process by which we can make witnesses appear. If it should be desirable that we actually put in evidence on behalf of the Government, the power of subpoena would be useful.

Senator GREEN. What is your opinion? Would it be desirable? Would that help you in your work?

General SNOW. Not to a large extent. I think we are quite satisfied with the situation as it is.

Senator TRYING. I understand Senator Lodge has only one question, and maybe we can let General Snow go before we call Mr. Richardson.

Senator LODGE. Let me say that I think you have made a very illuminating statement. I noted in your statement here, "The Loyalty Security Board is not an investigatory body." Of course that is true, but you are in a very good position to have an opinion on the effectiveness of the investigatory procedure, and I would like to know whether you think there is a real follow-through insofar as this checking for security and loyalty is concerned.

General SNOW. In my opinion, Senator, there is.

Senator LODGE. The operation is constantly being policed, in your view?

General SNOW. In my view that is right. Of course, I am not particularly familiar with the methods they use to follow up, but the results seem to justify the means.

Senator LODGE. Would you say that was true insofar as investigations here in the United States were concerned and investigations abroad are concerned, both?

General SNOW. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. You feel that the set-up overseas is just as effective and just as rugged as what we have here in the United States?

General SNOW. I am afraid I am not very competent to judge of the system overseas because I haven't been overseas during my term of duty, and I don't know just what the system is, but I know we have results from overseas which are comparable to the results from within the Department.

Senator LODGE. Thank you very much.

Senator TYDINGS. I understand Senator McMahon has only a question or two.

Senator McMAHON. I just want to clear up one thing, General. On page 4 of your statement you say this:

Every loyalty determination by a panel of the Board goes from the administrative officer to the Loyalty Review Board of the Civil Service Commission for postaudit.

Now, on page 5 you say:

Since 1947, as of March 1, 1950, the Loyalty Security Board of the State Department has determined 246 loyalty cases. One hundred and ninety-nine of the cases have been postaudited by the Loyalty Review Board.

There seems to be a contradiction there.

General SNOW. It is not a real contradiction, Senator. I think the Loyalty Review Board has simply not got around to the other cases.

Senator McMAHON. Maybe they have resigned.

General SNOW. They do not post-audit some cases. Some of the cases are explained in that manner; yes. There are several cases where the employees has subsequently resigned and therefore the case has not been post-audited, but there are other cases, and Mr. Richardson can answer better than I can which have not yet been covered by the Board.

Senator McMAHON. Where did you do your Army service, General?

General SNOW. First World War or Second?

Senator McMAHON. Both.

General SNOW. I did my Army service in the First World War with the Field Artillery in France. I did my Army service in the Second World War in Washington with the Signal Corps.

Senator McMAHON. Are you a member of any veterans' organization?

General SNOW. I was a member of the American Legion for some time. In fact, I was commander of a post at one time. I am not at present a member.

Senator McMAHON. I want to congratulate you, General, on the way you have gone about your work.

General SNOW. Thank you.

Senator McMAHON. There are those who would like, apparently, to put into effect in this country the same kind of procedures that Archbishop Stepanik and Cardinal Mindszenty suffered under. I guess you do not agree with that.

General SNOW. You are correct.

Senator TYDINGS. General Snow, I want to express the thanks of all of the committee, I am sure, to you and to the members of the Board for coming up here this morning, but to you particularly for your very full and complete explanation of the procedures in your Department.

All of you gentlemen are excused, if you desire to retire.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, before we go on with the next witness I would like to set down now my desire that in executive session we hear all of those who were directly charged with the follow-through on this program and the day-to-day policing of the operation, and the way in which it is policed. I would like to have all those men come up before us so that we have a chance to look at them and talk to them.

Senator TYDINGS. How many would that be?

Senator LODGE. Whatever the number is that is actively and directly conducting the follow-through.

Senator TYDINGS. I will ask that be done in executive session as soon as it is convenient, Senator Lodge.

You gentlemen are excused. I ask Mr. Seth W. Richardson if he will come to the stand.

Do you solemnly promise that the evidence you shall give in this matter pending before the committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do.

STATEMENT OF HON. SETH W. RICHARDSON, CHAIRMAN, CIVIL SERVICE LOYALTY REVIEW BOARD

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, just before you read your statement, you are an attorney in Washington at the present time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is true.

Senator TYDINGS. Prior to that were you in the service of the Government?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That's right.

Senator TYDINGS. I believe you were Assistant Attorney General—is that the correct title—at one time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. When was that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. During the Hoover administration.

Senator TYDINGS. You served the full time during the Hoover administration?

Mr. RICHARDSON. And a short time with General Cummings, who succeeded General Mitchell.

Senator TYDINGS. What branch of judicial administration did you have charge of?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Lands; Indian Affairs.

Senator TYDINGS. State your age, Mr. Richardson.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Seventy.

Senator TYDINGS. I can't believe it. You are too good a golfer to be 70 years old.

We are very glad to have you. If you will read your statement, we will appreciate it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit the statement, Mr. Senator, purely in the interest of brevity. Personally I should very much like to tell about the loyalty program extemporaneously.

Executive Order 9835, promulgated by the President on March 21, 1947, is the basis for the existing employee-loyalty program. Under this order, general directions were given by the President for the initiation of a loyalty check of all incumbents or applicants in the executive department. Under the direction of this order, the Civil Service Commission appointed the Loyalty Review Board. This Board was organized in November 1947, and thereupon formulated the necessary rules and procedures to carry the Executive order into effect. It has been operating under those rules and regulations ever since, and is now so operating.

I can only attempt, in this short time, to sketch the outline of the program thus inaugurated.

The entire loyalty check is based upon the initial examination by the FBI of the employee or applicant file, and that investigation in the first instance by the FBI is followed by a field investigation when and if the FBI deems further investigation is necessary.

There have been established in each of the departments of the Government loyalty boards appointed by the head of the Department whose duty it is to take charge of loyalty matters for the particular Department. The report from the FBI, in a case where there has been a field investigation, comes to that board. The board examines it. If there are derogatory elements present, the board then issues a letter of charges to the employee, giving him the right to answer, to appear in person, with witnesses and an attorney, for a hearing.

In that hearing the loyalty review board of the Department considers the FBI report. It discloses to the employee the factual charges made in that report in detail, but it does not disclose to the employee the evidential source from which confidential information comes. Such information as exists in the FBI report as is not confidential is open to the employee in connection with the hearing.

The employee has opportunity to offer witnesses. He is advised of what the charges are against him. He is assured that he will not be judged on any charge that is not presented to him. He is permitted to offer witnesses, to appear by attorney, and the boards are directed in event of a dispute in testimony to take into consideration that the employee has not been given an opportunity to confront the evidential source of the charge against him.

At the conclusion of such a hearing that board makes a finding. If the finding is favorable, that ends it so far as the board is concerned. But if it is unfavorable, then a right of appeal is given to the employee, appeal to the head of the Department, where he has a new hearing and a new decision is made. If that decision is favorable to him, that ends it.

Senator GREEN. May I interrupt for a question? What proportion of the cases are appealed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me take that in my stride, Senator, please.

Senator GREEN. Excuse me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It goes to the head of the Department and he passes on it. If he finds favorably and reverses the decision below, that is the end of it. But if he finds that the decision below was right and makes an unfavorable determination, then the employee is given an appeal to the Board of which I am a member.

Those procedures are with reference to employees. With reference to applicants, the Civil Service Commission has created a system of regional boards, and those regional boards receive the FBI report and proceed to handle it and dispose of it in the same general way as I have illustrated, and from their decision there is an appeal to the Loyalty Review Board.

I want to make you clearly appreciate the fact that until the President's Executive order was promulgated no employee had any right to any hearing of any kind on any charge before any Department, so that the initiation of the right to hearings came from the President's Executive order, and if the order should be withdrawn and the loyalty program ended, no employee today would have any right to any hearing of any kind as a condition of his discharge.

Now, the Loyalty Review Board is made up of about 25 or 26 members, 4 of whom are in Hawaii. They are picked from the whole country. We have three or four on the Pacific coast, three or four in New York, two or three in Boston, three or four in Washington, some in Florida, Louisiana, Kansas, Ohio, Illinois, so that there have been drawn into the Board men from all over the United States.

Senator TYDINGS. On a nonpartisan basis?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose so. About 10 or 12 of them are lawyers. I should say half a dozen are educators, and the balance are men from business walks of life. Fortunately most of us are well along in years, probably because it gives us a little more time to devote to an activity of this sort.

As to the political make-up of the Board, I think they are about evenly divided, but I can't speak on it, because actually I can put my finger only on two sources.

One member of the Board asked me whether belonging to the Loyalty Board would prevent him from serving as a Republican judge in his district in the election. I judged from that that he was a Republican. The other is the very distinguished Dr. Meta Glass, who is a sister of Carter Glass and lives in Virginia, and I assume from that that she is a Democrat. But those are the only two ones that I would want to be sure were either Republican or Democrat.

The Loyalty Review Board has functioned from the start very largely as an appellate group, taking appeals that come through from the lower boards. At the same time we have an audit procedure. Our staff is made up of a number of experienced examiners and they audit every single case determined in the loyalty program.

I do not want to make that any broader than it is, because that audit is primarily procedural and is intended to assure us that the regulations which we have adopted and the rules that we have laid down are being followed in the carrying through of this loyalty program; that the proper notices are given to the employee; that the employee is given a proper hearing; that the employee is given his copy of the transcript; that the employee is given his notice of appeal. We want to be sure that all of those things are complied with, because in this loyalty program there are about 160 boards, so they could easily get all confused if there wasn't an audit system.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How many are there on each board, Mr. Richardson?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can't tell you. Some departments have three; some departments have eight or nine. In the Post Office Department they have, I think, five. That is entirely up to the head of the department, how many people he wants to assign to his local board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any idea at all what the total number is of all the 160 boards?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. I wouldn't even make a guess. I have never figured it out, and it would be just a guess. I should say you might say an average of four would probably be nearly right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Thank you.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now this post-audit, however, may bring up at any time a situation in a given case which seems to be so unusual, so out of line, so out of accord with what the record seems to be, that the examiner will suggest that a panel of our Board take that case and give it careful initial consideration.

The moment a panel engages in that activity, the panel has all the power it needs to take care of that case. It can, upon such a hearing, affirm the lower finding; it can send a case back for additional procedure below; or it can, if it wants to, resolve itself into a trial board and make a brand new hearing de novo in the case. But for the most part, to the largest extent the review is a true post-audit review.

Now, the operations of the Board are under the panel system. A panel of three members is usually appointed, and to those members a case is assigned and that panel completes the work of the Board in that case, and the decision of that panel is the decision of the Board, although there is a power reserved to the entire Board under certain narrow circumstances to resolve itself into a committee of the whole and reconsider a case that has been determined by a panel.

During the Board's activities it has considered, I would think, several hundred cases. And every member of the Board has been involved in the various panels with reference to those cases. We have confined our consideration wholly to the matter of employees or applicants, and the moment a person is no longer an employee or an applicant our procedure has stopped immediately, because, you see, our recommendation is to separate the man from the service, and if he is not in the service the proceeding becomes moot.

Except with reference to certain veteran appeals, where the veteran as a matter of right has a right to a review of his case by the Civil Service Commission, and where the determination of the appeal is final, all of the recommendations of the Loyalty Review Board are advisory. But I feel frank to say to you that there has not been a case where a recommendation of the Loyalty Review Board has not been followed by the respective department.

It may be interesting to you to observe that the appeal cases that come to us are cases which have developed an adverse finding below, because you would not get any appeal unless there was an employee who had been adversely judged below.

It may be of interest to observe that the Loyalty Review Board's record is about 50-50 on reversals of those cases. Despite the fact that the board below may have found a man disloyal, or evidence indicating disloyalty, the Board's record is about 50 percent of reversals of those cases. The standard on which we operate was told you by the chairman of the State Department's loyalty board—whether on all the evidence reasonable grounds exist for the belief that the employee is disloyal.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you refer in your statement, Mr. Richardson, to the number on this 50 percent reversal—that is, how many cases have come before you and how many have been reversed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not have it here. I could very easily ascertain it—definite figures from my assistant, Mr. Meloy, who is here. The figures do not appear in my statement.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Could you get those figures and give us the number?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Meloy, how many cases have come by appeal to the Loyalty Board of Review?

Mr. LAWRENCE V. MELOY. We have restored 124 people after appeal. There have been dismissed as a result of an ineligible determination 182 in the program.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, right there you are talking about the entire Government, not the State Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; the entire Government.

Senator TYDINGS. General Snow, as far as you have heard him testify, testified that so far as his Board, your findings have been practically the same as his all the way through. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think that we have reversed a case in the State Department. I am not sure how many may have been sent back for supplementary attention.

Senator McMAHON. He gives a figure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, here is an interesting thing, too. The FBI has considered nearly 3,000,000 files. More than 10,000 of those cases have been given a field investigation by the FBI. Not one single case, or evidence directing toward a case, of espionage has been disclosed in that record. All of these cases that we have had have had to do with this question of association, affiliation, membership with organizations which have been certified by the Attorney General to be subversive.

I may say, outside of this written statement, I cannot believe that you could have 3,000,000 targets for a widespread attempt to secure subversive agencies in the Government without some of them having clay feet, but I say it is an extraordinary thing that not one single syllable of evidence has been found by the FBI, efficient as they are, indicating that a particular case involves the question of espionage. The Judy Coplon case did not come under the loyalty program. The other cases that have been illustrated in the press all existed prior to the loyalty program.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. A great many people do separate themselves voluntarily prior to taking any appeal, do they not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is not in the statement. I have been asked the question, "Is this program any good, in view of the fact that out of all these millions, only a very few have been separated from the service?"

I have no stock answer to it. When we started this program, Senator, there was an immense increase in the percentage of resignations from the Government service. What that means I don't know. Very likely many of those resignations were entirely in good faith; but many of them may have felt that an FBI investigation was not a good atmosphere for them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So they got out rather than face the music.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Second, Senator, it may easily be that there were groups of individuals who would have come into the service who felt they did not care to undergo an FBI investigation before they got in, and we were relieved from that. That is a guess, too.

The third is the question of the morale of the Government service by reason of this FBI investigation. The charge has been bruited abroad that the morale of the Government was being broken down. The exact opposite is true. It must have been a very great relief to the 3,000,000 employees to discover that there were less than one-twentieth of 1 percent that the FBI could find anything wrong with.

Fourth, as to the future: I have found no evidence whatever of any resistance or objection or recalcitrance on the part of the employees of the Government in carrying through this program. We have had the cooperation, Senator, of the FBI, of the Civil Service Commission, of the Department of Justice, of every head of a department, to make this program work and not one word of criticism or suggestion or influence has come out of the White House to direct our attention. If the thing does not work, it seems to me that it lies right on our front door if such a program can be made to work.

Senator GREEN. In that connection may I ask you the question I asked of General Snow, whether you had any recommendations to make as to helpful legislation to make the program better.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the only way you can make the program better is to get better men enforcing it.

Senator GREEN. That cannot be done by legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And, except for my own personal modesty, you will go a long way before you improve on the personnel of the Loyalty and Review Board.

Now I come to something that I want to make clear to you. On March 28 the President, by letter, requested the Loyalty Review Board to arrange for a complete and detailed review, as soon as possible, of the cases in which charges of disloyalty had been made to this subcommittee. This review the President asks be made to cover all cases heretofore reviewed by the Board in its regular loyalty program as well as reports of all loyalty investigations made by the FBI, the files of the State Department, the files of the Civil Service Commission, any evidence produced before the committee or any evidence called to our attention either by the committee or by anyone else interested in the work of the committee.

The President, of course, created this Board. Consequently if he asks us to review he had the power to ask us. The Board, in a formal meeting, unanimously agreed to review every one of these cases.

Now, requests have already been made of this committee and of Senator McCarthy for a complete list of the cases in which charges have been made. The Department of State, the FBI, the Civil Service Commission, have already been requested to furnish to our Board everything they have got with reference to these individuals contained in this list.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Richardson, may I interrupt there? A list of all the person named by Senator McCarthy privately and publicly to this committee is attached to the subpoena that was served on you.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes. We asked the committee for it. It has not yet been forthcoming.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But you did receive the list attached to the subpoena which was served on you.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not only that, but we got a list to confirm that list from the State Department.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So you have the list.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So we have a list. But until we get a certificate from this committee that it is the true list, we are taking it for granted that it is correct. I assume it is, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, I will be glad to give you a certificate, and I think your request is a proper one, but I would like to say that the list you have, without the certificate, is an accurate list of all the persons named by Senator McCarthy.

Senator McMAHON. I wonder about that. Named by Senator McCarthy when and where?

Senator TYDINGS. These are the 81 persons in the Senate and the 9 persons he designated publicly, and that is all we have, against whom any charges have been heard.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And the President's letter to us is confined to those cases on which charges have been made before the committee.

Senator McMAHON. These do not include the 205 card-carrying Communists who are known to the Secretary of State to be card-carrying Communists, as of Wheeling, W. Va., according to Senator McCarthy's statement?

Senator TYDINGS. I would say to my colleague, and also to Mr. Richardson, that the committee has not yet received the names or the evidence of any card-carrying Communist from any source, including Senator McCarthy, up to the present time. We have not received any evidence of any card-carrying Communists now in the State Department, up to the present time.

Senator McMAHON. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have transmitted currently to this committee and to Senator McCarthy a request to advise us of any additional testimony available, and as soon as we get these records and files, which will come in to us, as soon as we complete our trial brief of a particular case, a panel will be appointed. That record will be turned over to the panel; the panel will investigate. If the panel concludes that it is necessary to have a hearing, the panel will notify the employee involved, give him an opportunity to appear in person and by his attorney and be heard; permit any witnesses who have relevant testimony on the question of disloyalty to appear before that panel in the particular case.

Those hearings will be private. No one will be permitted to be present except people who are involved in and interested in the proceedings, and the report which the panel will make will ultimately be forwarded to the President for such use as he may want to make of it.

So far as we can, we propose that our work on this review shall follow the seasoned procedure which we have developed for 2½ years under this loyalty program. It will only cover disloyalty, because the President has indicated to us that the authorization to this committee is confined to disloyalty, and he desires the review which we are to make to apply to disloyalty, as distinguished from security.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, could I just put this sentence in? The exact words of the resolution read that we are to investigate charges of employees in the State Department now or formerly employed who are charged with disloyalty, and nothing else. You are correct in your assumption.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have in our loyalty board program a group of current cases of employees that are involved in this loyalty program. The Board feels strongly that those individuals ought not to be left hanging on the string while we endeavor to comply with the request of the President, and we propose to handle our current workload of pending cases so that those employees may have an expeditious answer to the question involved in their appeals. Subject to that, the board is entirely willing to give the request of the President all possible precedence.

One final thing: We would like to have the fullest cooperation from this committee and from Senator McCarthy in endeavoring to bring into this file that is to be reviewed every element of evidence with reference to disloyalty that is available. We will do everything we can to get it. We will fix the time for presenting them as reasonably as we can, always keeping in mind that the report that we make has got to be reasonably expeditious.

That is all I have, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, I would like to say to you now, subject to the approval of the committee—and I am sure the committee will approve it—that every bit of testimony, every document, everything, any evidence of any kind, manner, shape or form that this committee has or which it may obtain in the future, will, unless I am overruled by the committee—and I don't think I will be—be made available to you or to your investigators if you will give me a letter indicating to whom I shall turn it over.

I would like to say this, that some of this evidence, of course, is a single piece of paper, perhaps, or a book or whatever it may be. We would appreciate its being examined in our room rather than taken away so that the committee can have all of its evidence at hand if it wants to look into it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I might suggest, Mr. Chairman, that that ought to be a two-way street. We ought to have access to whatever evidence Mr. Richardson has.

Senator TYDINGS. It ought to be a three-way street. We ought to have access to all the evidence Mr. McCarthy has.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I agree with that. I have no objection to furnishing Mr. Richardson's group with what evidence we have, but I think by the same token he ought to furnish us with what evidence he has, because we are charged by the Senate with making formal findings, and I think we ought to have access to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That little problem I leave in your laps.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, unless there are some questions by the members of the committee—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have several, yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Richardson, I want to get a little clearer understanding of the procedure which you will follow in these matters. You say you have 160 boards over the United States?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And they will average about four members, so that is about 600 people, roughly—perhaps more?

And they examine into the loyalty charges that may properly come before them under the loyalty program in the various departments. Is that correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How many members are there on the loyalty board of which you are chairman; that is, the top loyalty board, the final appeal board?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Twenty-six currently.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have other members subordinate to your board that are not specifically assigned to special departments as members of boards? I understand you have a staff.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have none who are board members, but we have a staff headed by a very efficient general executive secretary, a group of examiners, stenographers, and the like.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. About how many are on that staff?

Mr. RICHARDSON. About 30.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And do the 160 boards have a staff?

Mr. RICHARDSON. My information is that each department has assigned to a board a legal officer who aids them and assists them in the handling of their work.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In the review of these cases I was wondering about the size of your establishment. I noted a question as you were going through as to that. About how long a time do you think it would take to canvass these cases? Let's say there are, well, just for the sake of illustration, 115 of them—80 plus 26 plus 9.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish I could answer your question, Senator. I can't.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Could you give me any kind of estimate?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. Some of these cases, by reason of the limitations of the file, will be disposed of at a rate of two or three or four a day by a competent panel. There will be other cases here that are going to take a week or two.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In your procedure, how do you do? Do you submit the file to the staff to recommend to the panel?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I fix the panel, and then the office sends to that panel the file involved in a particular case.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That would be the FBI investigating file and other information that you have collected?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then that file goes to the staff for review and recommendation to the panel, does it? Or just what happens?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. The only thing the staff does is to digest it and make an assisting memorandum to the panel as to where they will find the various testimony.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But the staff does review this for the benefit of the panel, to expedite their work?

Mr. RICHARDSON. But with no recommendations of any kind. That is in some cases, Senator. There are many cases in which the panel itself makes its own complete investigation without any assistance from the examiner at all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But the staff does not undertake to recommend to the panel either way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, there is this qualification. If a staff auditor is auditing a case for regularity and anything comes up which seems to him out of line, he is authorized and directed by me to communicate with me, so that if necessary a panel can take that out of his hands and make the examination.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes. What I am getting at is, I would think that would be in the normal course of their duties, but your staff does not make a final recommendation that this case be approved or denied. That is the responsibility of the panel, after the staff has reviewed the file and whatever evidentiary matter there may be in there.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do your 160 boards follow that same procedure out in the field in the various departments?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I don't understand how they could.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What do they do in the case of a loyalty matter that may be in the jurisdiction of one of these 160 boards?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, suppose you are the board. A case comes in to you. A messenger delivers to you a file, say 6 inches thick, in the case of John Smith. A similar file, or if there isn't a copy of it that file, is then circulated among the members of your board, and you examine it to ascertain, first, whether there is a substantial derogatory element in that file. If there isn't, it is the duty of the board to say so, close the file, and send it back.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then it is the same procedure followed in the field with these boards where their particular jurisdiction is involved that is followed by your board. The whole file is sent for their review?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; it isn't the same, because the duty of the agency board is to take that file and digest it on the merits. But when that file comes to us, with a favorable finding below, it is only audited, and the audit is for the purpose of ascertaining whether regularity has been followed, and it is only the very occasional case where a panel of our board enters into a determination, or a redetermination, of a question of merit, which has been determined by the lower board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes. And then in the field, if they come to a conclusion, they refer their conclusion back to you?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let's use the term, "one of your 160 boards." That is the only way I know to refer to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Call it agency board and you have it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That has jurisdiction over this matter. When they come to a conclusion, that board, then the board forwards its conclusions to you.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the file.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. With the file. It returns the file and forwards the conclusion to you.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That's right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now did I understand you to say that in certain cases the department head can overrule the finding of your loyalty board?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. The department head can overrule the finding of his own board.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But not of your board?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to indicate, as a result of a very clear explanation of this, that we have some 600 people in the United States who are members of these loyalty boards, together with 30 or 40 staff members over there, all of whom have access to these FBI reports, yet we are denied—five members of the Senate are denied—looking at the FBI reports on these cases, and I think it is a very, very significant thing. In other words, these files are sent all over the United States; they are given to 160 loyalty boards and their members, and they are subject to the examination and specific determination and development of derogatory information by clerks in the departments, yet five members of a subcommittee who want to examine them in secrecy and in confidence, if you please, because I have never advocated making them public, to make up our own minds on conclusions we are directed by the Senate to make, are denied access to the reports in the various files.

Senator TYDINGS. I think it is only proper to say, about these regional and central boards, that so far as I have been able to learn, there has never been a leak out of any of them yet.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, they are all human.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Richardson, before you leave I would like you to know that the only evidence we have has been presented openly by Senator McCarthy, with certain exhibits that are in the record, with one possible exception, where the chairman was handed a small lot of evidence on a matter. That is, all of the matter that we have before us has been told publicly either on the Senate floor or before this committee. There has been no evidence given to us of any consequence, at least, in executive session. We only had one meeting in executive session with Senator McCarthy, and we got no new evidence out of that. We discussed some other matters. So when you get the record and the exhibits you will have all the evidence up to now, with one possible exception, which the committee has.

Senator Green, have you any questions?

Senator GREEN. I just want to draw my distinguished colleague's attention to the fact that it is a little inaccurate to say that all these 160 boards had all these records. Each one of these records goes to only one board, which is very different.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. If there is any question about that, what I mean was, all these people, six or seven hundred of them, which is more than all the Members of the House of Representatives and all the Members of the Senate put together, have access to FBI and departmental investigative loyalty files, whether it is 1 or whether it is 50.

Senator GREEN. The question, as I understand it, isn't between the number of people who have access to it; it is a question of whether the legislative branch shall submit these things to the executive branch and vice versa.

Senator TYDINGS. I would imagine, with the exception of the Republican judge, Judge Richardson, referred to a while ago, none of the people who are on these boards is in active politics, either, and that ought to make a little difference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are in something of a novel position because we have received an application from the Library of Congress, which is a congressional body, asking if we won't take charge of their loyalty cases too, and I raise the very distinct question that so far, at least, we were not considering anything but executive employees.

But in view of the fact that our findings are purely advisory, if it would help the situation at all we would take on the Library too. Since then I understand the Army proposes to use us.

I might put this in, because I like to have it known. None of the people who serve on this board is paid except when he works, and when they do not work it does not cost anything. And if this workload grows, as I think it will, they are going to be DP's in the first sense of the word.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, of course, we have never had any loyalty investigation for the large number of employees of the legislative establishment. We have thousands of them here on both sides of the Capitol, and so far as I know there has never been any loyalty check on them, and it might be not unfair to say that we might want to put our own house in order before we go searching around other houses of the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to thank you very much for coming up. I apologize for keeping you a little longer than I intended. Thank you for your very comprehensive report.

The committee will stand in recess until 10:30 tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 1:05 p. m., a recess was taken until the following day, Thursday, April 6, 1950, at 10:30 a. m.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER S. Res., 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on April 5, 1950, at 10:30 a. m., in room 818, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman of the full committee), Lucas, Tobey, McCarthy, Mundt and Knowland.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will please come to order.

We have set aside today in order to give Dr. Owen Lattimore, who has been accused by Senator McCarthy, with certain others, I think it was "of being an unsafe risk," and in other ways—a chance to come here and testify in his own defense, or in his own behalf.

Dr. Lattimore is here with counsel, and we will proceed.

Doctor, if you will rise and hold up your right hand and be sworn.

Do you solemnly promise and swear that the testimony you shall give in the matter pending before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I do pledge and so swear, so help me God.

TESTIMONY OF DR. OWEN LATTIMORE, ACCOMPANIED BY ABE PORTAS AND PAUL PORTER, OF COUNSEL

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, Doctor.

Now, Doctor, you may proceed in your own way to read or speak extemporaneously.

You may proceed from now on.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Thank you, Senator.

May I read without interruption?

Senator TYDINGS. You may, sir; and then, of course, we will have the right to question you afterward.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Surely.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, sir.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Mr. Chairman, and members of the subcommittee, I wish to express to you my appreciation for this opportunity to reply to the statements about me which have been made by Senator Joseph McCarthy, of Wisconsin. The Senator has in effect accused me of disloyalty and treason. He made these accusations when I was in Afghanistan, and I did not hear of them until some days after they were first made.

Senator TYDINGS. Just a moment. There is a rather large crowd in the room today, and I know you want to hear the witness, and I know the television and radio people would like to hear the witness. The Chair will appreciate it if those in the room will desist from audible conversation, and as little movement as possible, so as to not interrupt the proceedings.

Go ahead, Doctor.

DR. LATTIMORE. The technique used by the Senator in making these charges is apparently typical. He first announced at a press conference that he had discovered "the top Russian espionage agent in the United States." At this time he withheld my name. But later, after the drama of his announcement was intensified by delay, he whispered my name to a group of newspapermen, with full knowledge that it would be bandied about by rumor and gossip and eventually published. I say to you that this was unworthy of a Senator or an American.

As I shall show in detail, McCarthy's charges are untrue. As soon as I heard of the substance of the charges I denounced them for what they were: base and contemptible lies. In fact, as I recall, on several occasions I used somewhat more colorful words.

Gentlemen, I want you to know that it is most distasteful to me to use language concerning a United States Senator which, to say the least, is disrespectful. To me, the honor and responsibility of American citizenship carry with them an obligation to respect the high office of a Member of the United States Senate. But that office, the position of United States Senator, likewise carries with it a responsibility which this man Joseph McCarthy has flagrantly violated. As a citizen who holds no official position, it is my right and duty to list these violations which are illustrated by the Senator's conduct in my own case.

He has violated it by impairing the effectiveness of the United States Government in its relations with its friends and allies, and by making the Government of the United States an object of suspicion in the eyes of the anti-Communist world, and undoubtedly the laughing stock of the Communist governments.

He has violated it by instituting a reign of terror among officials and employees in the United States Government, no one of whom can be sure of safety from attack by the machine gun of irresponsible publicity in Joseph McCarthy's hands.

He has without authorization used secret documents obtained from official Government files.

He has vilified citizens of the United States and accused them of high crime, without giving them an opportunity to defend themselves.

He has refused to submit alleged documentary evidence to a duly constituted committee of the Senate.

He has invited disrespect to himself and his high office by refusing to live up to his word. Twice on the floor of the Senate he stated that any charges that he made under the cloak of immunity, he would repeat in another place so that their falseness could be tested in a court of the United States. He said that if he should fail to do this he would resign. He has been called to repeat his charges so that they could be tested in a court action. He has failed to do so. And he has not resigned.

Gentlemen, I speak to you as a private citizen. I owe no obligation to anyone except my country and my conscience. I have spent my life in the study of the problems of the Far East, and, as an author and journalist, in writing about those problems as I saw them. I have written 11 books, and literally hundreds of newspaper and magazine articles. Too few people in this country have realized the importance of the Far East—of China, Mongolia, Tibet, India, Pakistan, Afghanistan. These areas of the world seem to most Americans to be merely places in a travel book. I have been trying all of my life to arouse interest in this area and to spread knowledge of it in this country.

Now, suddenly, this Nation is beginning to awaken to the fact that the Far East may be a center of the political crisis in which we find ourselves. That is a hopeful development. From this awakening, public debate is bound to result; and through public debate, the Nation should be able to evolve policies toward China and the Far East which we will carry out in the same spirit of patriotic nonpartisanship which has, until recently, distinguished our conduct of foreign affairs in Europe.

But before this essential public debate on China policy can take place, there are some things that have to be cleared away.

First, it is possible for people, including officials of the United States Government, to oppose further aid to the Nationalist Government of China without being disloyal to the United States, or pro-Communist.

Second, persons, including officials, who opposed further aid to the Nationalist Government—or who advocated a reduction of that aid, after the end of the war with Japan, were not necessarily disloyal to the United States or pro-Communist.

Third, citizens of the United States, including State Department officials engaged on far eastern work, are presumptively loyal and devoted to their country.

Fourth, persons who are engaging in violent propaganda for all-out aid to the Nationalist Government in Formosa and to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, do not have a monopoly of opposition to communism. Some of these people are undoubtedly sincere; but none of them is entitled to assert his views by vilification and personal abuse of others, or by unfounded attacks upon officials of the United States Government.

Now it is obvious that Senator McCarthy and I differ on each of these points. Judging from his unquestioning acceptance and extensive use of the propaganda of the so-called China lobby, he is at least its willing tool. The Senator seems to feel that everyone is disloyal whose opinions do not agree with those of himself and the China lobby with respect to total and complete commitment of the United States to the Nationalist Government of China. Some of his denunciations are understandable only on the theory that he believes that anyone is disloyal whose opinions on China policy during the last 9 or 10 years parallel or support those of the Government of the United States. In the latter category the Senator would have to include Gen. George C. Marshall, General Stilwell, and presumably the various Secretaries of State, Messrs. Hull, Stettinius, Byrnes, and Acheson.

In fact, I wonder a bit how a man so young as Joseph McCarthy, whose acquaintance with national and international affairs is so recent, can have become such a great expert on the difficult and complex problem of China and the Far East. My wonder on this score increased when I read his speech on the Senate floor. Some of his material is from Chinese and Russian sources. Or perhaps I should say that some of his exotic material on Mongolia appears to trace back to some Russian source of distinctly low caliber.

I did not know that the Senator was a linguist. But really, the material that the Senator read is so badly translated and so inaccurate that I am sure that I should not like to place the blame for it on the learned Senator. Indeed, I fear that the sound and fury come from the lips of McCarthy, but that there is an Edgar Bergen in the woodpile. And I fear that this Edgar Bergen is neither kindly nor disinterested.

In any event, the Senator has stated that he will stand or fall on my case. I hope that this will turn out to be true, because I shall show that his charges against me are so empty and baseless that the Senator will fall, and fall flat on his face. I trust that the Senator's promise that he will retire from the arena if his charges against me fail is not as insincere as his twice-repeated promise to resign if he should fail to repeat his libelous accusations in a forum which would expose him to suit. I hope the Senator will in fact lay his machine gun down. He is too reckless, careless, and irresponsible to have a license to use it.

In fact, it is somewhat difficult to pin down the Senator's accusations against me. He first mentioned me on March 13 in a statement before this subcommittee. At that time, according to Senator McCarthy, I was merely a humble fellow who was just "pro-Communist." The specific charges in support of this included just about the same things that appeared in McCarthy's final summation on the floor of the Senate on March 30.

On March 21, McCarthy told a press conference that an unnamed man connected with the State Department was—I quote: "The top Russian espionage agent in the United States."

Subsequently, McCarthy identified me as this top espionage agent in a meeting attended by various persons. If the Senators will excuse me, I shall not give them the details of this meeting because it has a bearing upon an action for libel which I propose to discuss with my attorneys at the earliest possible moment.

It is significant to note that my eminent position as "the top espionage agent" was apparently an afterthought. When McCarthy first made his sensational charges on February 20 in which he said that there are 57 Communists in the State Department and 205 bad security risks—not one of which he has produced—he apparently did not have me in mind, directly or indirectly. Indeed, he referred to three cases—No. 1, No. 2, and No. 81, as "the big three." These cases, as the Senator described them, did not relate to me. Subsequently, he referred to Mrs. Brunauer as "the most important case." As I believe the Senators will agree, Mrs. Brunauer has completely demonstrated that McCarthy's charges against her were characteristically untrue.

My eminence, therefore, as the top Soviet espionable agent, dawned upon the Senator rather late in his crusade. It didn't last very long. I was pretty quickly demoted from the position of big fish to relatively small fry.

In his major broadside on the Senate floor on March 30, the Senator, quite understandably, showed that he was getting a bad case of weak knees. In that speech the worst charge that he falsely made against me was that I was "one of the top Communist agents in this country." You will note that I was merely one among many; and that I was no longer guilty of espionage. Indeed, he suggested that maybe the best way to describe me was as a "bad policy risk"; and the poor fellow ended up on page 4446 of the record by saying that "I fear in the case of Lattimore, I may have perhaps placed too much stress on the question of whether or not he has been an espionage agent."

Now, I can understand why the Senator wants to weasel, particularly in view of his brave—but I fear insincere—statements that he would stand or fall on my case and that he would repeat his statements in an unprivileged forum or would resign. But I think that I would be the instrument of a great service to this country if the Senator should resign, and I want to deal with each of his charges.

At the outset, however, I should like to make clear just what my connections with the State Department and the United States Government have been. The fact is that I have, and have had, no connection with the Department, and the Department does not consult me and has not consulted me, except as follows:

(1) I was appointed by the President as a member of the Pauley reparations mission to Japan and served in this capacity for 3 or 4 months, beginning October 15, 1945. Although this was a White House mission, I was paid by the State Department for my services.

(2) I participated in a 2-day panel discussion of China problems at the State Department in October of 1949. The members of this panel included about 25 or 30 specialists from universities, business, and public life. Among them were Gen. George C. Marshall, Harold Stassen, and John D. Rockefeller III. It was while this conference was in preparation that I wrote a memorandum, at the specific request of the State Department, giving my views—there should be a correction there. I should say, giving my views on the far-eastern policy in general, including the China policy.

(3) On June 5, I lectured on Japanese problems at the State Department. It is my understanding that this was one of a series of lectures to State Department personnel presented by persons of various points of view. Other than this, I have never been a consultant for the State Department or on its payroll.

I do not have a desk in the State Department. I do not have a telephone there. I do not have—and never have had—access to State Department files. The Senator must know that these statements of his are untrue, but it is typical of him that the last time he repeated this silly charge he phrased it in a way that would do credit to the most devious of Communist propagandists. This is what he said on page 4447 of the Congressional Record:

Whether or not the Secretary of State will ever admit that Lattimore has a desk in the State Department is comparatively unimportant.

Now, gentlemen, I suggest that kind of language is not made in Wisconsin.

Apart from those listed above, my only employment record with the Federal Government is that during the war, from 1942 to 1945, I was first Deputy Director of Pacific Operations and then a consultant, for the Office of War Information.

With the stated exceptions, I have held no positions in the United States Government.

In July 1941 I was appointed as political adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. I was appointed by the Generalissimo upon recommendation of President Roosevelt. At the end of the 6 months' period for which I was appointed, the Generalissimo urged me to accept reappointment for 1 year. In February 1942 I returned to the United States, then went back to Chungking, and about the end of 1942 offered my resignation. The Generalissimo graciously refused to accept my resignation formally, but asked me to consider myself on indefinite leave.

Since one of Senator McCarthy's astonishing affidavits says that I was sent back to the United States because the Generalissimo was displeased with me, I ask permission to file as part of the record a copy of a letter from him to President Roosevelt in 1942, expressing his appreciation of my services in rather flattering terms.

Senator TYDINGS. It will be granted, but we prefer to have it read now, unless you would like to read it later.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Surely I will read it now.

It is dated Chungking, January 12, 1942:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am happy to have the opportunity afforded by Mr. Lattimore's return to America on a short visit to send you a word of greeting and to thank you for recommending him as my political adviser.

Mr. Lattimore has fully measured up to our expectations and has entirely justified your choice. You unerringly detected the right man to select to act as a counselor at a time when decisions which will affect the whole world for generations to come are in the balance. He has not only a wide knowledge of our language, history, and geography; he has, in addition, an invaluable understanding of our contemporary political affairs. His absolute integrity is manifest in everything that he does or says, and I never have the slightest doubt that any suggestion that he may make is based upon a genuine desire to assist China to the utmost of his power.

The rest of the letter, Senator, refers to other matters. May I omit reading them?

Senator TYDINGS. If you wish. The whole letter will be put in as exhibit 68, but you may read the part that bears on this controversy.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I also file a cordial letter from Madame Chiang in 1944 asking me to be their house guest.

This is dated Chungking, Szechuan, April 28, 1944:

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I sent you a letter soon after my return from America, but as I have not heard from you I do not know whether it reached you. Therefore, I am asking General Hearn to take this letter to America and mail it from there.

I understand that there is a possibility of your coming with Vice President Wallace. If that information is correct—and I hope it is—I should be very happy if you will be our house guest during your visit to Chungking.

With all good wishes to Mrs. Lattimore as well as yourself.

Yours sincerely,

MEY LI SOONG CHIANG.

I shall hereafter refer to the Senator's great, but undeserved compliment concerning the degree of my influence on State Department policy.

But at this point, I want to deal with Senator McCarthy's charge that I am the top Russian espionage agent in this country. As I have said, the Senator has backed away from this accusation and would probably prefer that it be forgotten. But I don't want it to be forgotten that the Senator made the charge. It is an accusation of a base crime, the crime of obtaining and supplying secret information to a foreign nation. In his entire 4-hour speech, in which he has dredged up and slung at me all the mud that he could accumulate from all sources, however polluted, McCarthy does not recite a single act or circumstance which even on its face supports this vile accusation.

The nearest he comes to any attempt specifically to charge me with being a Soviet agent is to refer to a trip that I made to Point Barrow, Alaska, in May of 1949. He says that I had two cameras with me on that trip, and that I have a room in Baltimore devoted to "special photographic equipment." Then he adds, with sinister implications—I quote—that—

It would be very interesting to know where the pictures are today which Lattimore took with those two cameras.

Now, Senators, I did go to Point Barrow. I went there as alternate for the president of Johns Hopkins University, to attend a meeting of the Arctic Research Laboratory Advisory Board. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss research work being done there by various universities under Navy grant. As I recall, one of the projects which I studied and reported on while I was there, concerned the archeological and dendrochronological research which was under way. The minutes of this rather academic meeting at Point Barrow are not classified. I offer a copy of them for the record.

Senator TYDINGS. Without objection, they may be printed in the record, as exhibit 69.

May I seize this opportunity to ask if Dr. Isaiah Bowman was then president of Johns Hopkins?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, sir; he had already retired and Dr. Bronk had become president.

Gentlemen, I confess that I had a camera, just one. Senator McCarthy says everybody else had two. I took a lot of pictures. I didn't get around to developing them until Senator McCarthy made his charges. The pictures and the negatives and Kodachrome slides are right here and I am glad to let you have them. I offer them for the committee files. They are all intact, and none of them has been sent to Russia or given to secret agents.

Senator TYDINGS. They will be made a part of the files.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I hope that you will enjoy the pictures of Eskimo children, dog sleds, huts lined with whale ribs, natural beauties, and sunsets. If any of you have any suggestions as to how I can be a better amateur photographer I would appreciate your letting me know.

Incidentally, the special photographic equipment that I have in my house is an ordinary dub photographer's darkroom in which my son and I develop our pictures when we have the time.

Now another story that Senator McCarthy tells goes back 14 years, to 1936. The Senator says that he has an affidavit from a former Red general. This Red general says that he talked to another Red general in 1935 or 1936. The second Red general told the first Red general that they were getting good intelligence reports about Mongolia and the Far East through the Institute of Pacific Relations which, the second Red general said, the Soviet Intelligence had taken over through Communists in the United States. All of this occurred, you will note, in 1935 or 1936.

Senator McCarthy has refused to make this affidavit available to my lawyers, and I have not seen it. But on the basis of the Senator's statements concerning the affidavit, I confess that I am completely bewildered as to what he means to show by it. The only reference to me in the alleged conversation between the two Red generals is the following: After reciting that the Soviet Intelligence had taken over the Institute of Pacific Relations through Communists in the United States, the affidavit states—and I quote—that—

In connection with this, the Red general particularly mentioned Owen Lattimore.

Now, if this is intended to be a charge that in 1936 I was a Communist, it is obviously false. I was not a Communist then; I was not and have not been a Communist at any other time, and I am not a Communist now. But you don't have to take my word for this as of 1936. On page 4446 of the record Senator McCarthy himself quotes another one of his own informants, as saying that in 1936, I "was not yet a Communist."

Now I suggest that the Senator can't have it both ways. He and his informants should make up their minds whether I was or was not a Communist in 1936.

The only relevant part of the charge—if any of it is relevant—is the insinuation that the Institute of Pacific Relations was, in 1936, a tool of Soviet Intelligence. In 1936 I was editor of the institute's magazine Pacific Affairs and resided in Peking, China. It was my job to accept or reject articles for publication in the magazine and to do the usual type of editorial work.

Gentlemen, I shall not take your time now to repudiate in detail the attacks on the Institute of Pacific Relations which Senator McCarthy repeats. I shall content myself with saying at this point that the American Institute is a research and educational organization which a recent Rockefeller Foundation report called "the most important single source of independent studies of the problems of the Pacific area and the Far East." Gerard Swope, honorary president of International General Electric, recently succeeded the late Ray Lyman Wilbur, Hoover's Secretary of the Interior, as chairman of the American Institute of Pacific Relations. Among its trustees are Gen. George Marshall; W. R. Herod, of International General Electric; and C. K. Gamble, director, Standard Vacuum Oil Co.

You may wonder why there has been this vicious attack upon the institute and upon everyone who has ever been connected with it. If McCarthy had exercised even common prudence, he could have found out the reasons, and he would have known that he was being used as the simple dupe of a group of fanatical persons who have been thoroughly discredited. The attack upon the institute, its trustees, and officials, including me, has been going on for many years.

The basis of the attack was, first, that the institute and I and others were pro-Japanese imperialists; and later that we were pro-Communist. The assault took the form of floods of propaganda, including dozens of articles, some of which were written under false names and some of which are reproduced in Senator McCarthy's speech of March 30.

Some of the material used in the campaign was distributed to Members of the Congress by William J. Goodwin, who is registered both as a lobbyist and as an agent of a foreign power, namely, the Nationalist Government of China. According to his registration, Mr. Goodwin receives $25,000 a year for his services. There is a correction there, Mr. Chairman. He is connected with more than one branch of the Chinese Government, and his total compensation appears to be $30,000 a year, plus some expenses.

Senator TYDINGS. The correction will be made a part of the record.

Dr. LATTIMORE. The attack on the institute culminated in an effort in 1945, by a man named Kohlberg, to seize control of the institute. He was defeated in a proxy fight, receiving only 60 votes from the 2,000 members of the institute.

At the time of this fight the institute was defended by many of its distinguished members, trustees, and officers, including Edward Embree, Sumner Welles, W. W. Waymack, Arthur H. Dean, Robert Gordon Sproul, and Ray Lyman Wilbur. I have here a mimeographed publication on the details of this fight, prepared by the institute, which I should like to file with the committee as part of this record.

Senator TYDINGS. The record will be filed as exhibit 70.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Mr. Kohlberg and his allies were thoroughly discredited. However, they did not thereafter relent in their campaign, but they made no progress. The institute continues to include among its active members, trustees, and officers some of the most distinguished names in the country. It continues to receive the financial support of the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations. And it continues its essential work in the study of far-eastern problems.

It is easy to understand the joy of Kohlberg and his associates when they found the willing hands and innocent mind of Joseph McCarthy. It is easy to imagine their pleasure when they observe a United States Senator creating an international sensation by regurgitating their own fantastic and discredited venom.

I have prepared and I file with the committee an analysis of the McCarthy charges showing in parallel columns their virtual identity with the Kohlberg charges. Incidentally, the Senator—without naming Kohlberg—refers to him on page 4460 of the Congressional Record as a good American member of the institute—presumably in contrast to General Marshall, Gerard Swope, Arthur Dean, and former Ambassador O'Neal.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you wish that excerpt read now, or do you prefer to have it filed?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think, just filed, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. It will be filed as exhibit 71 in the record.

Dr. LATTIMORE. As I have said, however, I shall not take the time to defend the Institute of Pacific Affairs. I hope that this committee will hear more from Ambassador Jessup about it, and from its active officers. I merely tell you as a scholar and an American, that if this particularly vicious revival of an old and disreputable attack injures this great organization, if it is injured, the Nation will lose one of its few sources of research concerning a vital part of the world in which our national interest is in peril, and about which we know too little.

There is, however, one other insinuation specifically relating to me in connection with the institute that I should like to answer. That is a statement to the effect that in 1936 I was in Moscow "obviously receiving instructions from the Soviet Government concerning the line which the Institute of Pacific Relations ought to follow." The committee will remember that, according to one of Senator McCarthy's informants, in the year 1936, I was at least not yet a Communist!

Now the facts are these: In 1936 I was, as I have stated, resident in Peking, China, as editor of the institute's magazine. I was returning to the United States, and planned to stop off in various countries. E. C. Carter, secretary general of the Institute, was in Moscow, where he was attempting—an attempt that in the long run proved fruitless—to persuade the Russians to take part in the research and discussions of the Institute of Pacific Relations with something that approached the give and take that prevailed among most of the national groups and which made the institute a valuable and constructive international forum. As I recall, Mr. Carter suggested that I stop off in Moscow.

At the time, the institute's magazine Pacific Affairs, of which I was then editor, had just published an article which included an uncomplimentary personal reference to Stalin. I soon found out that the Russians considered this a high crime and misdemeanor and were angry with me for publishing what they referred to as a Trotskyist version of events in China. At the same time, I had a particular reason for being more than usually displeased with them because they had just published a review of one of my books in which it was insinuated that I was a Japanese agent.

During the same visit I took part, by invitation, in a group discussion of academic research workers on the social and economic structure of China. One of Senator McCarthy's informants, Freda Utley, was present. Whatever her politics, she was then clearly working for the Russians. The discussion was hardly a success. The interpreting was bad. I could not understand what the Russians were trying to say, and I did not make myself popular when I quoted a book about China by an ex-Communist.

I later delivered to the Soviet Academy of Sciences a lecture on the Far East which I repeated in two cities in Holland and again in London and which was then published in the journal of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London.

I also talked in Moscow with Ambassador William C. Bullitt about why I thought my interpretation of the situation in Inner Mongolia was right, and the Soviet interpretation wrong. He exclaimed that the Soviet Foreign Office ought to know that, and at his suggestion he then took me to see a Soviet Vice Commissar of Foreign Affairs, whose name I forget, to whom I spoke my piece, in Ambassador Bullitt's presence and at his request.

You may remember, gentlemen, that it was just about this time that Mr. Roy Howard of Scripps-Howard and United Press had recently been in Moscow, where he interviewed Stalin.

These things, then, are the charges made by Senator McCarthy which have any possible relationship to his charge that I am or was an espionage agent—a charge about which I think even he is uncomfortable. I come now to a variety of other allegations which I suppose are intended to show that I have collaborated with or supported the interests of communism or the Soviet Union.

First, the Senator refers to an affidavit from someone who was once an editor in China, stating that I was a leader in several pro-Russian student uprisings in China. This is fantastic and untrue. I cannot even imagine anything that I ever did or said which might conceivably have suggested this even to a perverted mind. This was in the period when I had close contacts with Mongol nationalists who were anti-Communist and also critical of the Chinese Government. Because of these contacts, neither pro-Russian nor pro-Kuomintang Chinese students were seeking my company.

I have here a letter from Nelson T. Johnson who was our Ambassador to China.

Mr. Chairman, the next paragraph I have here summarizes the letter. Will you accept the summary for the moment, or should I read the letter in full, as well?

Senator TYDINGS. What is the date of the letter, Doctor?

Dr. LATTIMORE. April 3, 1950.

Senator TYDINGS. And by whom is it signed?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Nelson T. Johnson.

Senator LODGE. I would like to have it read.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge would like to have it read. Please read it.

Dr. LATTIMORE (reading):

DEAR LATTIMORE: I have your letter of April 2 in regard to the charge that you were "a leader in several pro-Russian student uprisings in China." I was resident in Peking I think throughout the whole of the period between 1930 and 1937 and I recall your presence in Peking very clearly. At the moment, I do not remember how much of that period you were actually in Peking, but I know that you and your family had a home there for most of that time and that my wife and I enjoyed the hospitality of your home and that you were both frequently in our home. I recall very clearly that this period coincided with the invasion of Manchuria by Japan and I remember long conversations with you at various times about your work and the travels that you made into Mongolia and into Manchuria, for you were at that time working on the manuscript of a book which was to be published under the title of "Inner Asian Frontiers of China." I was in a position at Peking in those days, being chief of the American diplomatic mission to China, where if there had been any report of complaint in regard to your activities among the Chinese of a political or seditious character, I would have been informed. I am sure that any information of that kind would have made an impression upon me and that I would not have forgotten it.

I am surprised to learn that you have been charged with having been a leader in several pro-Russian student uprisings in China during that period. I do not remember ever having heard of anything of that kind. I do not recall ever having heard that you were a participant in student troubles of any kind. On the contrary, it is my recollection that throughout this period your interests were in the research which you were living in Peking for the purpose of carrying out among the Mongols and the peoples of Manchuria, and that your work had nothing whatever to do with student movements.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

NELSON T. JOHNSON.

Senator TYDINGS. May I see that letter just a minute; thank you.

Senator LODGE. What was the date of the letter?

Senator TYDINGS. It was April 3, 1950.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have here, also, a letter from T. L. Yuan to my attorneys, Arnold, Fortas & Porter. Dr. Yuan, who was then the director of the Chinese National Library, states that he recalls the strikes and demonstrations by Chinese students in December 1935, and that it is absurd to say that I was the instigator of Chinese student strikes. I also have a letter to the same general effect from Col. William Mayer, who was then military attaché, United States Embassy in China.

I ask permission to file these letters with the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. I think you had better read those exhibits, too, if they are not too long. I think you will throw light on the controversy here and we will all want to hear them, and it will save reading them in private.

Senator LODGE. Will you identify the T. L. Yuan?

Dr. LATTIMORE. At that time he was director of the Chinese National Library in Peiping, which is the equivalent of the Congressional Library here.

Senator LODGE. Has he an affiliation with the Nationalist Government?

Dr. LATTIMORE. The library was supported, as I recall, partly—

No; the building was partly from a grant by the Rockefeller Foundation; but the main support of the library came from the Chinese Government; that is, the Kuomintang Government.

Senator TYDINGS. While the doctor is getting a little breathing spell, Mr. Fortas, would you, as counsel, like to read that record for him? It will be all right.

Mr. FORTAS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

It is a letter to Arnold, Fortas & Porter, Ring Building, Washington, D. C.—

DEAR SIRS—

and it is on the letterhead of the National Library of Peiping, Peiping, China.

Senator TYDINGS. What is the date?

Mr. FORTAS. April 8, 1950.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. FORTAS (reading):

My attention has been called to one of Senator McCarthy's charges against Dr. Lattimore that the latter had instigated Chinese student demonstrations in December 1935. Since you are acting as Dr. Lattimore's attorney, I beg to give you the following statement for your reference:

The strikes and demonstrations by Chinese students in December 1935 were spontaneous manifestations against the autonomy of north China as engineered by Japanese militarists. The strikes were started in Peiping on December 9, 1935, and spread rapidly to other cities. Their slogans, if I remember correctly, included declarations of war against Japan and mobilization of every soldier for national resistance.

In that particular year Dr. Lattimore lived at 83 Ta Yuan Fu Hutung at Peiping serving as the editor of Pacific Affairs. In my capacity as director of the National Library of Peiping, I had many common interests with Dr. Lattimore and I saw him quite often. To the best of my knowledge, he was at that time engaged in the study of inner Asian problems and of the Mongolian language. Such being the case, it is absurd to say that he was the instigator of Chinese students' strikes.

The Japanese once charged that our student demonstrations were led by American missionary institutions and agitated by American missionaries. This charge was, of course without any foundation. Even if it were true, Dr. Lattimore had never been connected with any missionary institutions, a fact which was well known to his many friends in China.

Hoping the above information will be found helpful,

Very sincerely yours,

T. L. YUAN.

Senator TYDINGS. I hope that Dr. Lattimore had some association, at least, with some of the missionaries.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I remember, Senator, lecturing on inner Mongolia to the greatest of all mission institutions, the Yen Chen University, at about that time.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Doctor.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I also have a letter to the same general effect from Col. William Mayer—

Mr. FORTAS. Shall I read that, Senator?

Senator TYDINGS. Read it, please. You may read it for Dr. Lattimore.

Mr. FORTAS. It is on the letterhead of Headquarters First Army, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, Governors Island, New York 4, N. Y. It is dated April 3, 1950.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,

Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore 18, Md.

DEAR OWEN: Your letter of April 2 just reached me. As far as I can remember I have never head mention that you had any connection with the student agitation that was going on in Peking in the 1930's. There was certainly nothing in the local press and there was never a discussion of your name in connection with this activity. One point you might consider, if there ever had been the mention of your name in connection with the students that fact would have shown up in the Embassy and attaché reports to Washington. I do not believe there are any such reports.

Just for the record, I was away to Slam a few months in 1930 in connection with famine relief and in 1931 in Mongolia, also Manchuria and again in 1932 I was an observer at the unpleasantness in Shanghai, and then took a trip up the Yangtze Gorges. Despite these trips, however, I believe I most certainly would have heard of any rumors linking your name with the student agitation.

Isabel sends her best to you and Eleanor.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM MAYER,
Colonel, General Staff Corps,
Assistant Chief of Staff G-2.

Senator TYDINGS. Doctor, at any time you would like to rest for a minute, your statement is long, so do not hesitate to ask for it.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Thank you very much, Senator.

Second, Senator McCarthy refers to a trip that I made with Philip J. Jaffe and T. A. Bisson to Yen-an. I made such a trip. Some time in 1937 when I was residing in Peking, Mr. Bisson and Mr. Jaffe called on me. I had known Bisson slightly as a far-eastern student, when he was working for, I believe, the Foreign Policy Association in New York City. I had never before met Jaffe, but I knew of him as the sponsor of a new magazine, Amerasia, of which I had become a board member. I also knew that he was a wealthy manufacturer of Christmas cards. He wanted to make a trip to Yen-an, and he and Bisson wanted me to accompany them because of my knowledge of the area and the language. I was quite interested in going.

The Communists had taken over that area only about a year before. Several newspaper men had got in and every newspaper man in China was trying to get in. It was the biggest news story in China and all papers in Europe and America were eating it up. I had never had any contacts with any Communists in China and I felt that this trip might enable me to round out my knowledge of the country. Unfortunately, when we arrived in Yen-an the Communists had set up a public-relations system so that I was unable to secure direct or fresh news. It is true, as Senator McCarthy says, that Agnes Smedley was there at the time. So was Nym Wales, the wife of Edgar Snow. They were there when we arrived and remained there after we left.

There is one additional matter in the McCarthy statement which might possibly be construed as an attempt to connect me with the improper procuring or sending of information to the Soviet Union. It is an attempt to connect me with the Amerasia case. You will recall that in 1945 some of the people connected with that magazine, as well as John Service and Andrew Roth, were arrested on charges relating to the unlawful procurement and possession of Government documents. Service and Roth were not indicted.

I had been on the board of Amerasia from its founding in 1937 until 1941 when I resigned. I was never active as a board member. I consented to go on the board largely because I wanted to show that Pacific Affairs, the magazine of which I was editor, did not object to, but welcomed other periodicals in the same field.

It will be noted that I had no connection with Amerasia after 1941, 4 years before the arrests in the case that Senator McCarthy mentions.

Nevertheless, the Senator attempts on the most flimsy and transparent basis to insinuate, without saying so, that I had some connection with the Amerasia arrests in 1945. He refers to an affidavit which he has refused to supply to the effect that the night before Service, Roth and four codefendants in the Amerasia case were arrested, both Service and Roth were at my house.

The person or persons who made the alleged statements to the Senator are reported by him to have stated that they were present at my house at the time; that Roth, Service and I "spent a great deal of time by themselves, discussing certain papers or manuscripts," and that their actions seemed strange at the time. One of these persons was reported to have said that I subsequently told him that the three of us "had been declassifying secret documents."

This is one of those fanciful distortions that has a remote but perverted relationship to fact. On the Sunday prior to the arrests in the Amerasia case, Mr. Service and Mr. Roth were at my house. I arranged a small picnic at which, as I recall, we ate hamburgers which I cooked on the open fire. There were present, in addition to Roth and Service, Miss Rose Yardumian, now married and living, I believe, in England; Prof. Malcolm C. Moos of the Johns Hopkins University and his fiancée; and Prof. George F. Carter of the Johns Hopkins University and his wife. Nothing whatever strange was going on. Roth had brought with him the galley proofs of his forthcoming book, Dilemma in Japan, and asked me to read them. The material for this book had all been cleared by United States Navy security officers.

The papers or manuscript that the three of us were discussing, then, were nothing but the galley or script of a young author who wanted to get my opinion of his work. There were no Government documents involved, nothing was classified or declassified, and there was absolutely nothing unusual about the entire matter. The allegation that I stated that we were declassifying secret documents is as absurd as it is untrue.

Professor Moos has supplied me with a memorandum stating his recollection of the events of that picnic, and I ask leave to file this memorandum as part of this record.

Senator TYDINGS. That will be done. Do you want to read it? Who is the memorandum from?

DR. LATTIMORE. From Prof. Malcolm C. Moos, of the Johns Hopkins University.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Mr. Fortas, and read it.

Mr. FORTAS. This is a memorandum on the covering note of transmittal. The note of transmittal is on the letterhead of The Johns Hopkins University, Department of Political Science, dated April April 5, 1950, addressed to Mr. Owen Lattimore:

DEAR OWEN: Enclosed is a memorandum which states my recollections of the picnic at your home on June 3, 1945.

Sincerely yours,

MALCOLM MOOS.

The memorandum is headed "Memorandum from Malcolm Moos provided at the request of Owen Lattimore."

In response to your request, the following is my recollection of the events of Sunday, June 3, 1945, at your house:

Mr. Lattimore had met my fiancée and me on the Johns Hopkins campus one day either late in May or early in June and asked us to come out to his home for a picnic on Sunday, June 3. At the time I had known Mr. Lattimore approximately 6 months, during which time I had been associated with him as a colleague at the Johns Hopkins University. We arrived at the Lattimore home about 11 o'clock Sunday morning. When we were introduced to Mr. Service and Lieutenant Roth they were out in front of the Lattimore house working on some galley proofs. I did not examine the galley proofs, but Lieutenant Roth told me they were the galleys for a book he had written on Japan. He also told me that the book was to be published by Little, Brown Co., of Boston. Insofar as I am able to reconstruct the day I believe Roth and Service spent a good part of it working on the galleys. We spent the day quite informally enjoying the grounds about the home and looking at various objects the Lattimores had collected in their travels.

Dr. George Carter, his wife, and their two children arrived shortly after we did. The only time everyone present (there was also a young woman present whose name I do not recall) was together was around 2 o'clock when we all gathered in the woods a short distance from the Lattimore house to roast hamburgers over an open fire. Following the picnic, Roth and Service went back to reading galleys, and I recall Mr. Lattimore going out in back of his home with a scythe to cut down some weeds. I remember chatting with him for some time while he was engaged in this chore.

My wife and I do not recall seeing any documents during the day, but do remember that Roth and Service were preoccupied much of the time with galley proofs.

Late in the afternoon either George Carter, Mrs. Lattimore, or I called a cab from Towson, and somewhere around 4:30 or 5 p. m. the Carters with their two children, and my fiancée, and I left the Lattimore home. Roth and Service were still there at the time we left. In Towson my fiancée and I took a street-car for Baltimore and said good-by to the Carters.

DR. LATTIMORE. Third, Senator McCarthy tries to prove my Red taint by connecting me with Henry Wallace. He alleges that I accompanied Henry Wallace on a trip through the Far East in 1944; he insinuates that I had something to do with an alleged report that the then Vice President made upon his return from the trip; and he says that Mr. Wallace recommended to President Roosevelt in 1941 that my name be suggested to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek as his political adviser. The facts are these:

I first met Mr. Wallace in 1942 when, as the Generalissimo's adviser, I took General Hsiung Shih-hui, head of the Chinese Military Mission, to call on him as Vice President. I do not recall meeting him again until 1944, the year when I was appointed to Mr. Wallace's mission to Siberia and China in my official capacity as representative of the Office of War Information.

Senator TYDINGS. That is Colonel Donovan's old outfit; was it not?

Dr. LATTIMORE. That was after Colonel Donovan's original outfit had been divided into OWI and OSS.

Senator TYDINGS. I remember now.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I had no cloak and no dagger, sir.

Throughout the mission, not being a member of the diplomatic service, I was quite properly excluded from high-level interviews and discussions, except on one occasion when I served as supplementary interpreter.

I did not know about the existence of a Wallace report until it was mentioned in the newspapers, and certainly was not consulted about it.

I returned from the mission, as other members of the mission can testify, convinced that Mr. Wallace was not a man I would support politically. I opposed his candidacy for the Presidency.

My appointment as adviser to Chiang Kai-shek was in 1941. I did not then know Mr. Wallace and do not believe he recommended me. I believe that President Roosevelt consulted the late Isaiah Bowman, president of the Johns Hopkins University, whose opinion he valued highly.

Fourth, Senator McCarthy bases his charge that I am a Communist sympathizer on the fact that I was listed as a sponsor of a conference called by the Maryland Association for Democratic Rights. I confess that I remember nothing about this. I checked, however, with our local library, and I discover the following facts:

The conference was in 1940, not 1944—3 years before Senator McCarthy says its parent organization was declared subversive. It was held in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, under the chairmanship of Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, the highly respected Episcopal clergyman of that church, who had asked me to sponsor it. A long list of sponsors included William F. Cochran, Dr. Gertrude Bussey, Mrs. Henry Corner, Dr. Jonas Friedenwald, Mr. Sidney Hollander, and many other substantial citizens of Baltimore. I did not attend the conference and had no further connection with the organization. According to the records in the Enoch Pratt Free Library it held another conference in January 1941, after which it seems to have died.

I offer for your files a photostat of the program of the meeting which I sponsored.

Senator TYDINGS. May I see that? Just pause a moment, if you will.

Senator LODGE. What was the reason for having this conference?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I don't even remember, Senator. As I say, I had to look back in the files.

Senator TYDINGS. Was that your only contact with this organization?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Absolutely my only contact.

Senator TYDINGS. You never were present on any other occasion, except this one in the church?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, sir; I sponsored it at the invitation of a friend who asked me to sponsor it.

Senator TYDINGS. It will be filed in the record, as exhibit 72, unless the committee has some other questions.

Doctor, you may proceed.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Fifth, Senator McCarthy also mentions a secret letter which he says I wrote to my "boss," Joseph Barnes, when I worked for the Office of War Information, dealing with Chinese personnel in the New York office. Barnes was not my boss. We were exact equals, he being Deputy Director of the Overseas Branch of the OWI in charge of Atlantic operations while I had an equivalent title, in charge of Pacific operations, in the San Francisco office.

I do not recall writing a letter on the subject of Chinese personnel, but I may well have written one. At this time many delicate questions arose in connection with our foreign-born personnel. We afforded facilities to Allied governments to send out their own broadcasts, under their own names, but we also employed foreign-born personnel for Voice of America broadcasts, and we maintained a strict watch to see that these latter programs were under complete American control, not influenced by the politics of the home countries of those who worked for us as language experts.

This meant that they could not be in the pay of their own governments and at the same time act as the Voice of America. All of the Chinese employed by me in San Francisco, where we had a Chinese staff of 10 or 12 people, naturally had Kuomintang sympathies, or were Nationalist in their views, and our relations with the Chinese Consulate and Information Service were cordial—but we had to make sure with the Chinese, as we did with other nationalities, that they were only in our pay.

If I wrote the letter from which Mr. McCarthy has read quotations—which, if we can judge from his other quotations, are probably out of context—it was written in the knowledge that Mr. Barnes thoroughly understood this underlying principle and that it was therefore not necessary to spell it out.

I may well have been worried about Chinese personnel at this time. I was aware of rival factions seeking to organize the Chinese in America under the control of rival cliques within the Kuomintang. Naturally, this raised delicate questions for me, as all Chinese were aware of my recent close relations to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

The Chinese in our San Francisco office, like all other personnel, were under close supervision. In New York I remember a Mr. Chew Hong, whom Senator McCarthy mentions, because he had served in the American Army—on a language-teaching mission in Assam, if I remember rightly. I placed great reliance on Dr. Chi, an older man. I had known him in China where he was, as Senator McCarthy has said, an important figure in his own province. I had also known his son, during the early 1930's in New York, and in 1941 and 1942 in Chungking, where he held a high position in the Bank of China and was very much in the confidence of Dr. H. H. Kung, then Chinese Minister of Finance.

I have had no contact with either Dr. Chi or his son since the end of the war when Dr. Chi returned to China. I have heard that he remained in Peking, like most other university professors, after the Communists took over. I have also heard that his son has taken service under the new Communist-controlled government, like many other high officials formerly in the Kuomintang government.

I do not recall sending suggestions to New York to hire or fire any specific personnel, and I have been unable to obtain access to this letter. Senator McCarthy boasts of the fact, despite his use of the letter, that it is still classified as secret.

I do recall the New China Daily News of New York. I understand that it is now a fellow-traveling paper of the Communist government in Peking. At that time, however, it was not Communist, and the name "New China" had no significance at all. All kinds of restaurants and other Chinese enterprises in America are called New China.

I have here two letters from Philip E. Lillenthal, who was in charge of the Chinese desk in San Francisco, and Claude A. Buss, who succeeded me at San Francisco, describing my policy in handling Chinese personnel. I offer these for the record.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Fortas, do you wish to read them?

Mr. FORTAS. I shall, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. FORTAS. This letter, addressed to me, is dated March 31, 1950, from Palo Alto, Calif.:

Mr. ABE FORTAS,
Ring Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FORTAS: Mrs. Eleanor Lattimore has invited me to tell you of my reaction to Senator McCarthy's charge that Owen Lattimore sought, while Director of the Office of War Information in San Francisco during the war, to secure the dismissal of employees who were in sympathy with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. I have not yet seen a published report of Senator McCarthy's remarks that gives his precise language. It may nevertheless, be helpful to offer the following information, which is based on my experience while Chief of the Chinese Division in the San Francisco Office of War Information (OWI).

When Mr. Lattimore hired me as Chief of the Chinese Division in the San Francisco OWI, he did so on the explicit understanding that I would participate in the national effort to support the Chinese Government in its resistance to the common enemy, Japan. There was only one Chinese Government, and its head was Chiang Kai-shek. At no time did Mr. Lattimore—or anyone else in the San Francisco office—offer the slightest grounds for questioning the sincerity of his interest in strengthening the legal Government of China.

As Chief of the Chinese Division, I alone was responsible for employing and dismissing members within the Division. As far as I can recall now, only one Chinese member of the Division was dismissed between the time that I joined the OWI (January 1943) and the time that Mr. Lattimore departed for Washington. That individual was dismissed for two reasons: lack of ability, and refusal to adapt his personal life to the needs of the office. I do not believe that Mr. Lattimore was consulted before or after this man's dismissal; in any case, he was discharged on my initiative. The political views of members of the Chinese Division were at no time of interest to persons in authority over them; "security" was the proper province of other, qualified agencies of the Government, and it was assumed that unfit persons would not receive "clearance" by these agencies.

While he was in charge of the San Francisco office of the OWI, Mr. Lattimore made earnest and continuing efforts to work in close cooperation with representatives of the Chinese Government. He encouraged me to maintain informal contact with officials of the consulate general of China in San Francisco and to discuss our activities with them as far as security regulations would allow. On several occasions Mr. Lattimore invited Dr. Yui Ming, who was at that time head of the local Chinese News Service (an official agency of the Chinese Ministry of Information in Chungking), to attend OWI policy meetings. This privilege was extended, I believe, because of Dr. Yui's ability—ability which the Chinese Government recognized by subsequently promoting him to positions of increasing responsibility. On several occasions Dr. Yui expressed to me his confidence in Mr. Lattimore's sagacity, and his satisfaction that Mr. Lattimore, rather than someone with less understanding of the needs of the Chinese Government, was in charge of the OWI in San Francisco.

Please feel free to make whatever use you wish of the foregoing statements.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP EUGENE LILIENTHAL.

The next letter is from Claude A. Buss, professor of history at Stanford University, dated April 1, 1950, and addressed to me:

Mr. ABE FORTAS,

The Ring Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FORTAS: I am eager to place on the record some impressions which I have gained about Mr. Owen Lattimore during an association which has continued for almost 20 years.

Through conversations with him, and through careful study of his books and articles, I respect him as one of our most profound and original American thinkers about the situation in Asia. Whether he has seen fit to support or criticize any particular aspect of our policy in the Far East, I have always noted that this attitude has stemmed from his fundamental regard for our national welfare and our national interest. Whenever I have disagreed with him, I have never doubted the sincerity of his conviction that his ideas were best for the United States.

I liked to think that I worked closely with him in the Office of War Information. When I succeeded him as director of the San Francisco office, I found the office permeated with a spirit of contributing whatever we could to the winning of the war. We all—British, Chinese, and Americans—cooperated against a common enemy. No one was more jealous of American rights—wherever threatened—than Mr. Lattimore. Our broadcasts to China were dedicated to the help of our ally and it was deemed essential to stiffen the morale of the armies of the Kuomintang under Chiang Kai-shek. Most of our Chinese employees were naturally sympathetic with the Kuomintang, and the Chinese consul general and the head of the official Kuo Min News Agency were always accorded both the most cordial welcome at our office and the most liberal use of our facilities.

I hope that a careful study will be made of our policies and directives, because they will show an unswerving loyalty to the cause of American victory. The fundamental contribution which we could make—as we saw it at that time—was to strengthen the sources of power in China and to add to them, for our own sakes, with every means at our command.

Very sincerely yours,

CLAUDE A. BUSS,
Professor of History.

DR. LATTIMORE. Now, gentlemen, I believe that I have dealt with each and every one of the specific charges that Senator McCarthy has made against me relating to my alleged actions and activities. I have not, however, specifically discussed the Senator's statement that a witness will testify that I was a member of the Communist Party, a member over whom they had disciplinary powers. The Senator says that this alleged witness is trusted by the Department of Justice and has been used as a Government witness; that this witness has been a member of the Communist Party for a number of years; and that it is part of his work to distinguish between party members and fellow travelers.

I do not know the name of this alleged witness. With full and complete realization of the serious implications and consequences of what I am to say, having in mind the advice of counsel that a member of the Communist Party may presumably decline, on constitutional grounds, to state whether he is or has been a member of the Communist Party; realizing the possibility that perjured or mistaken testimony may be used for purposes of entrapment—whether innocently or not: I make to you on my solemn oath the following statement:

I am not and never have been a member of the Communist Party. I have never been affiliated or associated with the Communist Party. I have never believed in the principles of communism nor subscribed to nor advocated the Communist or Soviet form of government either within the United States; in China, in the Far East, or anywhere in the world. I have never consciously or deliberately advocated or participated in promoting the cause of communism anywhere in the world.

For many years, the situation in the Far East has been such that no person could study its problems without undertaking to acquaint himself as thoroughly as possible with the facts about the Communist position and plans in the various countries of that area. I have made it my business, both as a scholar and as a journalist, to accumulate as much information on this as possible, and the results of my studies have all been published.

For years, I have been doing my very best realistically to evaluate the position and prospects of the Communists in Asia. I have publicly stated the weaknesses of their position as I saw them, and also the points that added to their strength and that I feared would enable them to make progress with the people of Asia.

I have tried to avoid wishful thinking and self-delusion. I have tried as emphatically as I could, to warn the people of this Nation that the Communist threat in China and other countries of the Far East is very real indeed; that some of their appeals to the people of Asia are profound. I have tried to point out that it is our task, if we are to stem the advance of communism, to make an appeal to the people of Asia which is not merely equal to that of the Communists, but so far greater that these people would have no doubt as to who are their true friends.

For the purpose of acquiring the information upon which I based my studies and conclusions, I talked and corresponded with informed people all over the world, without regard to whether they were Communists, anti-Communists, politicians, or scholars. Since the middle thirties, communications even with scholars in Communist countries have been more and more cut off. All the more for that reason, like any other student who is worth his salt in this field, I have eagerly seized upon every opportunity to obtain information through chinks and crevasses in the wall of fear and suppression that communism builds around its informed people. For instance, while I was on the Pauley reparations mission to Japan in 1945 I made an effort to see some Japanese Communists because I thought their future activity in Japanese politics was going to be important, and succeeded in seeing Tokuda, one of their two top men. In 1947 I made an attempt to get to Outer Mongolia but was completely baffled. Way back in 1930, when I was about to return to China, I even paid a call on Earl Browder, hoping I might open up a lead to information about the Chinese Communists.

During the war, of course, on the instructions of Chiang Kai-shek, I had several conversations with Chou En-lai. None of these contacts, or attempted contacts, however, provided me with access to permanent or reliable information from within the iron curtain in which each individual Communist wraps himself.

I believe that the obvious refusal of Communists all over the world to supply information except through their own controlled press and publications extends to all scholars and research workers from the non-Communist world. It is possible, however, that in my particular case the barriers have been strictly maintained and tightly policed. For many years, I have been the subject of the usual type of Communist abuse and hostile Soviet action. I have been in Moscow only once. This was in 1936 on the visit that I have described. At this time I was given a transit visa. In 1937 I was denied a transit visa even although I merely wished to take my family out of China via the Trans-Siberian. In 1947, as I have related, my request for permission to visit Outer Mongolia was ignored.

In 1946 a newspaper friend of mine was refused permission to take with him into Russia a copy of Solution in Asia—one of the books that Senator McCarthy says is so pro-Communist that it proves that I am a Soviet agent.

In April 1949, a Soviet magazine, Voprosy Istorii, published an article called American Falsifiers on the Policy of the U. S. A. in Relation to the Chinese Revolution of 1925-27. Senator McCarthy, with his vast knowledge of Russian, should know that I was honored by being listed as one of the chief falsifiers. The article referred to me as a "learned lackey of imperialism."

The Daily Worker, in a review of my book Situation in Asia—which the learned Senator apparently believes is Communist propaganda—says that I go "completely off the beam" in my effort to explain political and social forces in Asia. The Daily Worker says that my approach to American-Soviet relationships "obscures the truth."

In an article published by the State Social and Economic Press of Moscow in 1935 there is a phrase denouncing me which Senator McCarthy unaccountably failed to use. The Soviet spokesman in that article said that "Mr. Lattimore's scholasticism is similar to Hamlet's madness."

I do not mean by this to belittle Senator McCarthy's talent for extreme statement distortion. His characterization of my writings, his summaries and quotations, are sufficiently perverse and twisted to make my Communist critics green with envy. Rather than prolong this statement by a discussion of the Senator's distortions, however, I have prepared three documents which I should like to file as part of the record. I will enumerate these first, if I may, Senator.

First, appraisals of my views by distinguished scholars who have read my books and articles, which perhaps the learned Senator McCarthy considered unnecessary.

Second, statements by various other persons who are familiar with me and my opinions.

Third, a meager sample of the distorted and inaccurate quotations of my works in which Senator McCarthy freely indulges.

Fourth, a few quotations from my own writings.

Those will be rather long, Senator, and rather than read them I offer them for the record.

Senator TYDINGS. Without objection, they will be inserted in the record without reading, as exhibit 73.

Dr. LATTIMORE. As a matter of fact, gentlemen, I am not unaccustomed to vigorous and even violent criticism of my works and views. The fact is that my comments and interpretations have always been so independent that I have in my time been criticized by Chinese, Japanese, Germans, Russians, and Mongols, as well as by intemperate American writers. The criticisms run all the way from calling me an arch-imperialist to calling me a Red. But I assure you that none of this criticism has prevented me from writing the truth as I see it. And not even Senator McCarthy's criticism will prevent me from stating the facts and my views with all the honesty and vigor of which I am capable. I feel that this is peculiarly my obligation at this time, and the obligation of every other student and specialist who has the Nation's interest at heart.

We face a crisis in Asia as well as in Europe. Our policy—or rather our lack of a united policy and of a strong, determined push to effectuate that policy—has resulted in the loss of China to the Communists, at least for the time being.

No man can state with absolute assurance what the future holds with respect to China. Various alternatives are apparent: First, some people still think it is conceivable that the Nationalist Government in Formosa may reconquer China from the Communists. Second, it is possible that a middle-of-the-road or democratic group in China, not necessarily part of the Nationalist Government—those whom General Marshall rightly called “a splendid group of men”—can still maintain their strong position in the confidence of the Chinese people unless we drive them completely into the hands of the Communists. Third, it is possible that the Chinese Communists will establish a regime which is Communist but substantially independent of the Soviet Union—what people loosely call Titoism. Fourth, it is possible that the Chinese Communist Government will be drawn more and more completely into the orbit of the Soviet Union and will become a satellite state.

There is one thing, and perhaps only one thing, that is perfectly clear. That is, that the fourth possibility—namely, complete and absolute absorption in fact of China by the Soviet Union—would be an unrelieved catastrophe for the United States and for the Chinese people. That means that our national policy must be to do everything that we can to bring about one of the other possibilities that I have stated; namely, to assist the Nationalist Government to reconquer China; to preserve China's independence of the Soviet Union even at the distasteful price of accepting a government of independent Chinese Communists; or to encourage the survival of the strong but unorganized middle group in China—not necessarily connected with the Nationalist Government—which might still be able to limit the power of the Communists and keep China on a road at least parallel to democracy in its internal life and its relations with the outside world.

It is, of course, not inevitable that the Government of the United States should sharply and completely choose one of these alternatives to the complete exclusion of the others. It is possible that policies might be adopted which would be based upon the encouragement of all three of these developments to checkmate the Soviet Union. This would, of course, require a nice and judicious decision as to the relative extent to which we would distribute assistance and encouragement in the three channels.

Now, gentlemen, as I have said, I know of nothing that would be more helpful to our Nation and our Government than full and free debate on this most difficult and vitally important problem. I would myself exclude the first alternative altogether. It is my view that the Nationalist Government in Formosa cannot hope to recapture China, and that the large commitment of United States resources in the Formosa adventure would not merely be wasteful but would be of positive assistance to the Soviet Union because it would make it possible and perhaps inevitable for the Chinese Communists to invite increased participation of the Soviet Union in the conflict.

Let me illustrate this. As the air assaults increase, with United States planes launched by the Nationalist forces from Formosa upon the mainland of China, there is danger—if it is not already a fact—that the Chinese Communist Government with the backing of many of the Chinese people, will invite the Soviet Union to establish air bases and to engage actively in the air war. I personally believe that if the Soviet Union establishes air bases in China they will not be dismantled when the Nationalist forces are defeated. To me this is an appalling prospect. To me, this would make it probable if not certain that the die is cast—that the Chinese Government and the Chinese people will be subordinated to the Soviet Union for a long time to come.

Accordingly it is my view that the major American effort must be in one of the other two directions; namely, to encourage a nationalism, even if it is Communist nationalism, capable of standing up to the Soviet Union and maintaining independence in its dealings with us, or to encourage in every possible way the conditions that will make possible the survival of a so-called third force, a democratic group within China, that can change the character of the government. It seems to me that our long-term objective should clearly be the latter, to build up conditions that favor a democratic group, including such elements of the Kuomintang as may be available and suitable. But it may be that in the short run, while working at this long-term objective, our first objective will have to be to avoid closing the trap on the Chinese so that they feel they have no alternative but Russia—even if it means temporizing with Titoism.

Now, gentlemen, my analysis of this may be partly or wholly wrong. But if anybody says that it is disloyal or un-American, he is a fool or a knave. But it is exactly this analysis which, I am sure, has provoked the current attack in which I have been called these preposterous and villainous names that have been uttered by Senator McCarthy.

Senator McCarthy, without, I am sure, knowing what he is about, has been and is the instrument or the dupe of a bitter and implacable and fanatical group of people who will not tolerate any discussion of China which is not based upon absolute, total, and complete support of the Nationalist Government in Formosa. They do not hesitate at—they even insist on—policies that potential allies of ours in India, Indonesia, Pakistan, and other countries will call ruthless imperialism. Their conclusion—that is, that the United States should put all of its eggs in the Nationalist Government's basket—may be right or wrong. I think it's wrong.

But I am sure that the methods of that faction of these people who are McCarthy's Edgar Bergen are wrong—as wrong as wrong can be. Their methods are to intimidate persons like me and even officials of the United States Government from expressing views that are contrary to their own. Their weapon of intimidation is McCarthy's machine gun: namely, accusation of disloyalty and traitorous conduct. I got a certain amount of wry amusement out of the fact that some of these people are acknowledged ex-Communists. Perhaps that status gives them a special right to criticize those of us who do not happen to be Communists, ex or otherwise. Certainly, it provides them with ideal training and unique skill for the kind of campaign of vilification and distortion that the so-called China lobby is conducting through the instrumentality of the Senator from Wisconsin.

I do not, by what I have said, want to indicate a feeling of despair about the possibility of democratic success in China. I think I know the Chinese people reasonably well. I have not only great affection but great admiration for them. Despite the relatively backward state of their country, the Chinese people have a strong and rugged sense of individualism and democracy. If they accept the restraints and repressions of communism, it will be because they feel that they have no alternative for national and individual survival. If they accept the iron dominion of world-wide communism, it will be because we, the democratic nations and peoples of the world, have failed. It will be because we, by reason of ignorance or incompetence, have not presented them with an effective choice.

To date, that is exactly what has happened. We have failed in China. Senator McCarthy does me the honor of saying that I am the architect of this policy which has failed. Let me point out that even if this were so, it would not be disloyalty. It would mean that I am a poor architect. The fact of the matter, however, is quite the contrary.

The fact is that I have never held a position in the United States Government in which I could make policy. The fact is that I have been very little consulted by those who do make policy—before Pearl Harbor, during the war, or since the war. I think I can fairly claim—with great regret—that I am the least consulted man of all those who have a public reputation in this country as specialists on the Far East.

Senator McCarthy has stated that United States Far Eastern policy, and especially China policy, has followed my recommendations "step for step." The record shows the exact opposite to be true. Before the war, I was in favor of a much tougher policy toward Japan than the State Department was willing to follow. During the war, I warned that we must be prepared for a period of very rapid change throughout Asia. No attention was paid to this warning. The last chapters of my book, Solution in Asia, published in 1945, a few months before the end of the war, are a crowded catalog of unaccepted recommendations.

Since the war, my recommendations have had equally little influence on the State Department. The most recent example of this is my memorandum of last August to the State Department committee headed by Ambassador Jessup, whom Senator McCarthy has called "a Lattimore front." In this I warned that we cannot expect to succeed with little Chiang-Kai-sheks where we failed with the big Chiang Kai-shek. But we are still supporting a little Chiang Kai-shek in South Korea and we have since taken on another one in Indochina. I warned that we cannot coerce China by cutting off trade; but by our feeble attitude toward the blockade of Shanghai we have allowed trade to be virtually cut off. I warned that by indecision in recognizing the facts of life in China we were heading for another set-back in Asia without even the compensating advantage of hampering Russia's ability to maneuver in Europe. That is exactly what has happened. I warned that reliance on Japan as an instrument of American policy is a bad bet, but Japan is still our most risky bet in Asia. I warned that countries in the Far East must not be made to suspect that the real aim of the United States is to use them against Russia, but all of them are now convinced that this is just what our real aim is.

My recommendations may be right or wrong. I may be accused of having given bad advice by anyone who disagrees with my opinions. What I cannot be accused of is advice that has influenced the policy of the United States in the Far East. I wish that I had in fact had more influence. If I had, I think that the Communists would not now control China.

The very foundation of my views toward China is a firm belief that the United States and the democratic nations of the world—if they are willing to abandon the mistaken policies of the past and face the problems of China and the Far East realistically—can help to bring about the establishment of strong democratic governments in the Far East that will work harmoniously with the western powers. Despite Senator McCarthy, my books and articles witness that my basic beliefs are the absolute antithesis of the Marxist doctrine. The Communist line applied to Asia may be easily summed up: Capitalism is in decay and, because it is in decay, the European empires are falling apart; capitalist nations in Europe and America are incapable of any nonimperialist relation with these former colonies which can, therefore, look for hope only to the Soviet Union.

In my view, this is nonsense. I believe that both capitalism and political democracy have immense vitality and adaptability. If they fail to survive, I believe it will be because of dogmatic or uninformed men who insist on policies of coercion, repression, and inequality—not because of inherent defects in capitalism and democracy.

But I want to emphasize with all my heart that we ourselves, if we are so foolish as to destroy our own democracy, can make the Marxist dream come true. We ourselves can cause the decay of capitalism and democracy. The sure way to do this is to permit the destruction of the basic wellspring from which capitalism and democracy derive their vitality: namely, freedom of research, freedom of speech, and freedom for men stoutly to maintain their diverse opinions.

I say to you, gentlemen, that the sure way to destroy freedom of speech and the free expression of ideas and views is to attach to that freedom the penalty of abuse and villification. If the people of this country can differ with the so-called China lobby or with Senator McCarthy only at the risk of the abuse to which I have been subjected, freedom will not long survive. If officials of our government cannot consult people of diverse views without exposing themselves to the kind of attack that Senator McCarthy has visited upon officers of the State Department, our governmental policy will necessarily be sterile. It is only from a diversity of views freely expressed and strongly advocated that sound policy is distilled. He who contributes to the destruction of this process is either a fool or an enemy of his country. Let Senator McCarthy take note of this.

Now, gentlemen, I shall be glad to answer any questions that you may care to ask.

Senator TYDINGS. Ladies and gentlemen, I will have to request you, in line with the rules of the Senate, please not to make any demonstrations either pro or con about any proceedings before the committee.

I will ask that we take a recess for 2 minutes to give everybody a chance to rise while the committee confers.

(A brief recess was taken.)

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will come to order.

Mr. Fortas, before Dr. Lattimore left the room I noticed at the conclusion of his mimeographed remarks that there are several excerpts from letters included with this exhibit which reflect the views of outstanding scholars and experts, and so on. I suppose you want those incorporated in the record immediately following Dr. Lattimore's testimony.

Mr. FORTAS. Senator, those were offered in the course of Dr. Lattimore's remarks, and they were received in evidence and are now in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. There is nothing more that you want of a documentary nature put in the record than has already been put in?

Mr. FORTAS. That is correct, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. We will relax a moment until Dr. Lattimore returns. He will be in in a minute or two.

The committee will come to order. Please be seated, those who have seats.

Senator Green, have you any questions to ask the witness?

Senator GREEN. I have no questions to ask the witness, but I have one suggestion to make. Toward the end of his statement, when he summarized the Communist line as applied to Asia, he should make it clear, so that it can't be misquoted, that he is stating the Communist line—that which starts with "Capitalism is in decay, and because it is in decay * * *." I am afraid that summary will be quoted as your summary, Dr. Lattimore, and if you would put in the words "It is that Capitalism * * *" or something like that in your statement, I think it would prevent that distortion of the statement.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Thank you very much indeed. In view of the kind of dirty tricks that have been used in quoting from my books, I think I should take that precaution.

Senator GREEN. Yes; but you ought not to make it easy.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon, have you any questions?

Senator McMAHON. No questions. I may have some later.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, again, as I have said before, I have had no opportunity to independently investigate this matter. I have no conclusions one way or the other based upon any preconception of this matter. I do assume that an investigation is an investigation, and that inquiries should be made into various fields for the clarification of any things that have been said, and I therefore have some questions to ask Dr. Lattimore. I have a few questions of my own that have occurred to me since I have seen his statement, and then I asked Senator McCarthy if he had any questions which he thought should be asked of Dr. Lattimore, and he said he did, and furnished me some questions, so at a later time I will submit those questions on behalf of Senator McCarthy as a matter of exploring certain fields that have been covered, or referred to.

Dr. Lattimore, in connection with your studies and your lifelong associations in the Orient and other places in the world, I take it that you have come up against Communist movements and Communist agitation at various places. Is that true? I mean, would you say that you have?

Dr. Lattimore, I am not suggesting one way or the other on that any implication, but you have come in contact with Communist activities?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, the way I would put it is this: I have worked in countries and situations where communism and Communists were present. I was always in the position of dealing either primarily or exclusively with those who were in opposition to the Communists, because, owing to the conspiratorial nature of the way in which Communists operate, it was always exceedingly difficult for me to get into touch with the Communists at all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. From your associations with these groups, or your independent investigation, then, I take it that you have become familiar with the methods—that is to some degree, at least—used by the Communists in their activities. Would you say that that is a fair statement?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have become familiar to this extent, that in non-Communist territory I have seen Communist propaganda, and I have been able to know what the Communists were advocating at any particular moment. But the only time in Asia, apart from Asiatic Russia, that I have been in a territory controlled by Communists, so that I could see them actually operating, was on that short trip to Yenan in 1937.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What is your opinion as to the methods that communism, as controlled from Moscow, operates in its attempt to get into positions of power in other countries? I mean is it, to make that more clear, perhaps, necessarily military occupation, by infiltration, is it by propaganda, is it by conspiracy? What would you say is your impression as to the means and methods which communism has been using, communism as directed from Moscow and stimulated from Moscow, for the advancement of its purposes?

Dr. LATTIMORE. In my experience, which is primarily in China, Senator, the Communists certainly had a good deal of success in getting at student groups in the various Chinese universities. But my experience over the years in China and Mongolia indicates that in general their attempts at infiltration were pretty unsuccessful, and that the main factor in the triumph of communism in China was not the skill or wiliness of the Chinese Communists but rather the almost unbelievably gross mistakes of those who previously held power in China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Within your experience, has it come to your knowledge or your belief in China that Russia has been attempting for a number of years to extend Communist influence in China, whether it is Inner or Outer Mongolia or any one of the other provinces of Chinese territory?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, you don't need to ask an expert whether the Russians were interested in the progress and eventual triumph of communism anywhere in Asia. The record in China is a rather mixed one, and appears to indicate that in the 1920's there was a great deal of direct Russian activity, Russian agents, followed by a period in the 1930's when, largely for geographical reasons, there was very poor liaison between the Russians and the Chinese Communists, and the Chinese Communists developed methods of their own, which were largely simply capitalizing on the mistakes of their opponents; and that now, since the civil war in China and since the Communists have a common frontier with Russia, there is a steadily increasing effectiveness of Russian and Chinese liaison.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is it your opinion that the leaders of the Communist movement in China today, that is the leaders of the Communist Army and the leaders of the Communist Government as it has been set up in China, are basically—that is, among those who control the movement at the top—Moscow inspired or Moscow trained?

Dr. LATTIMORE. There is no doubt whatever that the top leaders and far down below the top leaders in the Chinese Communists are devoted loyally to Moscow. A great many, in fact I think the topmost, leaders of the Chinese Communists do not happen to be Moscow trained, but they are nonetheless deeply loyal to Moscow.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How long has this been the situation in the Communist movement in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Do you mean how long have they been primarily devoted to Russia?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, how long has it been since the Chinese Communist leaders have followed the Moscow party line, either through loyalty, devotion, or training?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, you are getting into questions of detailed Communist expertise, expertness on the Communist question where I must confess my qualifications do not carry me. I have never specialized in Communist doctrine. My work has been primarily field work in which I was basing my own opinions on observation of situations and men acting in situations.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Lattimore, may I assure you that I am not approaching this from any assumption that you are or that you are not sympathetic with any political movement.

Dr. LATTIMORE. It is not a question of sympathy, Senator. It is a question of knowledge.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am asking you as a man who has devoted a great deal of his life to the Orient, and who I think has a great deal of cumulative knowledge about Oriental situations, and I am concerned in this question with how long has the general Communist movement in China that ripened into the guerrilla warfare or organized warfare been led by those who are completely loyal to, or follow, the Moscow party line? Did it begin about 1936? Did it begin in the 1920's? Did it begin in the 1940's, so far as information that you may have picked up is concerned?

Dr. LATTIMORE. My general understanding, sir, is that Mao Tse-tung, the present boss of party matters among the Chinese Communists, only really came to top control about 1937; that is, that prior to that there were a great many factional disputes among the Chinese Communists themselves; that since then he has been, and so far as I can see, since then the liaison of thinking, at least, between the Chinese Communists and Russians has been pretty close, as close as it could be.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that he, at least, as the leader, the present leader and the leader since about 1936 of this Communist activity in China, has been completely in sympathy with the Moscow-dominated Communist movement? Would you say that that is the general belief in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I would say that that is the general belief among American experts on China. I haven't been in China since 1944—no, 1945—so I am not closely in touch with the development of current thinking among the Chinese in China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you say that when you were in China at that time, the last time, either 1944 or 1945, that that was the current belief, let's say on the street, for want of a better term, about the leader of the Chinese Communist movement?

Dr. LATTIMORE. When I was last in China talking with Chinese, who, of course, were non-Communist and anti-Communist Chinese, the general assumption was that the top leadership of the Chinese Communists would keep in step with the Russians, but that factions might develop which would be hostile to the close Russian line.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was that at the time Mr. Wallace, who was then Vice President, was over on his mission?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Mr. Wallace was over there during the war, and certainly I should say that was the prevailing belief among top Chinese in Chungking.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was the time that you were assigned to him as a member of the OWI in your official capacity; is that correct?

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is right, but I cannot speak authoritatively on that, since I was not present at his top-level interviews with Chinese personnel.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That leads me to this question, Dr. Lattimore. Do you believe that at that time, or did you believe at that time, that the so-called Communist movement in China was simply an agrarian revolution for the purpose of redistributing the land in China, or did you believe at that time, and do you think, that there was ample evidence to indicate, that it was a Communist movement in complete sympathy with the communism as directed from Moscow? I am talking about the Russian-dominated communism.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I have never believed, nor have I been able to find in my writings anywhere that I stated, that Chinese communism was merely agrarian radicalism. In a book that I published in 1932, I believe I recall offhand that I dismissed the Chinese Communists as being mainly something like the Peiping rebellion of a century ago, but soon after that I rapidly began to modify my opinion. What I have said about the Chinese Communists repeatedly is that the agrarian problem was the main problem in China, and the Chinese Communists were profiting by exploiting it, but I have never been guilty of the kind of political oversimplification that I can quote here from one of Mr. McCarthy's—Senator McCarthy's—informants; one of Senator McCarthy's experts on communism appears to be Miss Freda Uteley, and I quote from her book, China at War, published in 1939, page 254:

Moreover, the Chinese Communist Party long ago abandoned the dream of establishing its own dictatorship. Now that its social basis is amongst the peasants of the most backward provinces in China, and amongst the middle-class youth and the liberal reformers, its aim has genuinely become social and political reform along capitalist and democratic lines. The Chinese Communists have become radicals in the English nineteenth-century meaning of the word.

That is one of Senator McCarthy's Communist experts.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I would like to ask you this, whether or not it was not apparent in China and other places that it was the desire of the Communist Party to create the impression, by way of lulling the rest of the world into security, perhaps, that this was simply an agrarian revolution, and that it was not a Moscow-dictated revolution. Wouldn't you say that that was a part of the Communist propaganda, to create that impression in order to minimize the so-called danger of Communist expansion?

Dr. LATTIMORE. It may well have been, Senator, but I never concerned myself primarily with that. What always struck me as typical and important in dealing with political situations in China was that these problems existed which the Communists were exploiting. My belief was that the Kuomintang was in a much better position to deal with the same problems, and that if only the Kuomintang would put in some comparatively modest and mild reforms it would completely take the steam out of the Chinese Communists, and that is what not only I, but so far as I know every American expert attached to various parts of the Chinese Government was always urging over there.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What reforms did you advocate that the Kuomintang put into effect and failed to put into effect that the Communists put into effect in the territories which they took over in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. One of the obvious reforms which has been mentioned in a number of books was that the Nationalist Government itself passed a law limiting land rent to 37½ percent. It never enforced this law. Rents were being collected at the rate of 60, 70, and even more percent.

Senator TYDINGS. Of the capital?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, sir; of the annual crop.

In a number of areas into which the Communists infiltrated all that they did at first was not to expropriate land, but merely to enforce the land law which the Government did not enforce, and I and others pointed out to people in the Chinese Government that they simply could not afford to let this kind of thing go on, that they must get going with reforms that would actually extend into the life of the people, and not simply remain on paper at Chungking.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then is it a fact that when the Communists came into control of the territory in China they reduced taxes and enlarged the liberties of the people?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I have never been in a Chinese territory at the moment that the Communists came in and took over. Judging from the literature of the subject, they have practiced varying methods at various times. At times they have adopted simply reduction of rent, and at other times they have resorted to outright expropriation. You must always expect a Communist to act with a certain amount of opportunism in things like that. It depends on how much they think they can get away with at the moment.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now the Russian Government, or the Soviet, either is in the process of negotiation or has negotiated, rights in several of the specific ports in the territory of China; that is, continental China, is that correct?

Dr. LATTIMORE. So I understand, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And these negotiations have been carried on with the present so-called Chinese Communist government. Does that indicate to you that Russia, or the Soviet government, is moving into a comparatively permanent establishment or seizing a permanent hold on the economy of the Communist government in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. As I indicated in my statement, Senator, wherever the Russians get a foothold of that kind I think they are extremely unlikely to be dislodged easily. I therefore think that it is a great tragedy that they are able to make those advances under the cover of a popular feeling in China, which the Chinese Communists are able to exploit, that this is necessary in order to defend China from the assaults of American-supplied planes and the navy of Chiang Kai-shek.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is it your view, as a result of your experience in China, that the Chinese Communist revolution was successful as a result of the Chinese people themselves, or as a result of Russian support in one way or another of the Chinese cause?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think, Senator, that I have more than once made it clear in print that I do not think that the triumph of the Communists in China was due to either of those processes, primarily; that is, it was not due to the Chinese people electing to follow the Communists, nor was it due to the Russians. It was in the main a negative phenomenon, that the people became so totally disillusioned and disgusted with the Kuomintang government that they backed away from it and in backing away from it found themselves in the arms of the Communists.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, Dr. Lattimore, did you support in 1945 and 1946 or 1947 the theory that a coalition government should be formed in China, and that Communist representatives should be taken into the Government in important offices along with officers of the so-called Chinese Nationalist Government?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I did, sir. In that respect I very closely followed and agreed with the opinions formed by General Marshall, summarized in his report to the President of January 1947.

If I may summarize, it appears to me that General Marshall went out to China and, with the quick eye of the magnificent strategic analyst that he is, he understood that he was in a situation in which salvation was impossible and salvage was all that could be hoped for. He therefore endeavored to salvage as much of the situation as he thought was possible with the resources of the National Government and the support of the United States Government. I do not think any man could have done an abler job. I am very sorry that he failed. Incidentally, I supported him wholeheartedly in his policy at that time when the Communists were vilifying him as a crook and a double dealer.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And that was about the same recommendation that Mr. Henry Wallace made when he came back?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I don't know, sir, what recommendations Mr. Wallace may have made when he came back. I do know that at that time, or during the war years in Chungking and certainly about that time, many Americans in our diplomatic and military service were becoming alarmed about the situation in the National Government of China. They were already afraid that the rot had gone on so far that that Government would not be able to capture the imagination of the people at the end of the war. They were already making warnings; you can read some of those warnings clearly set down in the State Department's white paper. I am terribly sorry that they were right, but the fact is that they were right. They were intelligence officers doing exactly what the military and diplomatic services required of them, namely, finding out what the score was, instead of indulging in wishful thinking, and some of them I regret to say have been politically crucified for doing an honest job of work.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It was at about this time that Secretary Marshall made his trip over there and his recommendations that the United States began to withdraw its aid from Nationalist China. Wasn't it about that time—that is, that it began to lessen its aid and began the policy of completely pulling out of China, which eventuated here a few months ago?

Dr. LATTIMORE. As I recall, Senator, General Marshall went out at the end of 1945 after the war was already over. He began to negotiate on a basis of compromise and reform that would not only keep the National Government in power but strengthen its power. So far as I recall, there was no sudden cutting off of aid to Chiang Kai-shek.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Wasn't there a period of about 10 months when it was our announced policy that we would not further aid the National Government of China, and then we changed it and for a time sent in some trickles of supplies to Nationalist China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. As I recall, Senator, there was a period of about 10 months in which there was a cessation of issuing export licenses, which was not called an embargo, from the United States, but during the same period very large supplies of American equipment were made available from dumps in the Pacific islands, India, and so forth. These included especially motor vehicles which were of great value to the Chinese Government, and according to the testimony of our top military representatives in China, the Nationalist armies were never defeated for lack of ammunition or supplies.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And during this period the Chinese Communists had had turned over to them the captured Japanese supplies which the Russians had captured upon the surrender of the Japanese troops up in Manchukuo, or those territories, is that correct?

Dr. LATTIMORE. There are two aspects to that question, Senator. One is that of course the Russians turned over supplies. At the same time, all supplies surrendered to Americans inside the Great Wall were turned over to the Chinese Government, and I seem to recall a statement by General Marshall to the effect that the Japanese arms which we supplied exceeded in quantity those which the Russians supplied.

Moreover, the Russians seemed for once to have been fairly clever in Manchuria; that is, instead of indulging in the cruder kind of Communist tactics, they turned over their arms largely simply to the village people. The National Government then made one—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I ask—

Dr. LATTIMORE. Of its usual mistakes. It trusted these people, and they lined up with the Communists.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Isn't it a fact that the Russians had a policy of organizing revolutionary groups in villages under leaders, turning over the arms and equipment so that those revolutionary groups would go out from those small villages and territories and capture some more territory?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I do not know how they worked that in Manchuria, Senator. The Russian policy, I should think, would be in some cases simply to distribute arms and cause confusion, and in other cases to distribute arms in a more organized way. One can certainly expect the Russians to do everything they could to capitalize on the situation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At about what time did you first become convinced that it was futile for us to continue aid to Chiang Kai-shek or the Nationalist Government of China, and that we should pull out?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think, Senator, that as early as 1945, the end of the war with Japan, I was very much afraid that a resort to civil war on the part of the Nationalist Government in order to restore unified control over China would end in disaster and end in a more Communist situation rather than a less Communist situation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. "Resort to civil war"—would you amplify that a little bit? You said "a resort to civil war by the Nationalist Government of China." Do you mean organization of revolting groups within China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No; I mean the insistence that all armed forces in China must surrender to the National Government without negotiation; that all the people everywhere in the part of China liberated from Japanese control must submit to the orders of the National Government, instead of being allowed to elect their representatives to the National Government, and so on.

I was very much afraid that any authoritarian attitude of that kind would start driving people into the arms of the Communists.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Were you familiar with the at least alleged attitude of Chiang Kai-shek that you could not do business with the Communists, you couldn't trust them, and if they got their heads into the tent the camel would soon be clear in and take the tent over?

I have never met Chiang Kai-shek. I don't know what his personal attitude is, but it is generally reported that that has been his firm attitude, that the Communists cannot be trusted, that there can be no dealing with the Communists because they do not deal on a basis of keeping their word or keeping their promises, and that it was futile and fatal to China to attempt to deal with the Communists and take them into the Government. Were you familiar with that attitude?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I wasn't Chiang Kai-shek's political adviser for a year and a half for nothing, Senator, and I was thoroughly familiar with that attitude and I agreed with him. I didn't think that it would be possible to settle anything in China by getting the generalissimo and the top Communists into one room and writing out an agreement. It seemed to me that the only thing that would strengthen the position of the generalissimo was not an agreement of that kind, but going to the people of China with some kind of a program that would bring their support around behind him, instead of driving them into the arms of the Communists. If he had had enough of the people on his side, he could have negotiated with anybody in perfect security. But when his subordinates were committing excesses of corruption and brutality that were driving people into the arms of the Communists, he was doomed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Weren't there excesses of brutality and corruption on the part of the Communists recorded in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. There were considerable excesses of brutality on the part of the Communists, and in varying periods and varying geographical regions. I have mentioned something about that problem in a book of mine published in 1944 called The Making of Modern China. However, it seems to be the general opinion of American observers that the Communists have been much freer of corruption than the National Government. Both sides have resorted to massacre and that kind of thing, but the Communist government has, by general testimony, been more honest.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then let me get your opinion straight. I understood you a while ago to say that you supported the policy of bringing the Chinese Communists into the government along with the Nationalists in a coalition government.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then I understood you to say that you were familiar with Chiang Kai-shek's attitude that you could not do business with the Communists, and that you supported that policy. I think probably there is a very plausible explanation for it, but would you amplify that? How can you reconcile the two ideas?

Dr. LATTIMORE. The point is this, Senator, that up to the time that I resigned as Chiang Kai-shek's political adviser, namely the end of 1942, there was still time for preliminary reforms. But by the time that General Marshall was negotiating in China most of the opportunity had been lost. Millions of people had already gone over to the Communists. And if the Communists had the support of X million people, you had to negotiate with them to that extent, not because they were honest, not because they were Communists, but because they had that amount of support, and from then on the only way in which to salvage the situation was to get going in China something that had never existed before, but at least enough of the beginnings of parliamentary democracy so that the people could begin to change their own leadership. That was the only way to get at the people behind the Communists.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And it became apparent to you at that time, did it not, that if Chiang's forces of government continued to deteriorate, he would eventually be defeated in China, is that correct?

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And a substantial factor in Chiang being able to sustain himself at least during a certain period after the war was the aid he was getting from America. Was that an important factor?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think, Senator, that would be difficult to prove. It could be argued that reliance on American support made the worst of the people who surrounded Chiang Kai-shek unwilling to concede reforms. There is also the fact that so many of the American-equipped and American-trained forces surrendered to the Communists en masse with their American arms, so I think it would be very difficult to argue that the factor of American support was what enabled Chiang to survive as long as he did.

I mean, I think the American support was in the end destructive of him, rather than supportive of him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, of course, we did finally pull clear out of active aid to China, and the policy was announced early this spring or late in the winter of withdrawing support. Today would you say that the mainland of China is quite completely under the dominion and control of the Communist government of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I should say that today the mainland of China is so completely under the control of the Communists that it will be impossible for Chiang Kai-shek to come back from Formosa and recover the mainland. There will, however, probably for years, continue to be a certain amount of internal disturbance on the mainland of China, but the possibility that that internal disturbance could be politically captured by Chiang is not a good political bet.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When did you conclude that the fall of Chiang Kai-shek on the mainland of China was inevitable?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I should say—I am trying to see how closely I can date this—early in 1947, soon after General Marshall's return from China.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to know what the pleasure of the committee is. It is now 1 o'clock. What would be your idea about the continuance of the hearing?

Senator McMAHON. Come back at 2:30.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green, is 2:30 satisfactory to you?

Senator GREEN. Entirely. I would also in that connection like to ask whether this is an investigation of disloyalty?

Senator TYDINGS. How about you, Dr. Lattimore? Would that meet with your convenience?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I am completely at your disposal.

Senator LOXIE. How long would you plan to run this afternoon?

Senator TYDINGS. It would depend a good bit on how much the committee wants to question Dr. Lattimore.

I would like to say this, that this committee is set up to investigate disloyalty in the State Department. I take it that Dr. Lattimore has never been an employee of the State Department, but he has had an auxiliary connection with it and been paid by the State Department while he was on a Presidential mission. For that reason I think we should lean over backward lest we be charged, as we have, with not wanting to bring in everything that is pertinent. But my colleagues have the right to ask any questions they want. I have no more to do with this committee than they have, but I would like to point out, if I might, with all good will, that our primary mission here is to find out whether the charges made against Dr. Lattimore are true or false, to wit, that he is the head Red spy in American and to wit, that he is a Communist; and I think we ought to confine ourselves more to that phase of it. That is what we were created to find out, rather than to go into these opinions, which, if I may express my own opinion, seem a bit extraneous to the inquiry. However, that is just my opinion. I have no control over the questions.

I am going to suggest, therefore, that when we do meet we try to get back on the ball a little bit more so that we can get through with him.

While we are at it, Dr. Lattimore, Senator McCarthy told me yesterday that he had some witnesses that he hopes to get before the committee. He said he is going to notify me Tuesday morning of the names of these witnesses, so I may issue subpoenas to bring them here. I do not know whether these are witnesses who are going to appear against you or someone else, but you are invited—you and your attorneys—to be present at all these hearings where we have these witnesses, in case your name is involved.

Senator LONGE. For the purpose of your own plan, I would like to say that I presume that Dr. Lattimore will be available for the next few weeks for questioning in executive session. Is that not right?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am entirely at the disposal of the committee, Senator.

Senator LONGE. I think most of the cross-examination—in fact all of the cross-examination—that I will want to do will be in executive session. There will, however, be a few questions that I would like to ask him today on the record, which will take only 3 or 4 minutes.

Senator TYDINGS. After we have concluded our hearings dealing with those persons who have been openly accused and who obviously ought to have a right to openly defend themselves, it is the hope of the chairman that the committee will sustain him in the point of view that we will have the remainder of our sessions in executive session. However, if names are mentioned publicly, charged with any offense, we feel we must give them the opportunity to deny these charges publicly. But I think we have gone far enough in it now to know that this is not the wisest way to make this inquiry, and after these people who have been accused all have had their opportunity to file written statements or to come personally before the committee in open session, I am very hopeful that we can get along with our business by taking the circus attitude away from this and go on with our real investigation of disloyalty in the State Department.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, because there may be some implied criticism of my questions—

Senator TYDINGS. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Of Dr. Lattimore in what you said, I want to call your attention to the fact that this is an investigation. I don't approach Dr. Lattimore or any other witness with any predetermination for either side. But I do believe that as long as this issue has been drawn, so long as certain allegations have been made, so long as Dr. Lattimore is here, that it is not only in the interest of fairness to him but to the whole investigation that he be given the fullest opportunity to canvass any matters of allegations that either Senator McCarthy has canvassed or that he has canvassed. It is in that spirit that I am approaching him. I want to find his views.

The allegation is made that he is an insidious fellow. I am not approaching it from that standpoint or from any other standpoint. But I think that bearing on that question very pertinently are his views and opinions and the whole background. I think it is extremely pertinent and it would be my opinion that Dr. Lattimore would welcome an opportunity to express himself on these things. I am happy to give him an opportunity by way of questioning, and to also answer questions in my own mind.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say to my colleague I implied no criticism. It was really just an attempt, as I saw it, to get back a little more on the beam. But every Senator is the keeper of his own responsibilities under this resolution, and certainly I can be just as wrong in my own opinions as any other member of the committee. I stated it for whatever it is worth.

We will take a recess until 2:30 this afternoon.

(Whereupon, at 1:05 p. m., a recess was taken until 2:30 p. m. of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will come to order.

While we wait for Senator Hickenlooper to return and continue his examination of Dr. Lattimore, Senator McMahon, of Connecticut, a member of the committee, tells me he desires to ask one or two questions.

Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. Dr. Lattimore, you mentioned, in the course of your testimony, a man named Kohlberg.

Dr. LATTIMORE. K-o-h-l-b-e-r-g.

Senator McMAHON. Who is Kohlberg?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I don't rightly know. He pretends to be an expert on me, but I do not want to pretend to be an expert on him, or his origin, previous history, and so on. All I know is that he is a man that has had it in for the Institute of Pacific Relations for a long time, has attacked it, and has, over the years, built up a long story of allegations against me, and I found it curious and interesting that in Senator McCarthy's charges, so many of the charges were taken parallel, word for word from charges that Kohlberg had made, that had proved to be wild allegations years ago.

Senator McMAHON. Have you ever met him?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Never met him, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Have you any mutual acquaintances that you know of?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Well, some of the people connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations must have met him personally. I mean, he was at one time a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and he conducted this proxy fight in the Institute of Pacific Relations. So, other people connected with the institute must have met him.

Senator McMAHON. Well, as far as you know, has he been in business in the Far East, has he any far eastern interests?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir, as far as I know; he used to be an importer of lace from the coast of China. That is an industry in China in which child labor is very extensively employed, and it provided a cheap commodity for importation into this country.

Senator McMAHON. Does he live in China, or has he lived in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I know that he has been on visits to China. I doubt if he has ever lived in China. I doubt very much if he knows a word of Chinese.

Senator McMAHON. Now, who is this man Goodwin that you talked about?

Dr. LATTIMORE. He is a man, sir, who has connections with the Chinese Nationalist Government—the—what is it, now—there is a representation here of the National Resources Commission of the Chinese Government; and, there is also a Chinese Information Service. He is connected with all of those.

Senator McMAHON. Is he a lawyer by profession, do you know?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I don't know, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Have you ever met him?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, not to my knowledge.

Senator McMAHON. You made some point of the fact that he was retained at a salary that you gave as twenty-some-odd-thousands, and corrected it to 36,000.

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. What is his importance? Why do you refer to him in your testimony?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Because I understand that he is registered as a lobbyist, connected with a foreign power, and therefore has to register in that way; and, I understand that he is connected with Kohlberg and various other people who have been conducting this campaign to secure all-out aid to General Chiang Kai-shek, and to accuse anybody who doesn't support Chiang Kai-shek of being anti-Kuomintang, and has distributed Kohlberg's material. This man Kohlberg gets out a lot of mimeographed material, and Goodwin has been distributing it for him.

Senator McMAHON. How do you know that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have seen some of the material, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Well now, is that all the connection that you can give us about Kohlberg and Mr. Goodwin with this business? Do you know of any other connection that is evident, as far as you are concerned? Are they around Washington, as far as you know?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I don't know whether Mr. Kohlberg maintains offices here. I understand his residence is in New York. I think a little inquiry might show that both he and Goodwin have been around, while Senator McCarthy was preparing his material. I think it will be interesting to look into that.

Senator McMAHON. Is that a suspicion, or do you have some evidence upon which you base that suggestion?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am simply very much interested in this extraordinarily close parallel between the Kohlberg charges and the McCarthy charges.

I presume that Mr. Goodwin, being a lobbyist for the Chinese Government, has some sort of headquarters here in Washington, and I understand that they are at the Metropolitan Club, that he operates from there.

Senator McMAHON. The Metropolitan—

Dr. LATTIMORE. Metropolitan Club.

Senator McMAHON. I am a member of that club.

Dr. LATTIMORE. That was stated in a story in the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

Senator McMAHON. Well, is it your feeling that Kohlberg and Goodwin, I do not wish to put words in your mouth, nor do I wish to draw deductions, but I want to get it clear—are you implying that Kohlberg is behind these charges against you?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Kohlberg has been making charges against the Institute of Pacific Relations for years. They very frequently involve me.

Then these recent charges by Senator McCarthy, they not merely hash over but even reproduce verbally the same charges. I have a feeling that Kohlberg is in there trying to get Lattimore.

Senator McMAHON. Well now, if I felt that way, I would certainly try to know everything that I could about Kohlberg, and frankly you do not seem to have done very much investigating of his background and his activities.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, several years ago he published an attack on me in a magazine called "Chinese Monthly," published here in Washington.

Senator McMAHON. What do you call that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Chinese Monthly, and I wrote to the editor of that magazine, I have forgotten his name now, and asked for a chance to put in a rejoinder, in which I pointed out his inaccuracies, and so forth; but, that is the only step I have taken. I felt that I was a man with a perfectly clear and open record, and that if people were going around making malicious charges of this kind, probably the most dignified thing to do was simply to ignore them.

Senator McMAHON. It might be dignified, but it was not very sensible.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Well, Senator, Kohlberg is a very wealthy man. If he wants to make it a hobby to go after a man like me, he can afford it. A man like myself cannot afford to put a lot of money into doing the same kind of thing that he is trying to do to me.

Senator McMAHON. Do you know anything about Kohlberg's relations with the present Nationalist Government of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Well, I have never heard that he has registered as a lobbyist, or anything of that kind. He is a man of private means and can afford to do what he likes. I certain, judging by the tone of his mimeographed releases which go out over and over and over again all the time, his fanatical support of the Nationalist Government—

Senator McMAHON. But, you know nothing of any relations that he has with any Chinese officials?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have no evidence, sir. As I say, I have not gone into the matter.

Senator McMAHON. Have you ever transmitted any intelligence of any kind to any intelligence officers of the Soviet Government?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Never.

Senator McMAHON. On any subject?

Dr. LATTIMORE. On no subject.

Senator McMAHON. Has anyone ever identified, or been identified to you as an officer of the Soviet Government's Intelligence Service, or an agent of the Soviet Government?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have met members of the Soviet Government, for instance, when I was on the trip with Vice President Wallace. Naturally, Soviet officials were assigned to accompany the mission. I had met people at the Soviet Embassy here. I went and called on Ambassador Litvinov, for instance, when he was Ambassador here, and I was adviser to the Generalissimo. I have met people, of course, that I know were agents; that is, employees or members of the Soviet Government, and, of course, I always assume that anybody who is in the employ of the Soviet Government is also within the ramifications of the Soviet Intelligence Service.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper, would you care to continue your examination?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Senator Lodge has to catch a plane, and I would like for him to ask such questions now as he may have.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. Can you tell us a little something about your biography, education, where you were born, and so forth?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I was born, Senator, right here in Washington, D. C. My parents went out to China in the year 1901. I was born in 1900. My parents went out in the year 1901 when I was less than a year old.

My father was teaching in the Chinese Government Educational Service, first in college, and then, universities. I remained in China until I was about 12 years old, going on 13, and then my mother took me and several other children to Switzerland. My father's idea was that I should get a good start in French and German, and then come on home for my high school and college education.

Those plans were interrupted by the First World War. I happened to be caught in England on a summer's vacation when the war broke out. Owing to that accident, I remained in England for 5 years, while my mother took the other children back to China. So, I was in school in England for 5 years.

Then, at the age of 19, I went back to China. I first went into a business firm, one of the old-line British firms there. Then, I left that and took a job for a year on a newspaper in Tientsin; then, went back into business, and I remained in business for another 5 or 6 years—about 6 years.

I got rather restless with the ordinary treaty-port life in China. I worked very hard to acquire the Chinese language, or to reacquire it. I had known it in my childhood, and I used to do a lot of trouble shooting for my firm, that is, up in the interior when things went wrong there, I would go up and find out what—

Senator LODGE. What kind of firm was it, Dr. Lattimore?

Dr. LATTIMORE. We used to export from China wools, straw braid, sheep casings, hogs' bristles, anything that China exported, and we were agents for the importation of machinery, dyes, cotton goods, anything that China imported.

Consequently, in the course of this work, especially as I specialized in work in the interior, directly with the Chinese merchants, I got a considerable down-to-earth knowledge of the way Chinese economics worked.

I have often felt it to be a great advantage since, that when theoretical questions of Chinese economics come up, I always think back to some particularly tough problem that I was assigned to by my firm, and I remember how the problem worked, and what the men were like that did it, and so on.

Senator TYNDES. Doctor, will you speak a little louder, please, because some of the newspapermen tell me they are having a little difficulty following you.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Surely.

Finally, as the result of this work, one time I got up to the end of the railway where the caravans were coming down from central Asia with wool. There was a civil war on, and my assignment was to maneuver the trainload of wool through a Chinese civil war, which I eventually managed to do. But, I was most interested in seeing—these camels came all the way down from central Asia, 1,200 or 1,500 miles, and there the camels met by the side of this modern railway siding and unloaded and I thought—this is terrific, this is the end of the modern railways, where the modern way is meeting with the Marco Polo age and I thought about that, and our agents over there didn't know anything about it, they simply took it over from the caravans.

It was becoming obvious to me at that time that the whole nature of business of the Chinese was going to change, and I talked about it with the people of my firm, but they were carrying on the old way, and they were not interested in innovations much, so I resigned from the firm and I went upon my own, into the interior.

I went up, hired some camels and traveled with the caravans, like a caravan man, smack through Mongolia to Chinese central Asia. I had just been married. I was not sure about getting into central Asia, this was a closed province then, so I didn't take my wife on that part of the trip.

Sure enough, I was arrested when I got to the frontier, and first I was accused of being a Japanese agent by the border guards, and then some very bright fellow noticed my beard and said "No," that I was a Russian agent. So, it took me a couple of weeks to talk my way out of jail there, and get into the province and talk to the governor, and he was fine. I sent for my wife and she came around through Siberia and joined me.

Incidentally, the Russians gave her a transit visa to go and join her husband, but when I got to the frontier and asked for a visa to go to the railhead and meet her, I was refused. That was my first refusal of a visa from the Soviets, and the consequence was that my wife had to travel 400 miles by sled in a February blizzard, from the end of the railhead to where I was, to the Chinese border where I was at the time.

Senator LODGE. What year was that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. That was in 1926. We were in Sinkiang in 1927.

Senator LODGE. How much time were you in China, after the end of World War II?

Dr. LATTIMORE. After World War II.

Senator LODGE. Yes; how much time did you spend in China, say, from 1945 to the present time? How much time have you been in China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Practically none at all, sir. When I was in Japan on the reparations mission, in the winter of 1946, I went over with some of the other members of the mission, very briefly, and spent a day or two in Shanghai, and a day or two in Peking, just about the 31st of December and New Year's Day, 1946. I have not been in China since.

Senator LODGE. So you have had no opportunity to observe the Communist army—

Dr. LATTIMORE. Except for that one brief trip, up to Yen-an, that I told about, in 1937, I have never been in a district that was being run by the Communists. I have never witnessed a district being taken over by the Communists. I have no first-hand knowledge.

Senator LODGE. In your prepared statement, on page 36, you say this—and I quote:

As the air assaults increase, with United States planes launched by Nationalist forces from Formosa upon the mainland of China—

It is true, is it not, that that is precisely the situation, what is being done at the present time?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am sorry to say, that is precisely what is being done. The effect is to back the Chinese up against the Russian frontier and provide a situation in which the Communists in the Government can cover up the whole business of bringing in Russian airmen, and so forth, by saying to the people, "We have got to do this to stop this awful bombing."

Senator LODGE. In view of the fact that these United States planes are being used to attack the mainland of China, you say "there is danger—if it is not already a fact—that the Chinese Government, with the backing of many of the Chinese people, will invite the Soviet Union to establish air bases and to engage actively in the air war."

You think it is just a danger, or do you think it has actually happened?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I say it may be a fact, sir. The reason I put it that way is, just as I was leaving for Afghanistan at the beginning of March, reports were beginning to come through of the Russian bases being established at Shanghai. Even in the short time since I have been back, although I have not had much time to read the papers, I did see a brief dispatch from the Nationalist side saying that a couple of their planes had been shot down off Shanghai, and that they were sure, by the maneuvering of the planes, that they must have been flown by the Russian fliers. That is as definite as it is, but I think you may be on the edge of a revelation that that is the fact.

Senator LODGE. If the Russians establish air bases in Shanghai and other places in China, is it not a fair guess that they will stay there for a long, long time?

Dr. LATTIMORE. So I said in my statement, sir.

Senator LODGE. Where were you during World War I?

Dr. LATTIMORE. In England, sir.

Senator LODGE. As a student?

Dr. LATTIMORE. As a schoolboy, from the age of 15 to 19.

Senator LODGE. Were your father and mother born in the United States?

Dr. LATTIMORE. My father and mother were born also either in Washington or very close to it.

Senator LODGE. Well, next week I am going to probably want to cross-examine you in executive session, and I understand you will be available for that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Surely, sir.

Senator LODGE. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Before Senator Hickenlooper begins, Senator McMahon advises me that he has one question, or some more, that he would like to ask.

Senator McMAHON. It is just this question: If Mr. Kohlberg is in the room, I wish he would stand up and identify himself.

Senator TYDINGS. If Mr. Kohlberg is in the room, will he kindly stand? If he is standing, will he hold up his hand so that he can be identified?

(There was no such person identified.)

Senator McMAHON. Is Mr. Goodwin in the room?

Senator TYDINGS. If Mr. Goodwin is in the room, will he please stand, and if he is standing will he hold up his hand so that he can be identified.

I take it that neither of the gentlemen are in the room, or if they are, they are incognito.

Senator McMAHON. That is all; thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Lattimore, we will pursue a little further the questions I was asking you just before we adjourned for lunch.

I believe you advocated that we get out of Korea. If I pursue the question, it is to get an answer for the record rather than to have a nod of the head, which the reporter cannot get.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I was wondering if you were going to elaborate that question, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No. I will ask you if you are not advocating, and did not advocate in the memorandum to the State Department in October that we should get out of Korea.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes. As I remember, the way I phrased it in that memorandum was that we should disentangle ourselves as quickly as possible from Korea. I believe that to be necessary because, unfortunately, things have so developed in Korea that it is now being run by a very small and apparently unpopular and arrogant clique, so that we are in the position of backing, as I have also said, a little Chiang Kai-shek.

The accounts that I have seen from Korea, I mean press accounts, and speaking with people who are back from Korea, would indicate that we are there in a position which is, I think, untenable for a democracy. That is, we are backing an inefficient police state against the ruthless and efficient police state of the Russians in North Korea. I am afraid that if that situation goes on, it will only mean a cumulative loss of prestige for us, and a very dangerous advertisement for us in the rest of Asia.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, and Senator Hickenlooper, if you will excuse me, perhaps we should offer the memorandum that has been referred to, for the record.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. All I have is the newspaper clipping that I tore out.

Senator TYDINGS. How long is the memorandum?

Mr. FORTAS. It is quite long, Senator, about eight and a half pages.

Senator TYDINGS. Unless somebody wants to hear it read—

Mr. FORTAS. It will be put in the record, please, sir?

Senator TYDINGS. It may be put in the record in this place in the examination.

(The memorandum is as follows:)

MEMORANDUM—UNITED STATES POLICY IN THE FAR EAST

(By Owen Lattimore)

(Submitted to the Honorable Philip C. Jessup, Mr. Raymond Fosdick, and Mr. Everett Case, in response to Mr. Jessup's request of August 18, 1940)

In clearing the way for a fresh approach to the problems of United States policy in the Far East, several negative statements can usefully be made.

1. The type of policy represented by support for Chiang Kai-shek does more harm than good to the interests of the United States, and no modification of this policy seems promising. Chiang Kai-shek was a unique figure in Asia. He is now fading into a kind of eclipse that is regrettably damaging to the prestige of the United States, because the United States supported him. His eclipse does not even leave behind the moral prestige of a good but losing fight in defense of a weak cause. On the contrary, he put up the worst possible fight in defense of a cause that was originally strong and should have won. The kind of policy that failed in support of so great a figure as Chiang Kai-shek cannot possibly succeed if it is applied to a scattering of "Little Chiang Kai-sheks" in China or elsewhere in Asia.

2. China cannot be economically coerced by such measures as cutting off trade. Nothing could be more dangerous for the American interest than to underestimate the ability of the Chinese Communists to achieve the minimum level of economic stability that will make their regime politically secure. Sound policy should allow for a cautious overestimate of the ability of the Chinese Communists in this respect, and avoid a rash underestimate.

3. It is not possible to make Japan a satisfactory instrument of American policy. There are two alternatives in Japan. The first alternative is to keep Japan alive by means of American "blood transfusions" of raw materials and credits. Under this alternative, Japan can be made to put on the surface appearance of a strong ally; but the reality will be an overcommitment of American resources to a distant and vulnerable region. Under the second alternative, Japan can keep itself alive by coming to terms, economically and politically, with its neighbors in Asia, principally China. Under this alternative, Japan cannot serve as a trusted American ally. Its own interests will compel it to balance and bargain between what it can get out of Asia and what it can get out of America.

4. South Korea is more of a liability than an asset to the interests and policy of the United States. It is doubtful how long the present regime in South Korea can be kept alive, and the mere effort to keep it alive is a bad advertisement, which continually draws attention to a band of little and inferior Chiang Kai-sheks who are the scorn of the Communists and have lost the respect of democratic and would-be democratic groups and movements throughout Asia.

5. The colonial and quasi-colonial countries of southeast Asia cannot be forced to grant priorities to the economic and military recovery of Europe, at the expense of their own economic and political interests. In this region as a whole there is a rapid development of combined political and military resistance to coercion which can be indefinitely sustained by local resources. On the other hand, attempts at reconquest by European countries are so expensive that they defeat their own ultimate purpose, which is the strengthening of the country attempting the reconquest. The situation can now be handled only by convincing the Nationalist leaders in those countries that any sacrifices they are asked to make are matched by sacrifices made by their former or titular rulers, and are not designed to give priority to the interests of these rulers, but to bring joint benefits both to the ruling countries and to the colonial country, on terms that satisfy the colonial aspiration to equality.

6. The United States cannot assume that Russia will move in to take over direct control in China, and will thus be subjected to heavy strategic and economic strains. It is dangerous to assume that there will be a diversion and commitment of Russian resources in Asia which will limit Russia's ability to maneuver in Europe. Recent developments in the Far East have been favorable to Russia, but not in a way that lessens the resources that Russia can deploy toward Europe. Policy toward Russia and policy toward the Far East meet at the point where such a move as the imposition of an economic cordon sanitaire around China is considered. Such a move would increase Chinese dependence on Russia; but it would probably not make it necessary for Russia to undertake a large-scale program in China. The Russians would get credit in Asia, multiplied by propaganda, for any grants they might make to China, but would probably not have to make grants large enough to distort or strain their own resources. It would be possible, therefore, if the mistake is made of waiting for the Chinese Communists to come "hat in hand" to ask for American terms, for United States policy to encounter another set-back in Asia, without even the compensating advantage of hampering Russia's ability to apply pressure in Europe.

The foregoing statements define negative aspects of the situation in Asia, limiting the freedom of maneuver of United States policy. Within these limitations, it seems advisable that a number of positive objectives should be defined.

1. Policy in the Far East and policy toward Russia have a bearing on each other. It certainly cannot yet be said, however, that armed warfare against communism in the Far East, on a scale involving a major commitment of American resources, has become either unavoidable or positively desirable. Nor can it be said with any assurance that, in the event of an armed conflict undertaken for the purpose of forcing Russia back from Europe, the Near East would be an optimum field of operation.

There are still two alternatives before us—a relatively long peace, or a rapid approach toward war. If there is to be war, it can only be won by defeating Russia—not northern Korean, or Viet Nam, or even China. Sound policy should therefore avoid premature or excessive strategic deployment in the Far East.

If there is to be a long peace, the primary factor in making peace possible will be a stabilization of relations between the United States and Russia. Sound policy should, therefore, maintain a maximum flexibility. If and when negotiated and mutually acceptable agreements with Russia become possible, American policy in the Far East should be in a position to contribute to Russo-American negotiations. It should not be so mired down in local situations that direct American-Russian negotiations are actually hampered.

2. Any new departures in United States policy in the Far East must be able to fend off any accusation of "appeasement" of local or Russian communism. In view of the effectiveness of the Russian issue as a weapon in in-fighting in American party politics, it would seem that the advice of experts on domestic politics should be coordinated with the opinions of those who are consulted on foreign policy.

The dilemma is simple, but not easy to solve; but unless it can be solved no successful United States policy in the Far East is possible. Any United States policy that is interpreted in various countries in the Far East as pressure applied for the purpose of creating a league against Russia will merely increase the ability of those countries to bargain with both the United States and Russia. It will also increase the identification, in those countries, between local nationalism and local communism. On the other hand, any proposed United States policy in the Far East that is attacked in America itself as a bid for better relations with Russia runs the danger of being defeated.

3. The success of United States policy in the Far East will be measured largely by the contribution that it makes to the recovery of economic relations between the Far East and Europe. This recovery will be possible only if the assent and good will of the far-eastern countries are won. Assent and real cooperation, in turn, can only be won if the representatives of the far-eastern countries, including those that are still technically the subjects of European countries, are convinced that they have as direct access to the highest American authorities as do the European representatives, and if they are convinced that their economic needs and political standards are not being given a second priority, lower than that of the European countries involved in the same negotiations.

The two test cases in southeast Asia, on which the leaders of various nationalist movements will rate the difference between what can be attained through friendly association with representatives of the United States and what can be attained through outright defiance of a European country which has strong economic support from the United States are Indonesia and the Viet Nam regime under Ho Chi-minh.

If the negotiations between Dutch and Indonesians, brought about largely through benevolent United States pressure, eventuate in a settlement which seems, in Indonesia, to contain too much of hope deferred, while the resistance in Indochina under Ho Chi-minh achieves more and more of hope fulfilled, the results through southeast Asia will be adverse to the United States interest.

Heavy and primary United States commitments in western Europe made it difficult to bear constantly in mind that when the Dutch-Indonesian negotiations are consummated, the satisfaction or dissatisfaction of popular opinion in Indonesia will have wider repercussions than the satisfaction or dissatisfaction of Dutch public opinion. It is a fact, nevertheless, that Indonesian opinion is more difficult to satisfy than Dutch opinion, and it is also a fact that the repercussions will be more serious if Indonesian opinion is not satisfied than if Dutch opinion is not satisfied. These facts mark an important difference between prewar and postwar colonial Asia. They are facts that American public opinion has by no means fully accepted; but they are also facts that are critical for the formulation of an over-all United States policy in Asia.

4. The foregoing considerations indicate that the major aim of United States policy in the Far East should be to convince the countries of the Far East that they can get along well with the United States and with the countries of western Europe. They must be persuaded that they can get along well because of the mutual benefits to themselves, to the United States, and to western Europe.

They must not be made to suspect that the real aim of the United States is an ulterior aim of using them against Russia.

To put it in another way, the aim of the United States policy should be to enable the countries of the Far East to do without Russia to the maximum extent. This is a much more modest aid than insistence on and organization of hostility to Russia; but it is an attainable aim and the other is not.

A few suggestions for implementation are appended.

1. Conferences with the independent governments of the Far East, on the basis of helping them to build their own economies, to revive their trade with Europe, and to expand their trade with us. Emphasis on positive steps that can be taken. No negative conditions, such as prohibitions of trade with Russia or Communist China; no conditions that could be interpreted as American regulation of their political parties.

2. Working relations, and a refusal to be bound by protocol, with legitimate nationalist leaders in countries whose full political aspirations have not been met by their European rulers.

3. The United States should not allow any European country, in its relations with any country in the Far East, to state openly or to imply by propaganda that its policy is "backed by the United States." European representatives, in negotiating with the representatives of countries in Asia, should be discouraged from stating or implying that they are authoritative interpreters of United States policy or intermediaries without whom the United States cannot be approached.

4. It should be made clear that if there is delay or difficulty in establishing relations between the United States and Communist-controlled countries, such as China, the trouble comes from the Communist side and not from the United States side.

5. It should be made clear that friendly and beneficial relations with the United States depend essentially on the inherent friendliness or unfriendliness of the nation concerned and not on the formalities of diplomatic recognition. In order to facilitate the contrast between countries which are on friendly terms with the United States and countries which are not, the number of countries formally recognized by the United States should be increased.

As a first step, the United States should accept the list of countries recommended for admission to the United Nations by Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations. In the first place, it would at this time be a good move for the United States to accept with good will an initiative from the Secretariat of the United Nations. In the second place, the list is on balance more favorable to the United States than to the Soviet Union. In the third place, and with particular reference to the Far East, the move would bring within the scope of United States diplomatic activity the Mongolian People's Republic (Outer Mongolia), an increasingly important potential listening-post country in the heart of Asia.

6. The United States should disembarass itself as quickly as possible of its entanglements in South Korea.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Lattimore, are you aware whether or not the State Department takes that same attitude toward the futility of our continued occupation of Korea, or aid to Korea?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I am not in the confidence of the State Department. I believe that according to recent stories in the press, an appropriation has been voted for continued aid and support to the Government of South Korea, but as I recall, that was about or during the time I went to Afghanistan and I have not kept up on the details.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you aware of the fact that the State Department represents, at least to Congress, that Korea has made the greatest progress of any similar period in its history, and is well along the road toward the establishment of a reliable self-government in Korea?

Dr. LATTIMORE. If that is true, Senator, I am delighted to hear it. I am afraid that I should require a great deal of concrete evidence to make me believe it. I am speaking simply off the cuff. I am still convinced that the existing government of South Korea has a very poor survival value.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you think that it is worse, from that standpoint, than the north Korean area?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Probably not, Senator. What I am thinking of is that the Russians can get away with supporting the kind of government they have in north Korea; but, a government like ours, a nation like ours which absolutely must progress with the feeling of democratic support among peoples in Asia, simply cannot afford to tag itself with a corrupt dictatorial government in Korea, or any other country in Asia.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let us assume that the United States pulled out of Korea completely, disassociated itself with South Korea completely. How long do you think it would be before the Communists would completely communize all of the Peninsula of Korea?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think it would be a matter of weeks, Senator; but I think that it would be better for us to disentangle ourselves while we can do so with an appearance of having made a policy decision of our own, rather than to eventually have the government of South Korea run out, as the government of Chiang Kai-shek has been run out of China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you believe we should now recognize the Communist regime in China as the official government of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. If I may, Senator, I will go back to my memorandum to the State Department on that subject:

It should be made clear that if there is delay or difficulty in establishing relations between the United States and Communist-controlled countries, such as China, the trouble comes from the Communist side and not from the United States side.

It should be made clear that friendly and beneficial relations—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Pardon me at that point. May I ask you to explain whether you mean that we should make it clear to the countries over there that we would like to recognize Communist China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think we should, Senator—that we should make it clear that our wish is to have friendly relations with nations and peoples. If the governments of those nations, out of political fanaticism or hostility, refuse it, that means that those nations and peoples lose the benefit of association with this country; and, in my opinion, no country can have anything but benefit by associating with us, and, therefore, if they are denied those benefits by action of their own government, then we have a clear case in which the interests of people and government diverge.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. By the same token, then, do you believe that we could get, from our standpoint, nothing but benefit from association with a recognition of Communist China, that is, the actual Government of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. One of the basic elements in our relationships with China, Senator, is that they can put no compulsion on us. There is nothing that we have to have from China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. We have some several thousand internees over there that they will not turn over to us. They have jailed our consular officials in Communist China, refused to let our ships have access to their ports, and it seems to me they are putting a lot of compulsion on it, in one way or another.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, you are speaking of a matter of immediate difficulties. I am speaking of the long-term relationships between countries, and what I mean is that the inherent nature of our relationship with China is such that, if they want to get the benefit of trading with us, they then have to offer the conditions that make that possible.

Now, it may well be that it is the desire of the Chinese Communist Government at the present time to prevent American recognition.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You also, I believe, indicate that we should pull out of Japan, because our activities there are at least either futile or have very transitory benefits.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Oh, no, Senator. To say that would be to misconstrue my feeling about Japan.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't want to misconstrue it. That is why I asked. I got that impression from your report to the State Department, and I would be glad to have you comment on it.

Dr. LATTIMORE. No. I am sure that the relations between Japan and the United States could be mutually beneficial. What I have repeatedly emphasized, not only in this memorandum to the Department of State but also in my most recent book, "Situation in Asia," is that we cannot expect to have a successful policy of making Japan an instrument of American policy, because I think that the Japanese are in a position where they can work the see-saw against us, between us and Russia, and will do so.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well then, what is your advocacy, so far as continuance in Japan, or our withdrawal from participation in Japanese administration there, is concerned?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I feel that, in the long run, Japan will have to survive economically, not only by having relations with the United States but by reentering the economic life of Asia, which is where Japan belongs. Japan, no longer being an imperial country, can no longer dictate its economic relations with the rest of Asia by the bayonet. Therefore, the Japanese will have to make trade agreements with other countries in Asia on terms that are acceptable to those other countries as well as to Japan.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you in agreement that our policies in Japan up until now have been successful?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think our policies up to now have, in large measure, been successful. I think particularly the early job that was done by General MacArthur in the extremely delicate business of taking over and disarming Japan was brilliant. I think that our policy of land reform has been a good policy and has been successful. There are many things that I would criticize in detail, but I think the general concept of our policy has been good.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, you say that it is up to the Chinese Communists, or Chinese Communist Government, to make conditions that would be at least of a friendly nature to be in receipt of benefits from the United States? Did I understand you to say that a moment ago?

Dr. LATTIMORE. If the Chinese Government wants to have the Chinese people have the economic benefits of trade with the United States, then it is not only a question of providing for trade under conditions that show a fair profit to the American trader, but it is also up to them to provide conditions that the American trader will regard as politically tolerable.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How do you reconcile that with the statement in your recommendation to the State Department—your memorandum entitled "Submitted to the Honorable Philip C. Jessup, Mr.

Raymond Fosdick," and so forth--the statement in about, I would say, the first third of that statement, in which you stated, according to the quotation in the newspapers of April 4, 1950, as follows:

It would be possible, therefore, if the mistake is made of waiting for the Chinese Communists to come, hat in hand, to ask American terms.

Now, to me that connotes a mistake if the Chinese came to us, and attempted to lay down, or to offer conditions, or something of that kind.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Oh, no, Senator. That was not my meaning.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I do not mean to take it out of context, but I refer to the general sentiment your expressed there.

Dr. LATTIMORE. My sentiment, general sentiment, is that I have heard people say that China is so weak, economically, that we can take a very rough line, a very tough line; that all we have to do is wait and the Chinese will have to come to us, hat in hand, and ask for recognition on our terms; and, in this memorandum I give the warning that I do not think--that I do think that Communist China is probably economically strong enough so that it cannot be coerced, and if we simply wait, the Communists will not come to us, hat in hand.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. With regard to Formosa, do you think that we should pull out of any affirmative aid or completely discontinue any affirmative aid to Formosa as the Nationalist Chinese Government headquarters? I mean, should we completely disassociate ourselves with Formosa, with the exception of maybe some food under the Marshall plan, or something like that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. With that exception of food; yes. I think any question of continuing military aid in order to enable the present government there to keep up its existence, as a rump government, would be a terrible mistake, and in this case I am not thinking primarily or only of China, I am thinking of the sensitivity of the entire continent and islands of Asia.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you refer to the government of Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa as a rump government? It is still the officially recognized government by the United States, is it not--the Republic of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. It is still the officially recognized government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And there are some 8,000,000 people on the island of Formosa, are there not?

Dr. LATTIMORE. There are some 8,000,000 people on the island of Formosa, and on certain pages which I cannot recall at the moment, of the Department of State's white paper on China, there is a ghastly description of how the Nationalist Government plundered and looted Formosa, and shot down people in the streets, and so forth, making it clear why that government in Formosa now rests on a sullen and disaffected people.

We must not make the mistake of thinking that the Chiang Kai-shek government on Formosa is backed by 8,000,000 people who are capable of carrying him back to the mainland and watching him on a successful come-back.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But, one of the thoughts that stimulated my questions is that I believe that Formosa has more population than Australia, and therefore to say that a government which has the sovereignty, regardless of the opinions in the white paper, with which many people disagree, and many of their conclusions are disagreed with—

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. But to say that a government that has the sovereignty over more than 8,000,000 people is a rump government is probably—I mean it is a statement that I can hardly go along with, in view of the fact that it is still the recognized government of China, recognized by the United States.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, there are some differences here. The Government of Australia is not a government which has retreated to Australia with its 8,000,000 people. The Government of Australia is homogeneous with the people of Australia, and grew out of the people of Australia. The important thing about the Government of Australia is that it is not a government over Australia, it is a Government of Australia, that has grown out of the people.

In the case of Formosa, you have a Chinese Government which has retreated to the island of Formosa, and practically nobody in the present Government of China is a Formosan, or speaks any of the dialects that are current in Formosa. In the eyes of the Formosan people, it is an alien government, and it is the government which cruelly plundered them and shot them down in the streets in the first days of alleged liberation from Japan.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, it is your position that Formosa actually, is not actually a part of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Far from it, sir. My position would be much better expressed by saying that Formosa is much more a part of China than is the government which is now trying to claim Formosa.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, do you take it that the people of Formosa are sympathetic to the Communists in China and desire to communize the island of Formosa?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I doubt it very much, Senator. I think that the prevailing feeling among the Formosan Chinese is that they are Chinese and that their destiny and future lies with China. I am quite sure that up to quite recently, the Formosans look on communism with horror; but, they are having forced on them the same situation that was forced on other Chinese—that conditions are made so cruel for them, their government is so harsh and totalitarian that they cannot believe any propaganda that the Communists can be worse and therefore they are being backed into the arms of the Communists, as was the rest of China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, if the United States pulls out all semblance of support for the Nationalist Government of China in Formosa, how long do you think it would be before Formosa would be completely Communist-controlled?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think the present government in Formosa would then end, in the words of T. S. Elliott "not with a bang, but with a whimper," and Formosa would then be with the rest of China and suffer the same fate, which may be pretty grim.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So that, under your ideas and view of this thing, the inevitable path that we have to take is to reconcile ourselves to the complete dominion of continental China by the Communists, the abandonment of Korea to the Communists, and to accept the inevitable result of the communizing of Formosa—is that a fair statement?

If it is not, I would be glad to have you put it in any other terms.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think, Senator, that China, a very big country, and Korea, a very small country, are both in the same position as regards the United States. They are part of the whole of Asia which can no longer be controlled from overseas by foreign powers picking out nominees and saying, "You will now rule this country for us, and if anybody objects to being ruled by you, we will give you the munitions with which to shoot them down."

If we attempt any such policy, we push them further under the control of the Russians, and we know how ruthless the Russians are.

Nevertheless, by reason I think of mistakes, and mistakes against which I warned, in American policy, we have backed them thus far into the arms of the Russians, and as a consequence we have taken a licking in that part of the world, and I do not think that pouring millions of dollars into either Korea, or Formosa, is going to change the situation. I think it will lead merely to a further loss of our prestige. I think we have to back off, and consider how we can again get into touch with those countries, no longer on terms of defeat, but on terms of new negotiations in which the relationship, if it is to be hostile, and those people do not want to be hostile to us, in which the relationship if it is to be hostile then, that is a disadvantage forced upon them by the fanaticism of their new rules.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you believe that we have any prestige left in China as a result of the events that have gone on in the last year or so, and the announced policy of the State Department made last this winter, and by "prestige" I do not mean isolated individuals that may think well of us, but I mean prestige in the general terms, maybe they call it "face" in China, or something like that.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Prestige, Senator, in the sense of any belief that our policy, if pushed harder might yet succeed; no. That is bankrupt. Prestige, in another, in a deeper sense; yes.

I think that over the past century, there has been built up in China, among the Chinese people, not among the officials, not among the governing class, a fund of real affection for and belief in the United States, that has not yet been destroyed, even by the China lobby.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, with regard to Korea, is it not a fact that the Korean Government and officials were elected in a United Nations-supervised election, in what might be called a free election, that is, under the terms prescribed by the United Nations—South Korea?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Now, in South Korea; yes. In South Korea there have been elections conducted, after the country had been put very firmly in the grip of a police force, the inner corps of which was the former Japanese police. The methods of that police force are extremely cruel and terroristic and I do not believe that if this police force, which supports Syngman Rhee, were deprived of external aid, it would be able to keep its control over the people very long.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Manifestly, at the time of our going into Korea it was necessary to preserve law and order, was it not, rather than to risk chaos and all the disturbances that come with a conquering, so that a police force had to be set up of some kind, and some kind of an organization for law and order before orderly elections could be held? Is that a fair assumption?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, I do not want to give any impression of what I believe, because I do not believe that American policy in Korea has been wilfully or in any way viciously mistaken. Nevertheless, we do have to look back on the fact that our record in Korea, since the end of the war, has been a catalog of misfortunes. Unfortunately, at the end of the war Korea was at the end of the line. There has not yet been prepared the necessary people for civil government, and administration, for an interim government of the country.

We landed there with combat divisions, instead of divisions that had been prepared for the occupation. The people rose up and started to take over, and to welcome the Americans, but the Japanese radioed out to the Americans, and presented an alarming picture of disorder, and received orders from the incoming Americans to maintain law and order in Korea, which they did, including the shooting down of some Koreans, and the result was that the very unfortunate impression was created in Korea that we thought of them as inherently a subject people, either they must be ruled by the Japanese or they must be ruled by us, and then after getting in there we installed an interim government. We did the best we could. There was a lot of shuffling and changing of people, and we vetoed some people and tried to get the best in the government that we could, but it didn't work out very well. Things have gone from bad to worse. I think the fundamental mistake there was the mistake that I had warned against in my book just before the end of the war. Solution in Asia, pointing out that in a number of these countries there were bound to be disorders anyhow as the control situation changed, so that they could not be ruled in an orderly way by military forces as they had been before. They would be obviously immature, and obviously if they took over power themselves, there would be a lot of trouble.

There was a choice between evils, and I think it would have been less—there would have been less lawlessness and disorder if they had been allowed to take over themselves, and I think we made a mistake in being too paternalistic in taking over Korea.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, Dr. Lattimore, a Russian program or Communist program has been consistently, for a number of years, for the defeat of the Nationalist Government in China, and political dominion of communism on the continent of China, that is true, is it not?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I assume so, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. On their declarations and their statements and conferences, and so forth, and from the declarations of their public people, the Communists—the program of the Russians now, and I take it from public documents or published documents I should say, the problem of the Communists now is to drive the Americans out of southern Korea.

Do you agree that that is probably one of their objectives—have the United States withdraw from southern Korea?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am sure the Russians would—will rejoice and will take all the propaganda advantage they can, as soon as Korea becomes definitely untenable and we withdraw.

How far they may go in putting in agents and means to hasten our withdrawal, I don't know. I presume they are trying to get away with anything they can get away with. I think the basic thing is that the situation in itself is untenable for us.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And it is also a part of the Communist policy to take over Formosa, is it not?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I would put it this way: I do not think that there could be any government in China, Communist or otherwise, that could afford not to claim that Formosa is a part of China. The government now in power happens to be a Communist government and they are so claiming, but the significant thing here is not the government; the significant thing here is that the people of China consider the people of Formosa as a part of the people of China. The people of Formosa consider themselves as part of the people of China, and I think we must be very careful to differentiate between the people of China, who are overwhelmingly non-Communist, very few of whom have been converted to communism, and the Communists who are running the country, who are a very small but a very disciplined group.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Lattimore, I want to refer to some statements made by Senator Knowland on the floor of the Senate last night, in which he introduced into the record a letter headed "Communist Party of New York State," dated March 1, 1949, "To all sections and countries:"

DEAR COMRADES: Enclosed please find program for action on China policy, as voted upon by a united front action conference on China, held in New York on January 20, 1949.

I am reading from page 4930 of the Record.

We are sure that you will find this material not only informative but helpful in planning actions on China in your communities.

A special outline has also been issued by the National Education Committee on Communist Policy in China. This can be secured through orders from our district education department. The outline can be used as the basis for discussion in your sections and branches.

Any inquiries in relation to further activity can be received by writing to the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, at 111 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

Comradely yours,

MAY MILLER,
Assistant Organizing Secretary.

Then Senator Knowland quoted from that program adopted there some paragraphs as follows: This is what he quoted from the program:

Program for action on China policy as suggested by the Action Conference on China Policy, New York City, January 20, 1949.

2. Demand a new China policy.

A. An end to all forms of American intervention in China and of plans to aid any elements and remnants of the Kuomintang.

B. Preparation by our Government to recognize the government which the people of China are now establishing.

C. Planning now by our authorities for genuine and self-respecting cooperation with the people's government in China, including normal and friendly trade relations free of any political conditions.

Now, Dr. Lattimore, I will be very interested in having you tell me how that differs in almost any detail from the program which you have outlined for China and for Formosa and for Korea. Bear in mind that I am not alleging any support on your part for the Communist Party. That isn't the point. But I do say that as I read this and as I understand your answers to the question, there is a remarkable coincidence of similarity between the very program which you advocate for China and the program which the Communists advocate for China. I will be glad to have you discuss it.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, if my warnings had been followed I think that this bad situation need never have arisen. The fact is that the position on Formosa is untenable. We are going to have to give it up. To have to give it up in circumstances in which the Communists in every little party Communist committee in New York State or any other State will crow and triumph over us and say, "Boys, we did it," is going to be very, very humiliating, and I wish we had not got ourselves into that position.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now I want to go back just a moment to your answers to some questions that Senator McMahon asked you a moment ago, in which you stated, as I understand it, that you believed that there was indication or reason to believe that Senator McCarthy might have got his information from Mr. Kohlberg or Mr. Goodwin, or something to that effect, because of the similarity of Mr. Kohlberg's approach to you and Senator McCarthy's approach to you. Am I reasonably correct in that?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Surely.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is it any more unreasonable for Senator McCarthy or anyone else to question your attitude on the theory when there is a great similarity between what you have advocated for China and Korea and Formosa and what the Communists have advocated? In other words, if this is guilt by association, is it not a two-way street?

In other words, if it is fair to you to assume—and I have never met Mr. Kohlberg in my life that I know of, and I don't know who he is—by the similarity of his actions to what you interpret to be Senator McCarthy's actions—if that is a fair assumption—then what is wrong with an assumption based upon the similarity of your position to that of the Communist position in Asia and Korea and Formosa?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, there is this slight difference: I warned against this Formosa situation, this whole China situation. I did not want it to come up. I suggested everything that I could of that would prevent it from coming up. Then it has come up, and the Communists are now saying the things against it which I warned of. This Kohlberg-McCarthy thing is something else. Kohlberg says it first, and McCarthy then repeats the same words, with the same intention.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe the record shows that the Communists were advocating a pattern of action as far back as 1929 along this general line in China, the infiltration, capture, and all these things that have come about, so there is a historical position of the Communist Party, I believe. I am not prepared at this moment to document it, but it is here in the record some place.

Dr. Lattimore, there has come into my possession at this time what is alleged to be a copy of a letter from you to Mr. Joseph Barnes, written supposedly from 111 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Calif., on June 15, 1943, and supposed to be signed by you as Director of Pacific Operations. As I say, this is a copy. There is no official stamp on this letter. It has the the word "Secret" marked at the top. In the supposed copy of this letter, in the first paragraph, is a reason given for marking the communication "Secret." I expect to make this letter available for the records of the committee, and if it is a letter that you have written, then I can show you a secret document, if it is officially secret. If it is not a letter that you have written, then the "Secret" mark on it is spurious. Therefore I, not desiring to make public any matter that might be still officially secret—and I have no knowledge whether it is still officially secret—if it is genuine or not, am going to hand you this letter and tell you that it came into my possession as an alleged copy of a letter which you wrote at that time.

I would like to ask you to read it and then tell me whether or not it is a copy of a letter which you wrote.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Should I read it aloud first?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No. That is the reason I am giving it to you to read, because I didn't want to make it public if it is a secret document.

(A brief intermission was had to permit Dr. Lattimore to read the communication referred to.)

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will come to order.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in view of the peculiar situation that is here presented, as counsel for Mr. Lattimore I would like your permission to make a brief statement about this document.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, sir.

Mr. FORTAS. This document is presented here as a secret document. I do not know whether it is officially classified as secret. It is my recollection that Senator McCarthy referred to this same document in his statement on the Senate floor on March 30, and in his statement referred to this document as secret in a way that indicates that it is classified secret.

Mr. Lattimore tells me that he will be able to identify it as a letter he has written.

Senator TYDINGS. That he will be able to, or does?

Mr. FORTAS. That he does identify it as a letter that he has written, and he will so state under oath.

I now state to the committee that it is Mr. Lattimore's desire that consistently with Government regulations this letter be made public, and on behalf of Mr. Latimore I respectfully request that the committee take whatever action is necessary to secure the declassification of this document if it is classified, and to make it public, so as to avoid any possible implication that there is anything in this letter which Mr. Lattimore does not desire the press and the public to see.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in making that request and in making the statement that I have just made, we do not yield any point that we have made, and which is referred to in Mr. Lattimore's statement, with respect to the use of this letter by Senator McCarthy on the Senate floor, presumably without securing its declassification.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Fortas, so that we may understand exactly what you are proposing, Dr. Lattimore desires that this letter be made public?

Mr. FORTAS. That is correct, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. His only reluctance to make it public so far as he controls the situation is, he does not want to violate the classification rules and regulations and laws?

Mr. FORTAS. That is correct, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. That is the only objection he would have to making it public now?

Mr. FORTAS. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. I think, therefore, that the burden of whether it is a classified document or is not a classified document should be first borne and solved by whoever offers it. As Senator Hickenlooper has it, I take it for granted he got it from somebody else, so I will have to ask him if he will not declassify it, if that is possible, or if it is not classified to establish that fact, so that we can admit it into evidence and give Dr. Lattimore the benefit of the letter if he desires it made public.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I identify this as a letter written by me, and I wish to have it put on the record, especially since it will make clear the fact that the quotations given from it by Senator McCarthy were distorted and tendentious.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. My purpose in suggesting this letter to you, Dr. Lattimore, is that I personally feel that, inasmuch as the letter was referred to, the entire letter should, if properly eligible to be made public, be put in the record. I do not want to violate an existing legal secret classification. That is why I said, if you wrote it you had already seen it, so it was no secret to you, and you had classified it. If you did not write it, then the "secret" mark was a spurious mark and would have no effect.

But now that we do not know, Mr. Chairman, and I do not know, whether this is still classified a secret document, do you recall whether you classified this "secret" under the existing authority at that time, or whether you classified it in your official capacity as "secret," or was that merely a personal classification?

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, as one of the committee, it seems to me I am justified in asking that examination based on this document be deferred until it is declassified and we know what we are talking about. Why should we sit here and hear this colloquy between these two gentlemen when we do not know what they are talking about?

Senator TYDINGS. The chairman, if he may, wants to try to accord to any of his colleagues here every right that is possible, and not to infringe on the right of examination. I am not going to make any ruling on it unless I am required to by the committee. However, for whatever it is worth, I do not believe we should create an atmosphere of mystery about a document that Dr. Lattimore is desirous of having made public. I think we should withhold it until he comes back again, and in the meantime find out if we can make it public, before we pursue this line of testimony, which I am fearful will only create rumors and suspicions that may do the Government on one hand, or this committee, or Dr. Lattimore, some injustice.

So I request my colleagues—I shall not make any ruling on this—to abide by that observation. Then we can get Dr. Lattimore back and make it all public, and then everybody, including the people of America, will know what is in this document.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask Senator Hickenlooper a question? Senator, as you see it now, who has the power to declassify this document? Is it in the State Department?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I presume whoever is the successor in interest to the OWI.

Senator McMAHON. The State Department, I believe, took over the OWI. I guess the date of the letter would not be a secret. What is the date of the letter?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. June 15, 1943.

Senator McMAHON. How extensive were Senator McCarthy's quotes from that letter?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't recall.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Fairly extensive.

Senator GREEN. And incorrect?

Dr. LATTIMORE. And incorrect.

Senator TYDINGS. Gentlemen of the committee, in the interest of fairness, if Senator Hickenlooper will let me read the letter I will take the responsibility of declassifying it right now.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Thank you, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. I think if part of it, if it is declassified, has been uttered on the Senator floor, that affects the integrity or the standing of the charges made against this wit, that both he and the public are entitled to have it all made public, so that no false inference can be drawn from having given just a part of the document.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I may say that the chairman may read it, so far as I am concerned, or any member of the committee may read it, but I would suggest before the chairman undertakes the responsibility of declassifying a matter that is legally classified that he ought to think it over a little bit.

Senator TYDINGS. I think that might have been a wise observation if it had not been declassified on the floor of the Senate without permission, to the detriment of the present man who stands accused of a very heinous offense.

Senator GREEN. May I ask the Senator who put the stamp of "secret" on it? Did he, or the person who gave it to him, or the State Department, or who? It may not have to be declassified.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think Dr. Lattimore is the one who classified it "secret." I personally think that so long as the letter was referred to on the floor of the Senate the whole letter ought to be in the record eventually, but I think it ought to be properly declassified.

Senator TYDINGS. Unless I am overruled, I am going to ask Mr. Fortas to read this letter in its entirety. I now ask for a vote of the committee. If part of it has been put in, I want it all in.

Mr. FORTAS. Senator, I will be glad to do it at your request, but you are going to have to help keep me out of jail if I do it.

Senator TYDINGS. I will read it myself, so that I will be the one that goes to jail.

Mr. FORTAS. I will be glad to do it as your agent.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask Dr. Lattimore a question?

Doctor, it is apparent already, from just reading a few paragraphs, that you have classified this as secret.

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. It was written on June 15, 1943, about events then existing at that time.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. During the wartime period. I take it that what is described there is dead and gone except as it indicates your attitude at the time. In your opinion does this prejudice the interest of the United States, to have it public at this time?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Not in the slightest. In fact, Senator, I think it is to the interest of the United States that it should be made public.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me read it, and I will take the responsibility.

Senator McMAHON. I want to make very certain that the committee does not, in its anxiety to get the evidence out, give any aid and comfort to people who should not have it.

As I quickly look at it, it seems to be about past events and things which would not be of any assistance to anybody else. It is all right with me, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GREEN. I won't vote. I didn't have a chance to read it. How did you vote, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am utterly neutral.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Fortas, you may read it at my request and as an agent of the committee.

Mr. FORTAS. The address on this letter is "111 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Calif."

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say before you read it that I have no knowledge of what is in it; I did not hear Senator McCarthy's speech on the floor; I don't know whether it helps Mr. Lattimore or whether it hurts him, but I do not believe that it is fair play to have a part of a document read anywhere in a trial as serious as this is, in a hearing as serious as this is, without putting the whole thing in so that no false conclusions can be drawn therefrom, and for that reason, even though it may be stretching the law a bit, as the events are all over and are now 8 years old, I cannot see where the interests of the Government can be hurt in the slightest, and I think this hearing is more important, perhaps, than any indirect injury that might come from the reading of whatever may be in its dealing with events of 8 years ago. So please proceed with it.

Mr. FORTAS (reading):

111 SUTTER STREET,
San Francisco, Calif., June 15, 1943.

Mr. JOSEPH BARNES,
Office of War Information,
224 West Fifty-seventh Street,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR JOE: In your capacity as a member of our Personnel Security Committee there are certain things which you ought to know about Chinese personnel. It is a delicate matter for me to tell you about these things because of my recent official connection with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. For that reason I am marking this communication secret.

When we recently reduced the number of our Chinese staff in New York it was quite obvious that there was going to be trouble and that this trouble would take the form of accusations against the remaining personnel. The fact is that certain of the personnel with whose services we dispensed had connections outside the office. This leads directly into the main question. It is extremely important from the point of view of security that intelligence information should not leak out of our office through our Chinese personnel. It is an open secret in Washington that the security of various Chinese agencies there is deplorable. Any pipeline from our office to any of those agencies is not a pipeline but practically an open conduit.

However, it is not only a question of Chinese Government agencies. There is also a well-organized and well-financed organization among the Chinese in this country connected with Wang Ching-wei, the Japanese puppet. This can be traced back to the history of the Chinese revolution as a whole. To present it in the fewest possible words: Sun Yat-sen was largely financed for many years by Chinese living abroad. Not only Sun Yat-sen but Wang Ching-wei had close connections among the overseas Chinese. However much he is a traitor now, the fact must be recognized that Wang Ching-wei is a veteran of Chinese politics with connections which he has nourished for many years among Chinese communities abroad, including those in the United States.

Chinese in the United States come almost exclusively from a few localities on the coast of China, practically every one of which is now occupied by the Japanese. Thus these Chinese in America have both family connections and financial investments which are under the control of the Japanese, and because of his years of political organizing work Wang Ching-wei knows all of these connections and can apply pressure through them.

On the other side there is a special organization within the Kuomintang or Chinese Nationalist Party at Chungking which is charged with maintaining political and financial connections with Chinese overseas. This overseas bureau also has a detailed knowledge of the Chinese communities in America and is able to apply pressure. Thus there is a very intense conflict going on every day in every Chinatown in America between the Wang Ching-wei agents and those of the Kuomintang. It must be remembered that while the Kuomintang is able to operate in a private way as a political party among Chinese residents in America, it is also the party which "owns" the Chinese Government and is thus able to make use of Chinese Government agencies.

Thirdly, there are numerous Chinese in America who are politically unaffiliated. There are, of course, Communists but they have neither the money nor the organization of the Wang Ching-wei and Kuomintang groups. The genuinely unaffiliated Chinese are a curious compound product of Chinese politics and American environment. They tend to be intensely loyal to China as a country, without conceiving that the Kuomintang or any other political organization has a monopoly right to control of their thoughts and actions. They are like Americans; they like to give their political allegiance, not to have it demanded of them. They are reluctant to support a regimented series of causes laid down for them under orders; like Americans, they often give moral and financial support to a scattered number of causes, some of which may even conflict with each other to a certain extent.

The conflict between the Wang Ching-wei organizing group and the Kuomintang organizing group in America cannot be fought out in the open. Both sides have very good reasons for not courting publicity. Each is anxious to bring into its fold as many of the unaffiliated Chinese as possible. Each is also anxious not to be exposed as an "un-American" organization or a foreign political group working on American soil. Both of them accordingly find it very good tactics, not only to cover up themselves but to put pressure on those whom they are trying to bring under their control, to accuse unaffiliated Chinese of being Communists. This is an accusation which covers up the accuser at the same time that it puts pressure on the accused.

One of the outstanding rallying points of the unaffiliated Chinese in America is the New China Daily News in New York. This is controlled by an organization of laundrymen. I understand that the shareholders number two or three thousand and that they take an active interest in the newspaper. The essential thing about these laundrymen is that in the nature of their business they are independent small-business men. This means that they are on the one hand fairly well insured against Communist theology, since the small-business man of whatever nationality is likely to be a man who had made his way by his own initiative and enterprise and is therefore extremely suspicious of collectivist economic theories. On the other hand, these Chinese small-business proprietors are reluctant to submit themselves unquestioningly to the control of the vested interests which have grown up in China in association with the dominant Kuomintang. The New China Daily News would probably not come under much pressure of it were not for the fact that it is one of the best edited Chinese papers in America with a growing circulation. It does not need to be subsidized or supported by a patron, like many, perhaps the majority, of Chinese papers. It pays dividends on its own merits. A number of Chinese language papers in America receive subsidies from the Kuomintang. At least two, and perhaps three, receive subsidies from the Wang Ching-wei group. One or two others trace back to the group within the Kuomintang which was at one time headed by the late Hu Han-min, a leader of the right-wing faction within the Kuomintang. The Hu Han-min group, though once regarded as right-wing conservatives, are now regarded in China as "old-fashioned liberals"—liberal, so to speak, short of the New Deal. They are less bitterly involved in Chinatown politics than the Wang Ching-wei and Kuomintang groups. The two latter, which are engaged in handing out carefully colored news and doctored editorial policies, are intensely jealous of and hostile to an unaffiliated paper like the New China Daily News, which, so to speak, flaunts its sins by being so readable that the Chinese public in America buys it for its own sake.

It would be rash to say that there are no Communists connected with the New China Daily News. Here it is necessary to consider another peculiarity of the politics of Chinese living out of China. These Chinese are far from being tied to the chariot wheels of Moscow; but when it comes to resisting the trend toward totalitarian regimentation within China they are often willing to support parts of the program advocated by the Chinese Communists within China. This is so much a part of the pattern of politics of Chinese living out of China that it is not uncommon to find wealthy men, even millionaires, supporting the program of the Chinese Communists in whole or in part. This was, for instance, conspicuous in Malaya before the fall of Singapore. For such prosperous and independent Chinese it was a question either of backing their independent judgment of the steps that needed to be taken toward creating a working democracy within China, or of paying financial tribute to the Kuomintang, which sometimes tends to be autocratic, and not infrequently spurs advice from Chinese abroad at the same time that it demands their financial contributions.

In the specific setting of America, it is the independent small-business man, like the laundryman, rather than the very few wealthy merchants who most conspicuously maintain this tradition of political independence. In America, some of the most wealthy individuals are either committed to Wang Ching-wei and his puppet Japanese party or at least are hedging until they have a better idea of how the war is finally going to turn out.

In the circumstances we have to be extremely careful about our Chinese personnel. While we need to avoid recruiting any Chinese Communists we must be careful not to be frightened out of hiring people who have loosely been accused of being Communists. We have to be at least equally careful of not hiring people who are pipelines to the Wang Ching-wei or to one or other of the main factions within the Kuomintang. After all, as an American Government agency we should deal with the Chinese Government or regular agencies of the Chinese Government, but should not get in the position of committing ourselves to the Kuomintang, the political party which controls the Chinese Government, as if it were itself the Chinese Government. You will recognize the importance of this proposition and the delicacy which is required on the operational level.

For our purposes, it is wise to recruit as many unaffiliated Chinese as we can, to pick people whose loyalty will be reasonably assured on the one hand by the salaries which we pay them and on the other hand by the fact that they do not receive salaries or subsidies from somewhere else.

Mr. Chi and Mr. Chew Hong, both of our New York office, conform excellently to these requirements. Mr. Chi I have known for many years. Until his family estates were occupied by the Japanese, he was a wealthy landlord. He was brought up in the older scholastic tradition in China, before the spread of modern western education, but at the same time he is keenly interested in the national unification of China and the orderly development of a stable political organization there. I know by long experience that he is anything but a Communist; I also know that because of his seniority, his background of independent wealth, and his superior mentality he is not a man to be pushed around by party bureaucrats. Chew Hong is a much younger man, but one whom Dr. Chi trusts and of whose integrity he is convinced. There is something in their relationship of the old Chinese standards of disciple and master. As long as Dr. Chi stands in the relationship of loyal friendship to me and the loyalty of an honest employee of an American Government agency, there will be no difficulty with either men, no irresponsible playing with Chinese politics, and no leakage to any Chinese faction.

The retention of both men is therefore a guaranty to the secrecy and security of the work of the OWI as well as a guaranty of the confident fulfillment of directives. I urge you not to be high-pressured into getting rid of either man. I know that both men may be subjected to attacks. Given time to work on it, I could undoubtedly trace such attacks to their origin and give you the full details. I doubt whether the Personnel Security Committee of OWI would be able to trace such attacks, rooted in the intricacies of Chinese factional politics, to their source; but I should not like to see us placed in a position where, after getting rid of people now attacked, we would be forced to hire people who would actually be the nominees of factions not under our control.

It is for this reason that I have written this long letter to urge you to report to our Personnel Security Committee the necessity for exercising pronounced agnosticism when any of our Chinese personnel are attacked.

In the meantime I am doing my best to check over our Chinese personnel in San Francisco.

Once more I urge you to observe the strictest confidence in acting on this letter, because in certain quarters it might be considered that I am under a moral obligation to see that OWI is staffed with Chinese who take their orders from some source other than the American Government.

Yours,

OWEN LATTIMORE,
Director, Pacific Operations.

Senator TYDINGS. I hope before you leave this letter, Dr. Lattimore, that you will put in the record what the charge was on the Senate floor made by Senator McCarthy and then put that part of the letter which you say was not correctly portrayed in its relations on the Senate floor, directly following it, whenever it is convenient for you to do that today.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Thank you, Senator. I was going to ask for permission to do that. I have here before me only some notes from what Senator McCarthy said on the floor, and not the full text of what he said, but even from these condensed notes I can quote the following to show the extreme distortion with which this letter was presented:

I quote; and I am only quoting what is in direct quotes.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean you are quoting Senator McCarthy now?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am quoting Senator McCarthy now:

* * * fraud and misrepresentation in his intended deception of his superior.

Another quote:

* * * an excellent example of the far-flung Communist discipline so much insisted upon by Lenin.

Another quote:

O. L. urged strictest secrecy in getting rid of any Chinese who are loyal to our ally Chiang Kai-shek, and the recruiting of personnel solely from the shareholders of the Communist New China Daily News.

Now, Senator, I happen to know something about this subject because for many years, having been interested in recent Chinese political history, I had become aware of the importance in modern development of the Kuomintang, of the overseas Chinese. That is a subject which even to this day is inadequately documented.

I mention a special Chinese organization—may I have the letter?—within the Kuomintang or Chinese Nationalist Party at Chungking which is charged with maintaining political and financial connections with Chinese overseas. I knew something about this because I used to share a dugout in Chungking with the man who was the head of it, and in the pre-Pearl Harbor days in Chungking, where we were sometimes in dugouts for 12 hours a day, there was a lot of conversation.

I knew something about the Wang Ching-wei organization in this country because one of its strongholds was in the San Francisco Bay area, where I was living.

I was aware of the possibility of trouble through our Chinese personnel because there had been similar trouble with foreign or foreign-born personnel of OWI. Our principle was that everything going out over the air as Voice of America or in print as material distributed by OWI must be absolutely and beyond a doubt the Voice of America.

We had another principle. In dealing with foreign countries we must deal with those countries as allies. For example, in dealing with Great Britain, we praised Churchill, but we praised him as the head of the British Government and not as the leader of the British Conservative Party. We could not play party politics in foreign countries.

When we put out broadcasts and other material praising the Russian resistance at Stalingrad, when we mentioned Stalin we never mentioned him as head of the Russian Communist Party. We had nothing to do with the party system even of a one-party country. It was absolutely essential that we should maintain the same principle with regard to China. And one reason why I classified the letter as "secret" was because, as I said at the beginning, I was in a delicate position. All Chinese in this country knew that I had been adviser to Chiang Kai-shek. So if I gave a decision one way, people would say, "Ah, he is still working for Chiang Kai-shek." If I gave a decision they didn't like, they would say, "He has turned against Chiang Kai-shek." I had to avoid that kind of position, and I had to maintain among our Chinese personnel the same high standards that we attempted to maintain throughout OWI.

Now I should like to make quite clear one or two minor points here. I wrote, "It would be rash to say that there are no Communists connected with the New China Daily News." I wrote that because it was my duty not to give a blanket endorsement to any organization, saying that I guaranteed it had no Communists in it. That is of a piece—and Senator McCarthy has misrepresented this—with my specification that "we need to avoid recruiting any Chinese Communists," and I was making it clear that by recommending Chinese of a certain kind I was not guaranteeing that all of them of that kind were free from communism. They must still go through the regular security check that everybody went through before we hired them.

Senator GREEN. How was that misrepresented?

Dr. LATTIMORE. The quote here is "the recruiting of personnel solely from the shareholders of the Communist New China Daily News."

Senator TYDINGS. And what does your letter say, precisely, on that point?

Dr. LATTIMORE. My letter says:

It would be rash to say that there are no Communists connected with the New China Daily News. Here it is necessary to consider another peculiarity of the politics of Chinese living out of China. These Chinese are far from being tied to the chariot wheels of Moscow. • • •

Senator TYDINGS. You went on to say prior to that, however, that they were small-business men, and therefore less likely to be Communist, and therefore you qualified it by saying that perhaps there might be some in there.

Dr. LATTIMORE. I believed that to be a good place to look for personnel, but I was in no position to give a blanket endorsement to people I had never seen.

Senator TYDINGS. I think the letter and the statements of the Senator pretty well take care of each other, and we can study it when we get around to it in the committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter I forgot to clarify when this hearing started this afternoon at 2:30. At the morning's hearings, when I began to interrogate Dr. Lattimore, I said that I expected to ask him some questions which had occurred to me as a result of all this publicity, and then I expected to ask him some questions because I had asked Senator McCarthy if there were any questions that he would specifically like for me to ask Dr. Lattimore.

I did receive a communication from one of Senator McCarthy's aides this morning, just before I came to the meeting, and we discussed certain things that I understood at that time to be in the nature of a request by Senator McCarthy that I ask certain specific questions. Unfortunately, I apparently completely misunderstood Senator McCarthy, because at the close of the hearing at noon today he came to me and said that he had not submitted any specific questions to me to ask for him, that he did not want me to ask specific questions on his behalf, that he had not been accorded the opportunity to ask the questions himself; therefore he could not adopt the device of asking his questions through a member of the committee.

I am sorry that I misunderstood the situation. I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman, and everybody else, that I have not asked any specific questions that were requested by Senator McCarthy for me to ask. All the questions I have asked are questions that have occurred naturally to me as a result of reading the various allegations that have been made; and I want to make it clear that I have not asked, and shall not ask, at least under present circumstances, until I am specifically asked to propound any questions generated by Senator McCarthy himself.

I have another question or two.

Senator TYNINOS. I would like to say right in that connection that this matter of cross-examination came up in the committee in executive meeting, and it was considered there as to whether or not it would be fair to let Senator McCarthy cross-examine the witnesses. The committee had in mind, in saying that Senator McCarthy should ask his questions through the members of the committee, this thought: That the most entitled persons in all of these proceedings to have a fair deal are those, even if they are guilty, who are accused of the heinous offense of treason, near treason, disloyalty, or espionage. Inasmuch as the witnesses accused by these people who have been publicly named had no chance to interrogate those who accused them, it seemed to us in line with the sixth amendment to the Constitution, which we call the Bill of Rights, which entitles every person accused of a heinous offense to be confronted with the witnesses against him, that the accused should at least have no disadvantage in the matter, and, therefore, as they had had no chance to interrogate Senator McCarthy—for example, on the very thing just read—to point out immediately, at the time, the difference between his uttered remarks and the document itself, that if we gave Senator McCarthy the right, they had had no right to cross-examine him either in person or by counsel, and it would be a most unfair and a Cardinal Mindszenty proceeding, and one of the things that has revolted America lately has been the conviction of numerous religious prelates and some American businessmen under methods similar to that which I have just described, which we are trying to keep out of this committee.

We want to be fair to Senator McCarthy. We want to be fair to the accused. And we do not feel that we can extend to Senator McCarthy a right which has been denied the persons accused by him of various heinous offenses, and, for that reason, the method that was adopted was voted on in the committee.

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I might just amplify what I said a moment ago. I have no hesitancy in asking any questions that a member of the Senate might want to submit to me to ask. I am perfectly willing. I have asked two or three questions in the last several days that various members of the Senate have submitted to be asked, and I have no hesitancy about that. If I do ask questions that have been specifically submitted to me, I want to make it clear that they are questions I have been asked to ask.

SENATOR TYDINGS. The press has asked for copies of this letter. There is only one. If the press will designate someone who will be responsible for the letter so copies can be made of it, and return it to the reporter, they may have it.

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. I just want to say, any member of the Senate that wants a legitimate question asked, or a question that is appropos to the advancement of this hearing, I am perfectly willing to ask it as an individual.

SENATOR GREEN. Instead of asking you to ask a question, may I ask a question?

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. You may ask it.

SENATOR GREEN. When you explain that Senator McCarthy did not authorize you to ask questions, did you mean that to refer particularly to this letter which has just been read?

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. No. Senator McCarthy did not ask me to put this letter in the record. The letter came into my possession. I said awhile ago part of the letter had been referred to. I had the letter in my possession. If it were a genuine copy, I thought the entire letter ought to be put in the record.

SENATOR GREEN. You mean Senator McCarthy did not give you his copy of the letter?

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. I did not say that. But I did say that Senator McCarthy did not ask me to put this letter in the record.

SENATOR GREEN. He just gave it to you?

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. No. As a matter of fact, Senator Green, he did not give it to me, and it happens to be, I think, just a little beyond your province to ask questions about that, but the fact is Senator McCarthy did not give me this letter.

SENATOR GREEN. I won't ask any more.

SENATOR TYDINGS. We don't want to get to examining each other here. We have enough work to do without that.

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. I don't know whether this letter came from Senator McCarthy or not, but he is not the one who gave it to me. I will assure you of that.

Now, Mr. Lattimore, Dr. Chi, referred to in this letter, whom you referred to as your friend, is he in China now, so far as you know?

DR. LATTIMORE. Yes. He went back to China, Senator, after the end of the war; I forget exactly when, whether it was right after or shortly after. He then became a professor at one of the universities in Peking, which were then, of course, controlled by the Nationalist Government, and after the Communists took over at Peking he, like the majority of university professors, remained there.

SENATOR HICKENLOOPER. Is he an editor of the New China Daily News in China, in one of the cities of China?

DR. LATTIMORE. Not to my knowledge, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is it his son that is now waiting hopefully to be recognized as the Chinese representative to the United Nations on behalf of the Communist government of China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. So I have heard, Senator. His son, whom I had known first in New York in the early 1930's, when he had just finished his graduate work at Columbia, later went back to China—I am not quite sure when—and entered the service of the Government in Chungking. I then saw him when I was in Chungking again in 1941 and in 1942. Mr. Chi at that time had a high position in the Bank of China and also, as I recall, on the Currency Stabilization Board. His family, his father and Dr. H. H. Kung, the Minister of Finance, were old friends, and Dr. Chi was treated as an extremely confidential financial subordinate by Dr. Kung.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, Dr. Lattimore, I am asking you now specific questions that were handed to me by a Member of Congress during the noon hour.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you care to identify him? It is not necessary.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think it is completely irrelevant to identify who it is. It is a Member of Congress who handed me these questions during the noon hour. He is interested in securing an answer to them, and I told him I would be glad to ask you the questions. These are not specifically my questions.

Question: Do you know who recommended you or who was responsible for your appointment on the Presidential mission to China when you went over there as an adviser to Chiang Kai-shek?

Dr. LATTIMORE. In 1941, sir?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe that is correct. The date isn't here, but I believe that is what is referred to.

Dr. LATTIMORE. So far as I know, Senator, what happened was that Chiang Kai-shek asked President Roosevelt to nominate somebody who could be an American adviser. I was called over to Washington and told that my name was being considered.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Who called you over?

Dr. LATTIMORE. The telephone message came from Mr. Lauchlin Currie, in the executive offices of the President, to the Johns Hopkins University, and I came over here and, in the first instance, I saw Mr. Currie. Who suggested my name to Mr. Currie or to the President, or however it came up, I don't know. Perhaps I was a little bit vain-glorious in merely assuming that I was well enough known so that my name would naturally come up when a question of an expert on China was considered.

I was asked if I cared to name anybody with whom the President might consult, and I named Admiral Yarnell—Admiral H. E. Yarnell—and President Isaiah Bowman, of the Johns Hopkins.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. When Vice President Wallace made his trip to China you were head of the OWI in China at that time; were you?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, Senator. At that time—let's see; that was 1944—I had come back from San Francisco and, as I recall, I had resumed my work at the Johns Hopkins, but was coming over to Washington once or twice a week as a consultant to OWI.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And as consultant to OWI where did you meet? Where were their headquarters?

Dr. LATTIMORE. In the Railway Retirement Board Building here in Washington, D. C.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know who suggested your name to be assigned to Mr. Wallace on his trip to China?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I don't know, sir, of my own knowledge. In the introduction to the book that Mr. Wallace wrote about that mission he says, or implies, that it was President Roosevelt.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Dr. Lattimore, what were the circumstances of your assignment by the United Nations to the recent Afghanistan trip that you just returned from?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I was called up from New York by the Economic Division of the United Nations and asked——

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Who heads that division?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Mr. David Owen, who is one of the Assistant Secretaries to Mr. Trygve Lie.

Senator TYDINGS. Of the United Nations?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Of the United Nations.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Had you been consulted prior to this call from New York by the State Department or anybody in it as to whether you would be available?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In addition to the memorandum of August 1949, which was the memorandum to Dr. Jessup and others that we referred to, in the State Department, what other memoranda or reports have you submitted to the State Department or any divisions of the State Department in the past?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I can't recall submitting any, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And outside of the consultations and activities that you mentioned in your formal statement this morning, have you had other consultations with the Secretary of State or any of his subordinates with regard to Far Eastern Affairs and American policy in the Far East?

Dr. LATTIMORE. The only Secretary of State that I ever met was Mr. Hull. I remember it must have been about 1939 or 1940 I came over with one or two other people from Baltimore—I think only one, Prof. Arthur Lovejoy of the Johns Hopkins University—after asking for an appointment with Mr. Hull to urge that we take steps to diminish or cut off the flow of supplies of strategic value to Japan. Except for that occasion, I have not met any of the Secretaries of State.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You have never met Mr. Acheson?

Dr. LATTIMORE. No, Senator. I wish I had. I admire him very much.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know who the present Director of Far Eastern Affairs is in the State Department?

Dr. LATTIMORE. It seems to me there was a statement in the paper the other day that Mr. Walton Butterworth had been head of that, but was now assigned to a Japan mission, and that Mr. Dean Rusk had been appointed—no, wait a minute. Mr. Rusk I understand has been appointed Under Secretary responsible for the Far East, and you are asking about China, are you, Senator, specifically?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, China.

Dr. LATTIMORE. The China desk? I am not sure.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know Mr. Butterworth?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have met him, I think, once.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know Mr. Dean Rusk?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I have met Mr. Dean Rusk. In fact I was on a panel with him in Philadelphia a month or two ago.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That ends the questions that have been suggested to me by this Member of Congress.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Lattimore, if your formal statement of this morning, which you have read, had been submitted by you to or seen or participated in by any member of the State Department or any employee of the State Department.

Dr. LATTIMORE. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Or any member of the committee?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Nor any member of the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. I mean this committee.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Last night, in the session of the Senate, and I think I can give you the exact quotation—well, I believe I have a copy of what is alleged to be a direct quotation from the Record; I won't take time to find it—it is in the Record here, but I am reading from a copy of a news release issued by Senator Karl Mundt this morning and in this news release there is a quote of what he said on the floor of the Senate last night. He said:

There is a simple formula available to Owen Lattimore to clear his name and prove his innocence. All he needs to do is to ask the investigating committee to tell the President in his behalf to release his files so that as an American citizen whose reputation has been attacked before the committee he can be given the protection that can come only through demonstrating his ability to clear his name by the use of the facts in the files.

That statement was made last night on the floor of the Senate by Senator Mundt. I ask you if you have any objection to, not the publicity of these files; nobody has ever asked to make the files public—I ask you if you have any objection at all, Mr. Lattimore, to the five members of this subcommittee having full and complete access to the files of information which have been or may be in existence in either the State Department, the FBI, or the Civil Service Commission with regard to any historical background or information on you.

Dr. LATTIMORE. Mr. Senator, so far as I as an individual am concerned, my record is open and clean. I do not mind any form of fair investigation that helps me to prove that my name is clean and honorable. On the other hand, I am not a member of the Government and as an individual I do not think it would be fair for me ask for special treatment differing in any way from that which is accorded to other individuals by the regular procedures of this Government.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I merely ask you if you, as an individual and divorcing yourself from any possible technical questions involved with regard to the release of files, would have any objection to such an examination, at least without the intention at the time of the examination of making any of those files public property. Do you have any objection to such an examination by the committee?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Senator, you realize that in replying to this question I shall not be replying as a disinterested person to a theoretical question. I am a very much interested person. In my case, the opening of my files would show me to be a completely honorable American citizen, even an American citizen with some modest reason for pride.

But I feel that if I were to ask for that, I should be asking for a favor, and that I refuse to do.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is all.

Senator TYDINGS. Dr. Lattimore, your case has been designated as the No. 1 case, finally, in the charges made by Senator McCarthy. You have been called, substantially, I think, if not accurately quoting, the top Red spy agent in America. We have been told that if we had access to certain files that this would be shown.

I think as chairman of this committee that I owe it to you and to the country to tell you that four of the five members of this committee, in the presence of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the FBI, had a complete summary of your file made available to them. Mr. Hoover himself prepared those data. It was quite lengthy. And at the conclusion of the reading of that summary in great detail, it was the universal opinion of all of the members of the committee present, and all others in the room, of which there were two more, that there was nothing in that file to show that you were a Communist or had ever been a Communist, or that you were in any way connected with any espionage information or charges, so that the FBI file puts you completely, up to this moment, at least, in the clear.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make the record clear that I have not been afforded an opportunity—

Senator TYDINGS. I have already arranged for Senator Hickenlooper, who was absent—let me make my statement, if you will—the day we went to the Department of Justice to see this file to see it himself, again with me, some day next week, where he will have the same information that was made available to the other four members of the committee.

I didn't interrupt you. You have been taking the whole afternoon, and the chairman hasn't asked any questions at all. It is getting on to 5 o'clock. I would like to proceed. There have been lots of times when I would have liked to have asked questions.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I say that I was absent. I did not know about the meeting to look at these files. I hope to be able to see them. I tried to see them this week. It seems that I will not now be able to see them until next week. I can come to no conclusions about them, and this is the first time that I have received an affirmative assurance as to the conclusions about that meeting.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to say this right there, that I would not have made this statement had not my colleague, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., of Massachusetts, after he had seen the file, on the floor of the United States Senate, in a public speech, made the statement that up to now none of the charges had been proved as true. I think, therefore, coming from a Republican member of this committee, a very distinguished and an able and honest and patriotic member of this committee, the chairman can likewise now avail himself of breaking the silence which already has been broken.

Dr. Lattimore, are you familiar with the fact that in the House of Representatives recently, by a vote of the House of Representatives, aid for Korea was denied?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes, Senator; I had heard that.

Senator TYDINGS. By a vote, I think, of 192 to 191, and I think the date was January 19. That would, more or less, while not being a specific part of the mechanics you recommend, be tantamount to the same end, only taking it rather abruptly; would it not?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Yes; it would, Senator. But I didn't tell them to do it.

Senator TYDINGS. I might like to analyze that vote for you—not that it is important, but those who voted for aid were 170 Democrats and 21 Republicans; those who voted against aid were 61 Democrats and 130 Republicans and 1 member of the American Labor Party, making 192 to 191. Of course, later on, at the instance of the President, as you know, that action was reconsidered and the aid was voted. But I can't help but draw the conclusion, from some of the questions asked here, that our investigation is going to have to extend over to the House of Representatives before we get through.

Have you seen any fact produced in the charges, which I assume you have read, made by Senator McCarthy, aside from allegations, which the committee could more fully examine to show that you have any espionage connections with the Russians?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I think I have covered them all, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you familiar with the fact that a great many of the people who favor a strong policy in China opposed a strong policy in western Europe, such as the Marshall plan when it was voted on?

Dr. LATTIMORE. I am very much aware of that, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all.

Senator McMahan?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Might I add, Senator, that I myself have always been very strongly in favor of the Marshall plan in Europe.

Senator TYDINGS. I understand that your philosophy is that if a test is to come, our resources must be husbanded so that with other areas that are able to contribute to the ultimate struggle, these areas will be kept close to us, and be available to throw their weight with us into the decisive battle, and your philosophy is that that is western Europe, and if we spread ourselves too thin we will become so mired down that we won't have the resources ultimately to fight the great battle which we may be called upon to fight for the preservation of liberty and democracy and our western civilization. Is that a general summary of your point of view?

Dr. LATTIMORE. That is a general summary to which I should like to add one very important thing; namely, that I believe that the recovery and the strengthening of Europe requires a reintegration of the interests, and very especially the economic interests, of Europe and Asia, which, in the circumstances, will have to be a three-way integration brought about by American, European, and Asian cooperation. I need hardly say that the Russians and all Communists very strongly oppose this idea; nevertheless, I feel that it is to the common interest of ourselves and Europe and Asia to build such an integration.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahan has some questions.

Senator McMAHON. Dr. Lattimore, in the period of 1939 and 1940, when the Russian and German Governments were in alliance, there was a movement in this country, Communist-inspired, to attack the Allies on the ground that it was an imperialistic war. When Russia was attacked, the Daily Worker and the Communist Party were very much embarrassed because they had to change horses in the midst of the stream.

I would like to ask you whether, between the outbreak of the war in Poland and the attack on Russia, you were—well, let me put it this way: If you had an opinion and made it public, what was it?

Dr. LATTIMORE. My opinion in those years, Senator, was that a very bad error had been made when the French, British, and Russians failed to get together in front of the Hitler menace leading to the Hitler-Stalin agreement. I nevertheless felt that in the course of time the aggression of the Germans would bring all three together again.

As you remember, those were very confused times. It was the period when everybody was talking about the "phony" war, the "sit-down" war. There was the period when the Russians attacked Finland. At that time I was on the Committee of the League of Nations Union in Baltimore and we voted to make ourselves ad hoc into a committee to raise funds which were called Fighting Funds for Finland. I was a member of the committee that voted that way. That is, I condemned Russian aggression against Finland, not as a question of advocacy but as a question of a political scientist's analysis. I believed, unlike the Communists, that the situation which was being created by the Nazis was going to result in virtually a world alliance against them.

Senator McMAHON. Doctor, do I interpret your answer to mean that you did not participate in that party line thinking during 1939 and 1940?

Dr. LATTIMORE. Definitely, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. I have no other questions.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will stand in recess until 11 o'clock Tuesday, when it will meet in executive session. I will ask you, Doctor, to hold yourself available.

(Whereupon, at 4:55 p. m., the committee adjourned, to meet in open session upon the call of the Chair.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment on April 6, 1950, at 10:30 a. m., in room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings, Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally (chairman), and Wiley (member of the full committee); Ferguson, Wherry, Knowland, McCarthy, Mundt; Mr. Edward P. Morgan, chief counsel to the subcommittee.

Senator TYDINGS. There is a very large crowd here. We are trying to accommodate everyone who wants to attend these hearings, but I would like to admonish everyone please to desist from audible conversation and likewise from movement unless it is necessary. The press will want to get the statements of the witnesses and all of the interrogation, and unless we have enough quiet it is going to be difficult for all of the men who represent the new agencies to get the answers and to get the questions. So I hope that we will all try to abide by the request of the Chair.

We are ready to proceed. We have before us Mr. Louis F. Budenz, who has come to the committee in response to a subpoena issued by the committee to testify in the matter that is now pending before us. Mr. Budenz, if you will stand and raise your right hand, I will swear you.

Do you solemnly promise and declare that the testimony you shall give in the matter pending before this committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; I do.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, please.
Give your full name.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS F. BUDENZ, TUCKAHOE, N. Y.

Mr. BUDENZ. Louis Francis Budenz.

Senator TYDINGS. Your age?

Mr. BUNDEZ. Fifty-eight.

Senator TYDINGS. Your post-office address?

Mr. BUDENZ. Tuckahoe, N. Y.

Senator TYDINGS. And your present occupation?

Mr. BUDENZ. Assistant professor of economics at Fordham University.

Senator TYDINGS. We will ask Mr. Morgan to interrogate you, after which members of the committee will have the opportunity, but it occurs to me that you might like to proceed in your own way to make some statement before Mr. Morgan begins his interrogation.

Go ahead, Mr. Budenz.

Mr. BUDENZ. Since I appear before the committee under subpoena as a reluctant if not unwilling witness, I do think a statement would be in order. The statement I have to make is to be, first of all, my connection with the Communist conspiracy in the United States and the instructions and directives I received officially as a member of that conspiracy and in a leading position in that conspiracy.

Secondly, a summary of the evidence that I shall present; and, third, a statement that this evidence can be corroborated, in my opinion.

First of all, on the first point, I would like to state that for 10 years, from 1935 to 1945, I was a member of the Communist Party of the United States. For a few months I was secretly a member, until Earl Browder returned from Moscow, when it was decided that I should be only a member. I became labor editor of the Daily Worker, editor of the Communist paper the Middle West Record, and then managing editor of the Daily Worker, which is the official organ of the Communist Party in the United States. I became also at that time president of the publication—of the corporation, rather—which was vested with the control of the publication.

In addition to that I was a member of the Trade Union Commission in Illinois and New York on various occasions of the Communist Party, and a member of the National Trade Union Commission.

In my position as managing editor of the Communist Party specifically I attended a number of meetings of the Politburo, or what is now known as the National Board, of the Communist Party. This was considered necessary to keep me advised with the various segments of the Communist conspiracy and how they were operating.

Senator TYDINGS. Will you name that board again?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is the Politburo, technically, based on the Politburo in Moscow, but known today as the National Board of the Communist Party.

Senator TYDINGS. Right there, has it ever had any other names than the two that you have mentioned?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, Senator. It was also known as the Political Committee of the Communist Party, the National Board of the Communist Political Association, and the National Board of the Communist Party, so far as I can recall.

This is the dominant board in the Communist organization, although the Communist Party, being organized on a strictly espionage and conspiratorial basis, has various rings which are not associated always with each other, and has a secret committee which is in touch with the Communist International representative. That committee is composed of such men as Alexander Trachtenberg; Robert William Weiner, the secret financial agent of the Communist International; the late Joseph Brodsky, the attorney; Alexander Bittelman, chief theoretician of the Communist Party, an illegal alien here, as are a number of these gentlemen; and others, so that the Communist Party is set up on not a democratic basis but a conspiratorial basis.

However, in this picture the Politburo played a considerable part in receiving instructions and in giving directions.

In addition to my attendance at the Politburo from time to time——
Senator TYDINGS. From whom does the Politburo receive instructions?

Mr. BUDENZ. The Politburo receives its instructions from the Communist International representatives, who receive them from Moscow.

From time to time I attended the Politburo meetings, although I did not attend all of them. I was not a member of the Politburo, but was called upstairs to what we call the ninth floor in the building at 35 East Twelfth Street, which is the headquarters of the Communist Party. In addition to this official connection, it being requisite on me to attend certain of these meetings in order to understand what was occurring within the Communist movement, I also received direct instructions, well, almost hourly, as a matter of fact, but certainly every day, from the liaison officer connected with the Politburo. We had a liaison officer appointed who gave me instructions from day to day and in addition to that kept refreshing me on a list of about a thousand names which I was compelled to keep in my mind as to their various attitudes toward the party, the various shifts and changes, whether a man had turned a traitor or whether he had not, and things of that sort. This list was not put down in writing because of the fact that it might be disclosed, consequently I was compelled to keep it in my mind, and this representative of the political bureau, the Politburo, kept refreshing my mind on this list of names. In that way I could examine a copy of the Daily Worker or any information or receive information intelligently.

The representatives of the political bureau to the Daily Worker during various years were in turn successively Alexander Bittelman, the chief theoretician of the party, illegal alien, long resident of the United States; William Z. Foster; Eugene Dennis; and Jack Stachel. Jack Stachel is perhaps the most powerful member of the political bureau, having assigned to him constant contact with the Communist International apparatus, however the word may come or however the orders and directives may be received.

During the latter part of my association with the Daily Worker, in fact during a considerable part, Jack Stachel having come out from the underground where he had been hidden for quite a while during the Hitler-Stalin period, became the liaison man with the Daily Worker and was so until the time that I left in October 1945. Therefore, as managing editor of the Daily Worker I received these instructions officially as to what to do, as to the attitude to take on individuals, and as to other matters connected with the efficiency of the Communist organization in this country, including from time to time its infiltration into various organizations and other key spots in this country.

In connection with this infiltration, I would like to state that detailed names were not always supplied me, but the general picture or large-sized names were given to me where it would guide me, but the names of small fry, if you wish to call them that, of those who were infiltrating on a small basis, were kept secret by men like Eugene Dennis, who was specifically, as I know, among other activities, infiltrating the Office of Strategic Services, and other men of that character, those vested with the responsibility of immediate infiltration. Therefore it is what we might call the large-sized names or people who stand out who were given to me, or who were active, or who in some other way were significant.

Therefore these instructions and recommendations and information came to me in my official capacity as managing editor of the Daily Worker.

In this connection, although I do not wish to develop this testimony myself, Senator, I would like to give a brief summary of my testimony.

That is to say, among the cells organized was a cell in the Institute of Pacific Relations. This was an organization, not a Communist organization, founded by the Young Men's Christian Association, if I am correctly informed.

Senator TYNINGS. Mr. Budenz, in order to clear up any misunderstanding, are you referring now to the cell as not being a Communist organization, or the Institute of Pacific Relations not being a Communist organization?

Mr. BUDENZ. The cell was Communist, but the Institute of Pacific Relations was not a Communist organization.

Senator TYNINGS. I was sure that was what you meant, but I wanted to make that clear on the record.

Mr. BUDENZ. It is somewhat the same as the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers Union, composed of 500,000 patriotic Americans, but who have been directed and guided and misled by a group of Communists who held 95 percent of the offices. While the Institute of Pacific Relations I will not say had 95 percent of its offices in the hands of Communists, I will say it was successfully infiltrated by the Communists, and it was to a large measure infiltrated and controlled during a period by them.

Senator TYNINGS. Would you fix when you think that period was that you think it was controlled by the Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to testify, Senator, only on what came to my knowledge in the party. I don't want to engage in speculation, so that I would say that I knew of this in 1936, from then on. That doesn't mean that I knew the various episodes then; it does mean that I knew, for instance, Frederick Vanderbilt Field, a Communist whom I knew first as Comrade Spencer; and then later on as Mr. Field, that he was one of the sources of infiltration. He became Secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Affairs, and to my knowledge reported to the Politburo. I have been there when he reported. Therefore he was one of the agencies of infiltration.

With him was associated Philip Jaffe; though he was not immediately in the Institute of Pacific Relations, he was connected with Mr. Field surreptitiously in China Today. That was an open Communist publication which advocated a Red China. China Today was edited, at least to my knowledge, by Mr. Field under the name of Mr. Spencer at the very same time that as Frederick Vanderbilt Field he was operating in the Institute of Pacific Relations as Secretary of the American Branch.

Mr. Jaffe was not officially connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations, but made many contacts there according to the official reports made to me. Mr. Jaffe was editor, by the way, of China Today at one time under the surreptitious name of Philips, but if I recall correctly he later put his own name there.

Around the Institute of Pacific Relations also was established the magazine Amerasia, of which Mr. Jaffe became editor, and which also was designed to influence Pacific affairs. Mr. Jaffe and Mr. Field, I might tell this committee directly, to my knowledge are solely espionage agents--Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Philip Jaffe.

In this cell there was also Owen Lattimore. This I know from reports received in the Politburo, and given to me officially as managing editor of the Daily Worker. Mr. Lattimore, when I first learned this in 1937, was connected with the publications of the Institute of Pacific Affairs. In a specific meeting to which I refer, Mr. Lattimore was commended by Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Earl Browder for the fact that he had been responsible for the placing of a number of Communist writers in the organs of the Institute of Pacific Affairs, of which he was then the editor. Among these writers reported to me, although that may not have been in 1937, was James S. Allen, for instance, representative of the Communist International in the Philippines, who also became foreign editor of the Daily Worker. James S. Allen wrote for Pacific Affairs during the editorship of Mr. Lattimore. I could name a number of other Communists, but I shall perhaps defer that until later.

In 1937, then, at a meeting called by Earl Browder, it was brought forward that we were now under instructions to name the Chinese Communists or represent them no longer as Red Communists, but we had formerly played them up as being the spearhead of the revolution, with their Soviet Army, the Red army, and the like. But we were to begin to represent them, as Earl Browder said, as "North Dakota nonpartisan leaguers."

Field was present at that meeting and made a report at which he commended Mr. Lattimore's zeal in seeing that Communists were placed as writers in Pacific Affairs, and that this had been particularly noted during this last year, 1936 and 1937. Mr. Browder also referred to that, and it was agreed that Mr. Lattimore should be given general direction of organizing the writers and influencing the writers in representing the Chinese Communists as agrarian reformers, or as North Dakota nonpartisan leaguers.

Senator TYDINGS. Was Mr. Lattimore present at the meeting where this occurred?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no, sir. He was not there.

Senator GREEN. Do you know Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. Do you mean personally?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not.

Senator GREEN. Have you ever seen Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I have not. As a matter of fact, however, I did not see Mr. Alger Hiss, either, and I knew him to be a Communist and so testified before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Senator GREEN. But you are not reasoning that everyone you have never seen and never heard may be a Communist. Is that your argument?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; that is not.

Senator GREEN. All right, sir; go ahead.

Mr. BUDENZ. In regard to another event that I could testify to, in 1943, at a regular meeting of the political bureau, at which Mr. Browder was present and others whom I could name, it was again officially reported that Mr. Lattimore, through Mr. Field, had received word from the apparatus that there was to be a change of line on Chiang Kai-shek. This is one of those complicated incidents which occurred in Communist line development, and I shall have to explain that in more detail than I perhaps should do in my summary. However, I would say that there it was decided that the line was to attack Chiang Kai-shek; that, as a matter of fact, an article was discussed, to be put in one of the organs of the Institute of Pacific Relations; and it did so appear, by T. A. Bisson, declaring that Nationalist China was feudal China, and Red China was democratic China. We at the same time, however, in order to get instructions, cabled to Moscow later, after some discussion of this matter, and received an article back by one named Rogoff, which attacked the appeasers in China, as it called it, and directed it against Chiang Kai-shek, although I am not certain that he mentioned Chiang Kai-shek by name. I have not had the opportunity to examine the article since. It was an important article, because later Rogoff denied the article and in addition to that said he was misrepresented, and in addition to that Harriet Lucy Moore, in the Institute of Pacific Relations, said that there had been a mistake made, or something like that.

As a matter of fact what happened, according to the information received by us, was that from that time on we did go after Chiang Kai-shek in the idea of a coalition government. The coalition government was a device used by the Communists always to slaughter those whom they brought into the coalition, and Moscow had some difficulty in advising the Communists to oppose Chiang Kai-shek, but at the same time to advise the public that we were still for Chiang Kai-shek, because they had to plead the coalition government, and coalition means that you do not denounce publicly the person you are coalescing with. That has occurred many times, and with opportunity I could present to the committee documentary evidence that this has occurred many times in Communist policies, where this difficulty has arisen, of Moscow advising you how to act yourself, and at the same time to put forward a public policy of praise for a certain group with whom you are cooperating only to destroy them.

In addition to that, in 1944 I shall be able to state that Jack Stachel, at the time Mr. Lattimore went to China as an adviser to Vice President Henry Wallace—and by the way, Mr. Wallace's trip was followed with very great care and detail by the Communist Party—that at that time Jack Stachel advised me to consider Owen Lattimore as a Communist, which to me meant, because that was our method of discussing these matters, to treat as authoritative anything that he would say or advise.

Again in 1945, Senator, there arose the Amerasia case, the stealing of documents from Washington by Mr. Jaffe. I can say that, because he pleaded guilty and was fined $2,500.

Senator TYDINGS. In what year was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. 1945. I don't want to go into too much detail on this, but I would like to state that there was consternation on the ninth floor of the Communist headquarters at the time of these raids on Amerasia, that the first decision was to represent Mr. Jaffe and his associates as Nazi-Japanese agents; that is, for the time being, but that that was thrown overboard the next day. It was there reported that some of the defendants, at least—I remember the names of, well, I think perhaps the names of these defendants had better be mentioned in executive session, unless the Senators feel otherwise, for this reason: I mean to say I am perfectly willing to mention them, but I think that maybe in justice to the Federal Bureau of Investigation that should not be done.

Senator TYDINGS. Just hesitate a moment.

I conferred with the members of the committee, and you may give any names you want in executive session, and if I am wrong in stating the position of the committee I hope any member will correct me. If at any time you feel that there is any part of your testimony that you should deliver, for reasons that you deem wise, in executive session, you may tell us and we will arrange for that sort of hearing, or you may testify in the open, as you see fit. Is that satisfactory to all the members of the committee?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No; not necessarily, Mr. Chairman. I feel that if this witness bases his request for mentioning names in executive session on the ground that to mention them publicly would hamper the normal operation of present activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that we should consider that. If it is only a matter of this witness' own personal preference, I think he should mention them in public. But if there is some overriding public interest that in his mind demands that they be mentioned in private, then I am willing to consider it.

Senator TYDINGS. That was what I intended to say. However, I probably did not express it as clearly as the Senator from Iowa. That was the purport of what I intended to say.

Senator Green would like to be heard on this matter.

Senator GREEN. I would like to ask the witness first whether he has given these names to the FBI.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. All of them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

The reason that I mentioned this is not because of any personal preference. The reason is because, well, I think in executive session I could better explain the position of certain of these gentlemen.

Senator GREEN. Have you also given to the FBI all the evidence you have against each?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am not certain of that, Senator.

Senator GREEN. You should.

Mr. BUDENZ. I should, but the point is, I have given more time, Senator, to the FBI than any man in the United States. Sometimes I give 18 hours a week. I do not mean that I shouldn't do better than that. I am trying to make amends for some of the things I did, but there is just a physical limit to what I can do. I have been so occupied with prosecutions—you understand, Senator, in the prosecution of the 11 Communist leaders I devoted every day that I had a holiday, including my whole Christmas holiday, to the Government representatives and to the FBI. Well, I mean, I can't give the FBI everything I know because of the physical limitations. That is, I shall give to them, before I shall make anything public, all the information I have.

Senator GREEN. Do I understand that you have some evidence against some of these persons which you have not given to the FBI? Is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; there is. And that is only due to physical limitations.

Senator GREEN. Yes. Then I think you are not in a position to give it to the committee for the same reason, is that not so?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think that is correct—well, to the committee? I would have to consider very seriously. You see, in giving evidence a man has to give some consideration to the circumstances and the facts surrounding them, and that is another matter involved here that I want to think over very carefully, exactly what I can honestly say about these defendants.

Senator GREEN. Why do you suggest giving it to the committee if you haven't and do not propose to give it to the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, Senator, I only meant to give to the committee those facts which the committee thinks in good conscience I can give it. That is to say, I do not intend to give to the committee, unless they insist upon it, evidence which I have not given to the FBI.

Senator GREEN. Then you do not propose of your own volition to give to the FBI all the evidence you plan to give to the committee?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; I do. I intend to give to the FBI everything, and have to the best of my ability given to them every bit of information. As I say, if I may put it that way, I really do not know of any man—of course the FBI may—who has given so much time to the Government agencies as I have. That is to say, sometimes, although this is not normal, I have given 18 hours a week. I gave all last year every holiday that I had to assisting the Government in the trial of the 11 Communist leaders, and there are other matters of that kind which I do not wish to detail to take up your time.

Senator GREEN. The reason I asked these questions is because I attached a condition to my consent to the action of the committee, and it is that you give to the FBI all the evidence that you propose to give to the committee.

Mr. BUDENZ. I will be glad to do that, Senator. That has always been my attitude, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge has asked for time to make a statement.

Senator LODGE. In view of this interruption, I would like to repeat my conviction, which I have often expressed before, that these public proceedings in all probability hamper our investigative agencies and certainly injure the American position abroad, and in the future I hope that this and all similar investigations will be energetically carried on behind closed doors, and that is where I will ask my questions. It is obviously impossible to make a determination here as to what—that is, a certain determination as to what—it is that you can say in public and what it is that you must say in private, insofar as the best interests of the United States are concerned, so we ought to do this in private and then come out with our conclusions in public, in my opinion.

Senator TYDINGS. We will have an executive meeting of this committee at 10:30 a.m. in room G-23 in the Capitol. It will be very proper for any member of the committee to make a motion about future hearings at that time for the consideration of the full committee.

Proceed, sir.

Mr. BUDENZ. Continuing, Senator, it was there reported by Jack Stachel that Mr. Lattimore had been in touch with some of the defendants, or they had been in touch with him, and that he had been of service in the Amerasia case. That is a summary of my evidence.

Now, in addition to that, however, I would like to say that up until 1940 or '41—of course when I say it is a summary of my evidence, it isn't the full body of it. In 1940 or '41, up until 1940 or '41, the Politburo of the Communist Party issued throughout the country on onion-skin documents which were official documents sent to the national committee members, and also I can't say to my knowledge, but to my best information, officially received, sent to Moscow. These Politburo meetings were full of the whole discussions which were conducted. They were on onion-skin paper and were sent to a common center through a mail drop and distributed to the members of the national committee. I recall that very specifically in Chicago, for example, where we received them through Morris Childs, representative of the Communist Party there.

These documents in the discussions on the Far East referred to various people in the party by their initials, because otherwise they would be disclosed, and in those documents in the discussion of Mr. Lattimore his name appeared under the initial "I." or "XL." I was so advised by Jack Stachel in the office in New York and as a matter of fact, these onion-skin papers were considered so confidential that we were forbidden to burn them. We had to tear them up in small pieces and destroy them through the toilet. Then later we were ordered to give them to a common center.

As a matter of fact, much of the Communist devices are carried on through these onion-skin instructions, which constantly are carried forward. The reason burning is forbidden is that it would create attention and would leave embers.

However, I do wish to state that on these reports to the Politburo, some of which may be available, though I don't know where they would be—there is the initial "I." or "XL" on far eastern affairs, which refers to Mr. Lattimore. We were so advised and instructed for our information.

The third thing I would like to bring to the attention of the committee is that with due diligence and investigation—and I am just making this as a recommendation, not in any way passing comment on the investigation, I think you understand—corroborative evidence can be obtained. I would recommend to this committee that they subpoena Frederick Vanderbilt Field, all of his financial accounts and all of his records. I accuse him here as a Soviet espionage agent who used money to influence the Institute of Pacific Relations.

When I say I accuse him, Senator, I have not all the facts. I accuse him on the basis of information stated by Mr. Field in reports. I recommend that Philip Jaffe be subpoenaed, and that Jack Stachel be subpoenaed, and perhaps Earl Browder, but certainly Jack Stachel, as the man who is the center of all these instructions and activities, and as the man who gave me direct instructions in these cases.

It may be that as Communists they will not corroborate fully my evidence, but one thing can be elicited from them, and that is a great number of facts which will support strongly what I have to say.

In addition to that I am sure, although this was confined, Senator, to a very small group—we must understand the Communist conspiracy, namely that it is not a democratic body, operating through rings and subcommittees. Although this was confined to a small group, I am sure there are other witnesses that can be obtained that will testify on this matter.

Then, in addition to that, I have not the time to present, although certainly I wish to appreciate the courtesy of the committee in permitting me to appear on Thursday rather than Monday; I have not had the opportunity to examine the many documents that I can present to this committee in what I consider to be corroboration. The committee may think otherwise, but that is my thought.

I would like to have the privilege of about 2 weeks to present this documentary evidence, in order that it will be done properly. I would be very glad to do that, and to present to the committee documentary evidence which will take me time to assemble.

However, I do wish to present, in corroboration of my testimony, an article by a man who is an expert on the Far East, the Reverend James F. Kearney, of the Society of Jesus, in his article on Disaster In China appearing in the Columbia, the official organ of the Knights of Columbus, in September 1940. In this article Father Kearney declares, "There are those who believe, though, that no Americans deserve more credit for the Russian triumph in the Sino-American disaster than Owen Lattimore and a small group of his followers." But Father Kearney doesn't make this charge. He examines Mr. Lattimore's record and his declarations and his activities to support it.

I wish to present this to the committee as the first corroborative evidence.

Senator GREEN. May I ask you whether you have given the FBI these documents, submitted them to them, which you propose to submit to the committee?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think that I have, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Don't you know whether you have or not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, I have cooperated with the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the utmost of my ability.

Senator GREEN. For a long time. You told us that before.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. I want to know whether you submitted these documents to the FBI.

Mr. BUDENZ. My impression is that I have.

Senator GREEN. Don't you know?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know that I have called their attention to this document and to the next one I intend to present.

Senator GREEN. You spoke about documents it would take you 2 weeks to prepare.

Mr. BUDENZ. Those documents, I have not had an opportunity to present those.

Senator GREEN. Have you given the same advice to the FBI that you have kindly given this committee as to whom we ought to investigate?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the FBI knows pretty well that I think Frederick Vanderbilt Field should be investigated.

Senator GREEN. That is not my question.

Mr. BUDENZ. I misunderstand.

Senator GREEN. My question is, have you given the FBI the same advice that you have given this committee?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know that I have. I am not certain of that. That is to say, after all, as I say, there is a physical limitation to how many conferences I can have with the FBI. I gave to the FBI everything they ask of me, and in addition to that, of course, from time to time I have to check on the information.

Senator GREEN. Don't you think it is the duty of a good American citizen to notify the FBI when you have suspicions, based on evidence, and to supply them with the evidence? Don't you think that is the duty of every good American citizen?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, if you will examine the hours I spent with the FBI giving them information from the first 3 days of Notre Dame until the present day, I will say, unless the record can be challenged successfully, that no American has given so many hours to the FBI, and at all hours of the day and night, and at any time, as I have.

I will say, Senator, that I believe every bit of information should be given to the FBI, but there is a physical limitation, particularly when you have to have a responsible position and have to check carefully on what you present to them.

Senator GREEN. If you think this evidence is so important that this committee should investigate it thoroughly within 2 weeks, don't you think you should have brought it to the attention of the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. As I go forward I wish to assure you, Senator, that I shall give every document to the FBI.

Senator GREEN. I am not asking about what you are going to do in the future. I am asking about your conduct in the past. Don't you think it was your duty to bring it to the attention of the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do think it was my duty, but I also know that physically I have certain limitations.

Senator GREEN. We all have.

Mr. BUDENZ. And I contend that 18 hours a week of the time of a person with the FBI—and I do not want to represent that that is a regular thing, and I contend that every week holiday and my whole Christmas holidays and all other times I can be reached, I give to the FBI, or I mean to government agencies. I cannot see how I can do more. I am ready to give to the FBI every bit of documentary evidence I have, and that has been my attitude always. In fact, I try as hard as I can always to give the FBI materials first of all. In fact, that is my general practice.

Senator GREEN. Then if I may summarize your testimony, it is that you have not given this documentary evidence to the FBI, and you have not given them the advice you have given us.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, I believe that that may be in part technically correct, but I would like you to consider that on these documents I have called them to the attention of the FBI. Whether I have physically handed them over to them I do not know. I have called them to their attention.

In regard to the recommendations I made about Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Philip Jaffe and Mr. Stachel, well, I did not know whether that was essential. I give them information; I didn't know it was essential to make recommendations to them.

Senator TYDINGS. Proceed with your statement, Mr. Budenz. Go ahead.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to also present as the first part of the corroborative evidence, though by no means that which I shall eventually present to the committee, the New Masses of October 1937.

Senator TYDINGS. You know that magazine well, as I believe I can identify it. That is a Communist magazine, is it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Is that an official organ of the party, or published independently by Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is officially under the control of the party, although it has a separate organization, but it reports regularly to the Politburo and is financed in part by the party. As a matter of fact, it is completely controlled by the party. It, by the way, is not in existence any more. They have changed it over to a new magazine. But the New Masses was the Communist Party publication for the intellectual and professional classes.

This is an account of the trip of Mr. Lattimore, Mr. Jaffe, and Mr. Bisson to Red China, written by Mr. Philip J. Jaffe, and at the end we have a commendation here of what happened by Miss Agnes Smedley, whom I know from her own admission to me nearly—let's see—80 years ago, when she was married to Roi, the Indian Communist leader, as a Soviet spy, and Miss Agnes Smedley ends up here—I have further confirmatory evidence of that, through the reports of the late Harry Dennis and others, but Miss Smedley herself acknowledged that to me when she was married to Roi, the Indian Communist leader, under circumstances which I could not divulge, but she concludes, at the end of this statement of the trip of Philip Jaffe, Owen Latimore, and T. A. Bisson, with what it meant to the Chinese Communists, and Mr. Jaffe publishes it here in the New Masses.

I also wish further to present the article which was the subject of discussion in the Politburo in 1948 by Mr. T. A. Bisson—Bisson or Bisson, I have heard it pronounced both ways—on China's part in the coalition war, and this is the organ, by the way, of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, in which you shall find that he asserts that Nationalist China is feudal China and Red China is democratic China.

Later on, as I have stated, I would like the privilege, because of the shortness of the time, to present a considerable analysis of documents further bearing on this matter, documents which I could not get access to in the brief time before me.

In conclusion on this statement, Senator, I wish to say very strongly that I am a lay figure in this matter. I am under subpoena, and I have no interest whatsoever in a partisan way in this controversy. Indeed, I would appeal for a bipartisan, strongly bipartisan, policy against communism. That is my position and has always been my position, and it is in that capacity that I appear here, unwilling, reluctant, stating again that I stand for a strong bipartisan policy against communism, which is the greatest danger that the United States has ever confronted in its history.

I know that because I could, if the committee had time, but they haven't, produce documentary evidence of Stalin's intention to conquer the United States. That may seem absurd, and it may seem foreign from this investigation, but I would like to point out that Stalin is constantly hailed—I have this: "Long live the leader of the working people of the world, Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin." This is the organ of the Cominform, coming into our country, among many of the other seditious publications, advising the Communists how they shall proceed. I do not bring that into this discussion in order to color my testimony otherwise. I just bring it before the committee to indicate my own attitude, namely, that this evidence could be multiplied a thousandfold in the declarations by Stalin that they are expecting the world October, whereby the world Soviet dictatorship shall be established. That is their complete, undeviating policy, even though they clothe it from time to time under changes in tactics.

There are many documentary Communist sources that would confirm this association. It is solely, then, in the effort to combat this determination by Stalin to conquer the United States and establish the world Soviet dictatorship that I come before this committee, and for which I stand.

Senator TRYON. Mr. Budenz, your exhibits will be put into the record immediately following your testimony. Will the clerk mark them "Exhibit 74," "Exhibit 75," and "Exhibit 76" in the order in which they were presented, so they can be quickly identified in the record?

Have you finished, sir?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. I just wanted to ask one question.

In your last statement, and I think in the first statement you made also, you stated that you gave this testimony reluctantly. I think you said that.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Did you give it to Senator McCarthy reluctantly?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not speak to Senator McCarthy at all.

Senator GREEN. I didn't ask you whether you spoke to him. But did you furnish him the information reluctantly?

Mr. BUDENZ. I surely did, very reluctantly. As a matter of fact, I appear everywhere; I call upon anyone who has to be associated with me in any prosecution from Judge McGoey up and down as to whether I do not appear everywhere reluctantly, not because I do not wish to cooperate with the Government but because I have appeared so frequently that I believe there should be a halt at some time to my public appearances.

Senator GREEN. Yes. But you intimated that you only gave this because you were subpoenaed.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator GREEN. Senator McCarthy didn't subpoena you, did he?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir, he did not. However, Senator McCarthy does not know, so far as I know, up to this minute, of my testimony. He may, through friends whom I have talked to, but I have not given to Senator McCarthy my testimony, for the simple reason that I am not associated with Senator McCarthy. As a matter of fact, I am a nonpartisan person.

Senator GREEN. But you know that he had the information from some source, did you not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, sir; I knew he had it. He had only, as I should call it, very fragmentary information.

Senator GREEN. Was that given reluctantly too?

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't give it. It was presented to me in part. It was given very reluctantly, and certainly I stated that I only give this testimony when compelled to do so under subpoena on a nonpartisan basis. That has been my position for 5 years, and it shall continue to be, Senator, because I can't make a speech here on my views now, but I assure you this is not pleasing to me for many reasons.

Senator GREEN. I understand that.

Senator TYDINGS. Now I think the procedure that we agreed upon tentatively was to turn the witness over to Mr. Morgan, counsel. When he has concluded, the members of the committee may ask any questions they desire.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, your testimony thus far has been concerned, as I recall, with primarily four situations occurring in 1937, 1943, 1944, and 1945.

Now, before going further, I would like for you again, at this point, to indicate the exact date, if you recall it, that you went into the Communist Party, and the exact date you left the party.

Mr. BUDENZ. I joined the party in August 1935, because of their Peoples' Front policy. I am not going to plead any apologies, but I did accept at full value, you may recall it in 1935, the Seventh Congress, and they stated that they were going to cooperate with democratic organizations throughout the world, and that seemed to me to be a very remarkable change.

I found, soon, it was not; but I do not want to plead that as an excuse, because immediately I was compelled to make an oath to Stalin. Therefore, I know what I was doing.

I was convinced that the Soviet Union was the banner bearer of the future progress of mankind. That was the reason I joined the Communist Party.

Just a moment—I wanted to explain this, because that was in August 1935, but I was instructed to remain under cover, that is to say, without open affiliation, until Earl Browder had returned from Moscow. When he returned, it was then decided, and Gerhart Eisler joined in, and his voice was very powerful, in agreeing with me, I should be an open Communist, and this was announced in the Daily Worker on October 2, 1935. I remained in the party just exactly 10 years, until October 11, 1945.

Mr. MORGAN. The testimony that you are giving today relates to the knowledge gathered by you during this 10-year period in the party, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is all I can testify to, Counsel.

Mr. MORGAN. You are not presuming, therefore, to give us any evidence with respect to the activities of anyone after October 11, 1945?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Except that I just confirmed it. I thought I was privileged to do so, to do that by Father Kearney's article, which does go beyond that period. However I, from my own knowledge, unofficial knowledge of the character presented, cannot testify to events beyond 1915—I cannot.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, thus far in your statement, Mr. Budenz, you have been giving quite naturally, as I understand it, your understanding, your impression by reason of the position, and it was a high-level position which you held in the Communist Party.

At this point, by way of explaining my line of interrogation, I would like to distinguish carefully, as we go along here, between that which you know of your own knowledge, and that concerning which you have been told.

I would like to begin, initially, with what appears to be our proper starting point here, 1937, and ask you if that was the first time that you ever heard of Owen Lattimore.

Mr. BUDENZ. It is the first time I heard of him in an official capacity, yes, sir. I have heard him mentioned by individuals, but never in an official capacity.

Mr. MORGAN. At this meeting to which you refer, in 1937, will you tell us when the meeting was held?

Mr. BUDENZ. You mean the month?

Mr. MORGAN. As nearly as you can.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I cannot recall the month. It seems to me to be in October, but that may be wrong. The reason I recall that time was—Browder discussed with me, just before the meeting, my going to Chicago, and I went there in November; but it could have been, since that discussion existed over a number of months, it could have been earlier. I will just have to speak of a period. I can't remember dates that well.

Mr. MORGAN. In your testimony, you characterized, and correct me if I am wrong, this meeting as "a conspiracy designed to effect this new line," is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. The Communist Party is purely and exclusively a conspiracy, not a political party in any sense of the word. Its only reason for existence is to engage in recruiting people for espionage work, and for what they call diversive activities, namely, influencing Government, public opinion agencies, and the like. That is all the Communist Party is designed for; and, it is organized on that basis.

You have, first of all——

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that, Mr. Budenz. What I mean in that connection is this; as I remember your testimony, and I do want to be corrected if I am wrong, this meeting in 1937 I believe you characterized as a conspiracy designed to influence policy relative to China. Is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, and we had specific instructions which, by the way, are much broader than I have indicated, that the assignment to the American Communist Party was to see that America acquiesced in a Red China and a Red Poland. I can bring to the committee evidence of this.

As a matter of fact, Earl Browder dissolved the Communist Party and formed the Communist Political Association in May 1944, and in doing so explained to the National Committee that he did so under instructions in order to make America believe that communism was ceasing to be a factor in the scene and that thereby they could obtain acquiescence by America in a Red China and a Red Poland.

Those were the two chief assignments given the American Communist Party. We were told, and by the way the Communist documents said this for many years, China is a key, not only to the conquest of the Pacific, I am not making a literal quote, Senators, but I can show documents to that effect—not only the key to the conquest of the Pacific, but largely a key to the conquest of the world, with its millions of people who can be pressed into armed service.

Mr. MORGAN. Back to our original chain of thought there, Mr. Budenz: Conceding, for the purposes of our discussion here, that that was the conspiracy, as you suggest—is the purport of your testimony that Mr. Lattimore was in this conspiracy that was set up in 1937, at this meeting?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. Mr. Lattimore can be placed in that conspiracy.

Mr. MORGAN. Was Mr. Lattimore present at that meeting?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; he was not present.

Mr. MORGAN. And, upon what information, or upon what evidence, do you base the conclusion that you have made, that Mr. Lattimore, despite the fact that he was not there, was a part of this conspiracy?

Mr. BUDENZ. Upon the official reports of Frederick Vanderbilt Field, whom I know, by official documents, to be associated with Mr. Lattimore in a very close capacity, Mr. Field being secretary of the American branch of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and Mr. Lattimore being editor of its publication; and by the fact that this was part of a series of instructions and directions given me, as time went on, in regard to Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, limiting ourselves at this point to this 1937 meeting, your feeling that Mr. Lattimore was a part of this so-called conspiracy was based on what Frederick Vanderbilt Field told you, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. His report, not to me, but to a group called together by Earl Browder in which Earl Browder agreed, likewise, in his judgment, and he, Browder, was head of that conspiracy at that time—that is to say, as a Communist—they referred to Lattimore.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, I would like to call your attention, if I may at this point, to an article which you wrote, I believe, and which appears in the March 10, 1940, edition of Collier's magazine. Do you recall the article?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe this same meeting is the one to which you refer on page 48 of that article, and if I may, I would like to read here one paragraph, and ask your observation concerning it, referring to this meeting. You say:

We are agreed that the change could not be effected immediately, since our recent emphasis had been on the "revolutionary aspect of the Chinese Soviet." Then Field outlined an alternative, we could work through legitimate Far East organizations and writers that were recognized as oriental authorities. Field emphasized the use of the Institute of Pacific Relations. This is not a Communist organization, but Field later succeeded in becoming Secretary of its American Council. Also chosen were the American League Against War and Fascism, and Friends of the Chinese People, the latter a Red-front organization. Their publications Fight and China Today were to be used in the design.

Now, as I read that statement here, and if I am wrong please correct me, it appears that you were outlining a program to be consummated in the future, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily in the future; to be begun, but to be used as soon as events took place.

Now, I could consult the Daily Worker, I could give you the various changes in the line, I mean, it will take time—that is why I want to present these documents to you—it will take time to show you how this gradually was effected. That is to say, you have to gather men together; you have to perfect an organization; you have to deluge America, as was the fact, with the information.

Now this—

Mr. MORGAN. What I am referring to—

Mr. BUDENZ. Am I off the subject? I thought I was answering your question.

Mr. MORGAN. I want you to have every opportunity to explain your answer, but what I have in mind here is, as I understand the facts—at this meeting in 1937, there was a projected plan of action, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. A conspiracy designed to accomplish a certain objective with respect to China, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. How was Mr. Lattimore properly in the conspiracy, at that point, if he was not present at this meeting, and the plan and project was to be in the future? That is my question.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, he is in the conspiracy because right along, he is officially referred to as being a member of the conspiracy, and he was associated in an intimate capacity with the man making the report. I think that we shall find that they called each other by their first names, and other things of that character.

Mr. MORGAN. Did Mr. Field tell you that Mr. Lattimore, at this point, would be used in the future? Just what did he tell you, Mr. Budenz, at this meeting?

Mr. BUDENZ. It was agreed that Mr. Lattimore, because of his position, which had to be very safely safeguarded, by the way, would be enabled to influence writers and others on this question; and, it was a long-time program, which I outlined as indicated, to some degree, in that article. Of course that is a magazine article, and every word is not chosen carefully, but every word is indicated there.

As a matter of fact, it was carried forward, and revived from time to time, and came into full bloom about 1943 or 1944, as I recall. But, there was this campaign, and it followed from this meeting because we had other reports on this, reports on this to which I did not refer because of the fact that I cannot always locate them in the same way that I can this meeting, by time and by place.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, in order to get this picture, and I think it is very significant for our purposes—at this 1937 meeting, which apparently is the springboard for this entire situation, I would like for you to again indicate to us, as specifically as you can, whether anyone told you at that time that Mr. Lattimore was a member of the Communist Party, or whether you were told that Mr. Lattimore would be used, by Mr. Field, in order to accomplish their objective. Can you help us on that? I think there is some confusion on that score.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; I can.

Mr. Lattimore was referred, of course you understand the Communists do not go around telling each other, "This man is a member of the Communist Party." Mr. Lattimore was referred to as a Communist by Mr. Browder and by Mr. Field, in regard to the work that he had done in placing Communist writers, and that is a matter of public record, in the various organs of the Institute of Pacific Relations; but specifically, Pacific Affairs, of which he was editor, and they had noted that he had done good work in that respect, especially recently, and he was referred to by Mr. Browder, General Secretary of the Communist Party, as a Communist.

Now, in this respect, there are Communist Party members, those who are smaller people, and out-and-out Communists under discipline.

These Communists under discipline, since 1930 or 1940, since the Hitler-Stalin Pact, are ordered not to have any vestige of membership about them, except in exceptional instances where the Politburo decides otherwise, and therefore the expression "as a Communist" or "under Communist discipline" means in fact the same as being a Communist Party member.

Mr. MORGAN. You just made a statement, not that I did not grasp it, but about which I would like for you to comment on further. You say there is documentary evidence of Mr. Lattimore's placing of Communists in key positions in certain publications; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not the act, itself; I said—documentary evidence in the form of names of these Communists in considerable numbers, in the articles in the Pacific Affairs, and I will mention one more, although I don't know whether he wrote just prior to 1937, but at the time Mr. Lattimore was there, and that is James S. Allen, former Communist International representative to the Philippines, and later on, foreign editor of the Daily Worker.

I mentioned him specifically because his name comes immediately to mind. There were many others.

Mr. MORGAN. For our benefit, and for our record, let us see if we can get a little better impression of this 1937 meeting. This was a meeting at which these leaders in the Communist movement in this country gathered together for the purpose of outlining a plan to influence policy with respect to Asia. Now, at that meeting, will you give us some idea of how that was carried on? Would each member suggest ideas as to how he expected to accomplish that objective, and then you finally—

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; that isn't the way Communist meetings are carried out.

Mr. MORGAN. Give us an idea.

Mr. BUDENZ. Communist meeting decisions are largely to find out how you stand on a proposition, see if you are going to carry it out fully. The report is already prepared in advance, just like the Communist trials are prepared in advance. That is to say, Earl Browder opened the meeting—of course, I can't give you all the details, this is quite a while ago—

Mr. MORGAN. Thirteen years ago.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. It made an impression upon me, however, because it was when he got the message that the Chinese Reds, who we always had pictured as our ideal revolutionists, were nothing but

North Dakota Nonpartisan Leaguers, our agrarian reformers, as Mr. Browder said.

Now, in this meeting Mr. Browder opened up, as he would when he was the leader of the organization, by reporting that this was now necessary. Mr. Browder was generally a very abrupt man in his instructions of that character. He had called together not the official Politburo, that doesn't make any difference in the Communist Party, he had called together these people whom I remember just now, J. Peters and Ferucci Marini, or Fred Brown—these were the secret leaders for the Communist International, and the late Harry Gannes, who was an authority on China, a very extensive authority on China, and Carl Bristol, myself, and some others.

At any rate, Mr. Browder opened up by asserting that this was now the policy, and that we would have to develop—

Mr. MORGAN. May I interrupt?

Mr. BUDENZ. Now then, Mr. Field, who had already talked to Mr. Browder, went further. The main meaning of our meeting there was to participate in the discussion so each could receive instructions from Mr. Browder and Mr. Field.

Mr. MORGAN. That, I understand, Mr. Budenz. I understand that the line was set, and was merely accepted by this meeting, consistent with party discipline.

What I had in mind there, was this: that these party leaders, did they or did they not at that meeting plan the means by which they would carry out this predetermined policy? That is what I have in mind.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, they never go into details. I mean to say, that it is not a Communist practice. They merely assign the undertaking to some individual, some Communist responsible is assigned to that work, and so they assigned this work to Mr. Lattimore, to be contacted by Mr. Field.

Now, the thing is that that is a common Communist practice. This is not novel. The Communists do not outline all of the steps to be taken. They leave those steps to the initiative, to the men who are assigned; and, in addition, they leave it to the executive instructions and contacts which are established later with the Politburo members, because except in unusual circumstances, it would take too much time, and that is not the Communist way of proceeding.

Mr. MORGAN. I notice, Mr. Budenz, that in this article in which you have outlined, and by the way, the article is entitled, incidentally, "The Menace of Red China," you have made no reference there whatever to Mr. Lattimore.

Is there any explanation for that?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is certainly an explanation, and that is, that I was not permitted to make the reference. That is, I don't mean there was a censorship, don't misunderstand me. I mean to say that a great number of names, including Mr. Lattimore's, were in my original rough draft. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lattimore is directly, so far as I could, referred to there, by mentioning all the Communist writers who wrote for the Pacific Affairs.

Now, Father Kearney recognized Mr. Lattimore immediately. He put that in his general résumé of Mr. Lattimore's career in The Columbia. In other words, in my original article, I mean the rough draft which I conferred with the Collier's editorial board on, and by the way, I had to confer a long time on that article, for weeks—Mr. Lattimore's name was included, among others, but Collier's did not wish to do it. I agreed with that, for a simple reason: Before I left the party, Senator, the Communist Party-- and this is something that everyone should know-- agreed that after that period of 1945, that with the cold war beginning, all concealed Communists should sue anyone who accused them of being Communists, sue them for libel.

As Alexander Trachtenberg, who made the report, said: "This is not necessarily for the purpose of winning the libel suit, it is to bleed white anyone who dares to accuse anyone of being a Communist, so that they will be shut up." And, as a matter of fact, that became the policy.

You must understand that before that, the exact opposite was the policy, you were forbidden to sue for libel on the ground of being a Communist, because it was considered that the case would cast a degradation upon the Communist Party. With the cold war on, they knew the Communist Party was going to be degraded anyway, in the public mind, so it was agreed to shut up, and this plan was very successful, those who might speak in organs, or in the press or over the radio, of concealed Communists-- that the concealed Communists, as a matter of duty, were to sue them for libel, and we have a very striking case of Mrs. McCullough, the wife of the editor of Time magazine, who, even if she wins the case, is going to lose $55,000 from the costs of the case.

Now, that was considered by me when the Colliers editorial staff, or the representative of it, dealt with me, and deleted not only Mr. Lattimore's name, but a number of others from this article.

Mr. FORRAN. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt for a moment?

There came into my possession this morning, some documents dealing with this subject. I hastily wrote out some questions relating to these documents, and I now hand them in and ask that they be asked of this witness, in accordance with the committee's previously announced policy.

Senator TRONSON. Would you like for Mr. Morgan to ask them?

Mr. FORRAN. If you please, sir.

Senator TRONSON. At this point—

Mr. FORRAN. At this point, I think these are pertinent, if Mr. Morgan will ask.

Mr. MORGAN. Before asking these questions Mr. Budenz, I would like to ask you what you said in that article about Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. BUDENZ. The only thing I said there was the reference, which is in there, to the infiltration of the—so far as I can recall—of these Red writers into the organs of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Did you refer, in this article, to Mr. Lattimore as a Communist, or someone carrying out this program?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no, no, no—

Mr. MORGAN. What did you say about him in the article?

Mr. BUDENZ. I just referred to him as the editor during that period. This was in the first rough draft of the article which we discussed before I wrote the article.

Mr. MORGAN. Pursuant to the request of the Chairman, I show you this document, Mr. Budenz—

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. A document consisting of 22 pages —

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, in keeping with the past custom in this hearing, where questions or documents or even exhibits have been offered for, or are being put into the record, I think the committee members are entitled to see what these questions are, in advance.

I do not have any objection to any questions that I know of, but we have followed that custom, and I see no reason for not following it still.

Senator TYDINGS. As I understand it, the exhibit is not being put in the record at this point, it is simply being tendered to the witness for the purposes of identification. Later on, if it is offered for the record, I think the committee might want to see it before it is made a part of the record.

However, in this proceeding, there is a rather wide latitude of opinion, and all sorts of latitude with the normal rules of evidence, and the chairman does not want to take an arbitrary position, either on one side or the other—

Mr. FORRAN. Mr. Chairman, will you indulge me?

In all fairness, I should say that these documents came to me in the mail this morning, but did not come from Collier's magazine. I think I owe it to the magazine to state that.

Senator TYDINGS. We will give Mr. Budenz time to look over the document, and identify it before the questioning proceeds. That is the point of tendering it to him.

Mr. BUDENZ. This is not, as a matter of fact, first of all, Senator, this is not the original outline to which I referred, or discussed with Collier's, but nevertheless this refreshes my memory. That is to say, this does say:

Two men of distinction who have seen eye to eye with Mr. Field for a long time in regard to China, and who have enjoyed close personal relations with him are Owen Lattimore, author of Solution in Asia, and Joseph Barnes, former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune and now editor of the leftist New York Star. As a Communist, I have read the names of Messrs. Lattimore and Barnes frequently referred to in reports by Mr. Field, and also in the most complimentary manner. They have been devoted adherents of the "Poor Chinese agrarian reformer" theory.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Budenz, I don't want to stop you from testifying, but I understand the document was submitted to you first for the purposes of identification, and we are getting it into the record without the committee seeing it, which Senator Hickenlooper does not want done.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question about this document, I am only asking—

Senator TYDINGS. I don't know how to rule. You say that has been the rule. You want to see it. I am trying to meet your point of view. It is difficult for me to tell what you want us to do.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that it had been a custom in these hearings that documents and questions, especially if there have been a series of questions submitted, be given to the committee members for their examination.

I see no reason to vary that rule at this moment—

Senator TYDINGS. That is exactly what I am trying to do. Mr. Budenz is not to read it into the record before the committee has seen it, in accordance with the request that you just made.

Go ahead.

Mr. MORGAN. May I clear this up. First for identification, that is, of a document presented to us by counsel for Mr. Lattimore. Mr. Budenz, I show you a document consisting of 22 pages and ask you whether this is not your original draft of the Collier's article which appeared in the March 10, 1940, issue of that magazine.

Mr. BUDENZ. It is the original draft, but there was a rough draft before, which I took personally and discussed—there have been, as a matter of fact, about 6 or 10 revisions of that article. There were rather—

Mr. MORGAN. Will you turn to pages 13 and 14, and read into the record the two paragraphs which mention Mr. Lattimore, and are marked with black pencil.

Mr. BUDENZ. Thirteen and fourteen?

Senator TYDINGS. Just a minute. Before you do that, I would like to ask any member of the committee, before it is read into the record, if he would like to see the document so that we will have a uniform procedure.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes; I would like very much to see the document, and also state, in keeping with past objections that have been raised here by some of the members, that if part of that document goes in, the whole document goes in.

Senator TYDINGS. The whole will be put in, if a part is read; but I understand, for the purposes of this interrogation, while it will all be offered, there are certain parts that will be used for interrogation.

Would you like to look over my shoulder, while I am reading this? (There was a conference off the record.)

Senator TYDINGS. Without objection, the whole article will be put in the record, and counsel will continue with his interrogation.

(The document above referred to was thereupon marked "Exhibit 77" and will be found in the files of the committee.)

Mr. MORGAN. Let the article be identified for the record, please.

Senator TYDINGS. It has been requested that the article be identified, marked as the proper exhibit number, and the date of it will be given and any other characteristics. Please identify it so that we can all follow the interrogation.

Will you do that, Mr. Budenz; or will you do it, Mr. Morgan, in your own way?

Mr. MORGAN. I think Mr. Budenz might read the items referred to on pages 13 and 14.

Mr. BUDENZ. There is no date of identification.

Senator TYDINGS. What is that?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is no date.

Senator TYDINGS. What was it written for?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was written as one of several original drafts for Collier's magazine.

Senator TYDINGS. And when was it offered?

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, I want to say on this, Senator, that this was first a rough outline or draft which I went down and discussed. Then I sent this. It was intended that this would be very severely edited, and it was presented in that manner. It was not the final publication by any means. However, I may state that I have read this since.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me ask you, what was the date at the time you wrote that article, approximately?

Mr. BUDENZ. That I can't recall, because it dragged on. I tell you it was, approximately, on this Red Menace in China article I had the longest discussion. It took weeks. I think it started back in 1949 and went on into 1950, now, let me say. Is that correct? Yes; I think that is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. Now, is this the first draft you wrote and took down or the second draft?

Mr. BUDENZ. This is the first draft I left at Collier's.

Senator TYDINGS. That is it.

Mr. BUDENZ. I did have a rough draft of it made which we discussed first. In that I had Mr. Lattimore's name, and it was agreed that in regard to certain things it should be left out. Nevertheless, I felt that I should present as much material as I had, and I presented this to Collier's.

Senator TYDINGS. In other words, to sum up, in 1949 and perhaps extending over into 1950, testifying from recollection, after you had discussed this matter for some weeks with the editors of Collier's magazine and had brought in some rough notes originally for the purpose of discussion, you went back home and prepared this article and—

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; this was prepared earlier than these extended discussions.

Senator TYDINGS. Oh, this was prepared the first thing—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right; very hurriedly prepared.

Senator TYDINGS. And you took this down as a basis for the article, and you have written it in a general sort of a way?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. And left it with Collier's magazine for their perusal and further conference if necessary?

Mr. BUDENZ. We had first an original conference, which I have outlined. We had, secondly, this thing presented for editorial discussion, and then several other issues and copies were prepared. As a matter of fact, it was rewritten four or five times.

Senator TYDINGS. But this is the first one?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was the first left with Collier's.

Senator TYDINGS. I think we have properly identified it. Go ahead, Mr. Morgan, with your interrogation.

Mr. MORGAN. If you will turn to pages 13 and 14, Mr. Budenz, and read that portion of the article relating to Mr. Lattimore, and so that everything you have said about him is comprehended by the committee, read it all.

Mr. BUDENZ (reading):

Two men of distinction who have seen eye to eye with Mr. Field for a long time in regard to China, and who have enjoyed close personal relations with him are Owen Lattimore, author of Solution in Asia, and Joseph Barnes, former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune and now editor of the leftist New York Star. As a Communist, I have heard the names of Messrs. Lattimore and Barnes frequently referred to in reports by Mr. Field, and always in the most complimentary manner. They have been devoted adherents of the "poor Chinese Communist agrarian reformer" theory.

It is somewhat startling, nevertheless, to discover Mr. Lattimore as a specific endorser of Dilemma in Japan by Lt. Andrew Roth.

Senator McMAHON. I cannot hear him.

Mr. MORGAN. Read that again.

Mr. BUDENZ (repeating):

It is somewhat startling, nevertheless, to discover Mr. Lattimore as a specific endorser of Dilemma in Japan by Lt. Andrew Roth. Indeed, Mr. Lattimore hails Mr. Roth as representing "the younger school of American experts."

Mr. MORGAN. Were these the only references—and I am continuing the counsel's questions—were these the only references to Mr. Lattimore in this manuscript?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would have to look through it to see. There is a rough—no, not to Mr. Lattimore directly on the question of his—of the Communists in the Pacific affairs while he was editor, but he is mentioned.

Senator TYDINGS. Was this the only time that his name was mentioned?

Mr. BUDENZ. It seems to be, Senator. I wouldn't say for sure, but it seems to be.

Senator TYDINGS. We can correct it later if it proves erroneous. You have very little time to look it over.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. But, from your quick summary, you would say these are the only times.

Go ahead, Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you recall a conference concerning the manuscript for the Colliers article with Mr. Leonard Parris, who was then the associate editor of Colliers?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, I don't recall specifically. I remember Mr. Parris in general.

Mr. MORGAN. Not recalling the conference, you would not recall, I presume, whether a stenographer was or was not present at the conference with Mr. Parris?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would not, no.

Mr. FORTAS. I beg your pardon, Mr. Morgan. I believe the witness said he did recall a conference at which Mr. Parris was present.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, I do recall such a conference; yes, I do.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you recall whether the conference was transcribed by a stenographer or whether a stenographer was present?

Mr. BUDENZ. There may have been. I can't recall it definitely. I had many, many conferences on this article.

Mr. MORGAN. I have been handed, Mr. Chairman—and I want to make it very clear that I haven't seen this material before at all—I have in my hand a document which purports to be a transcription of your conversation with Mr. Parris.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. And I read certain questions and answers relating to Mr. Lattimore which appear on pages 2 and 3 of that document, the questions being asked—

Senator TYDINGS. Just let me interrupt you. First of all, I think the witness would have no way of identifying that document.

Mr. MORGAN. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that it would be impossible to identify it through this witness.

Senator TYDINGS. All right. Then before you pursue it, let the committee have it for a moment, and then we will come back to your question.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, may I say that these questions end up by asking the witness whether he recalls the questions and answers. This is a customary way, as I recall, of refreshing a witness' recollection.

Senator TYDINGS. We will get around to that, but we are not at that point yet, Mr. Fortas.

Senator HICKENZOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I think the procedure is being a little confused here. We have decided that neither Mr. Lattimore nor Mr. McCarthy would be permitted to ask any questions, and apparently counsel for Mr. Lattimore is violating that rule. I believe that the proper method of presentation of any questions he has to ask is to present them to the committee and to be asked through counsel, as has been quite consistently agreed by the committee, and I object to this procedure unless we change our line of conduct of this hearing.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Fortas, I do not want to get into whether this is proper or improper, but it would help the committee to proceed with dispatch if you would have questions asked through counsel or members of the committee. I understand, however, that this is not a question. It was a suggestion, but even so, it might be misconstrued, and we do not want any misconception.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard very briefly on that? It was my understanding that counsel for Mr. Lattimore was at liberty to hand to the committee questions to be asked of the witness.

Senator TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FORTAS. And that is precisely what I have done. I regret my interruptions if they have been excessive, but it was merely for the purpose of facilitating the asking of these questions which I have handed up in due course, and you recognize, Mr. Chairman and the other members of the committee too, that this method of cross-examination, if it can be called such, is an extremely difficult one for counsel who is trying to represent a client, and I am trying to proceed here pursuant to the committee's rules. I respectfully press my request that the questions submitted to the committee which are pertinent to this inquiry and pertinent to this witness' testimony be asked of this witness at this time.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, Mr. Fortas, we will be very glad to ask any questions from time to time that you want asked if you will send them up to the committee, and I think we are all agreed on the procedure, so I really do not see any need of laboring the matter. I think we can go on from here. We will just take a little silence for a moment. Engage in conversation if you want to. Take a recess for 30 seconds while we look at this. If anybody wants to stand up and sit down again, go ahead and do it.

(The committee took a short recess.)

Senator TYDINGS. Please come to order. I suppose, Mr. Morgan, you will want the entire transcript put in the record, and it will be done without objection of the committee, and you may proceed with your interrogation.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make quite clear that these questions are indicated here, I am necessarily asking them as they are presented to me because I do not want to change them in one way or another.

Now, I have in my hand a document which purports to be a transcription of your conversation with Mr. Paris, and I read certain questions and answers relating to Mr. Lattimore which appear on pages 2 and 3 of that document, the questions being asked by Mr. Paris and the answers being given by you.

Now, let us see, Mr. Chairman. If I am to read those questions and answers pursuant to the request of Mr. Lattimore's counsel, I will need this document.

Senator TYDINGS. Let Mr. Budenz have it a minute to mark places so he will know what you are referring to, then you can proceed.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, in the first place—

Senator TYDINGS. Don't testify on it yet. Just familiarize yourself with it and wait until the question is asked.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Then you can testify at any length you want.

Mr. BUDENZ. What is your request, Mr. Counsel?

Senator TYDINGS. Hand the document back a minute.

Mr. BUDENZ. That you ask—

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want it back?

Mr. MORGAN. I have to ask this question.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I thought you had the notes on it. I am sorry. I think I appreciate what you want. I just want to be sure.

Mr. MORGAN. I am on page 2 now, Mr. Budenz, Paris ostensibly doing the questioning. The answers are apparently attributed to you:

Question: You tell about Browder saying that the followers of Mao Tse Tung had to be presented in a new light. It's easy to see that this was an idea the Communists had to push. Don't show that they invented this idea, show that they fostered it.

Answer: I'll do that.

Question: You have done one thing here that I think is not good. By inference you implied that Joe Barnes and Lattimore are not Communists exactly but are fellow travelers. You say the Communists supposedly endorsed Roosevelt.

Answer. I think probably what we ought to do is to leave out those names entirely. Perhaps we can rephrase it some way. I said it merely to show that they would add meat to what I was saying.

Question. From our standpoint it seems that you were damning these people. This might put us in an embarrassing legalistic position. We have no particular reason to smear Lattimore. The same thing applies to that thing about Roosevelt on page 5. Why did you use the word "supposedly"?

Answer. It was only because from time to time they were supporting Browder inferentially. They didn't come out and say they were for Roosevelt. Their arguments were for Roosevelt but their candidate was Browder. The Communist support of Roosevelt was not an actual support but only a way of winning the people over that were undecided.

Question. On page 7 you say "This idea of the 'upstanding Chinese Communists, the great agrarian reformers,' was peddled everywhere from that time on." You haven't given a single instance that it was peddled or that the idea was planted by the Communists. Give at least one instance, or more than one if possible.

Answer. Lattimore and Barnes became champions of some of these ideas as time went on.

Question. You're not saying that they acted as Communist agents in any way?

Answer. No.

Question. That ought to be quite clear.

Answer. Oh, yes.

Those apparently are the portions of the question and answer statement given here that were to be called to your attention.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Question by counsel for Mr. Lattimore: It is my understanding that at the time of this conference you did not claim that Mr. Lattimore acted as a Communist agent in any way, and that is still your view?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. I was very well aware, especially with Mr. Parris' peculiar questions which indicated to me that he might have a particular viewpoint, that I was to answer in such a way as to avoid Communist attack through libel, such as I know was their policy. Consequently, this was not a discussion under oath. This was a discussion of an article, and I think that I have indicated quite well there that Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Barnes were involved in this campaign. Consequently, I don't recall specifically this wording, by the way, Senator, because I had conference after conference on this matter, but even granted that this was correct, that is my explanation; that is to say, I am always conscious over the telephone with whomever I talk, especially when they ask me peculiar questions, to answer them in such a way as will not involve me in those difficulties which I know the Communists will be very delighted to involve me in.

Mr. MORGAN. Further question: As a matter of fact, Mr. Lattimore states that he never referred to Chinese Communists as agrarian reformers or in any terms that meant the same thing. Can you tell us any specific instance in which you claim Mr. Lattimore did refer to the Chinese Communists as agrarian reformers?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would have to have opportunity to check on that, Mr. Counsel, but my statement against Mr. Lattimore is not that he personally stated this. He was always considered to be in a special and delicate position. But that he was given the responsibility of organizing this campaign.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BUDENZ. I may—I would like to have the privilege of submitting to this committee an analysis of Mr. Lattimore's writings in Time. I have not had the opportunity to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, this document is, of course—I was not familiar with it, and I would like to request, apparently consistent with the committee's wishes, that the entire question-and-answer statement as we have it here we spread on the record at this point.

Senator TYDINGS. It will be put in the record at this point.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

BUDENZ ARTICLE RED MYTHS, STARRING CHINA

By Mr. LEONARD PARIS:

Question. The main problem, Mr. Budenz, was that we felt that your thesis of this piece wasn't entirely proved. Let me tell you what I think of it: We need more documentation on some of the things. On the second page you say the whole idea of coalition government was concocted by Soviet Russia in order to defeat America in the Far East. I don't doubt that their support of coalition government was a contributing factor, but who first suggested coalition government?

Answer. The Communists.

Question. Before it had been publicly mentioned anywhere else?

Answer. Yes.

Question. I think you ought to mention when and where and by whom coalition government came to public attention.

Answer. It was the Communists who pushed it and made use of it. I will get the authority for this.

Question. On page 3, the sentence reading: "These Moscow agents, pledged by their own declaration," etc., you quote "a sort of Non-Partisan League." Where does this come from?

Answer. This comes from Browder. That is to say I don't know of anyone who used that phrase. It was used for an argument that the Communists in China are different. However, I will get authority for that statement. I used it because it was pushed by the Communist Party.

Question. Here is an example of the sort of thing that needs more incidents and instances. On page 4 the sentence which reads "At every turn of history, the Chinese Communists, etc." I think it would be well for all readers if you gave some examples of that, other than just the pact between Russia and China. You're talking about the Soviet nonaggression pact. We need more examples to support that.

Answer. I'll get you that.

Question. You tell about Browder saying that the followers of Mao Tse Tung had to be presented in a new light. It's easy to see that this was an idea the Communists had to push. Don't show that they invented this idea, show that they fostered it.

Answer. I'll do that.

Question. You have done one thing here that I think is not good. By inference you implied that Joe Barnes and Lattimore are not Communists exactly but are fellow travelers. You say that Communists supposedly endorsed Roosevelt?

Answer. I think probably what we ought to do is to leave out those names entirely. Perhaps we can rephrase it some way. I said it merely to show that they would add meat to what I was saying.

Question. From our standpoint it seems that you were damning these people. This might put us in an embarrassing legalistic position. We have no particular reason to smear Lattimore. The same thing applies to that thing about Roosevelt on Page 5. Why did you use the word "supposedly?"

Answer. It was only because from time to time they were supporting Browder inferentially. They didn't come out and say they were for Roosevelt. Their arguments were for Roosevelt but their candidate was Browder. The Communist support of Roosevelt was not an actual support but only a way of winning the people over that were undecided.

Question. On page 7 you say "This idea of the 'upstanding Chinese Communists, the great Agrarian Reformers,' was peddled everywhere from that time on." You haven't given a single instance that it was peddled or that the idea was planted by the Communists. Give at least one instance, or more than one if possible.

Answer. Lattimore and Barnes became champions of some of these ideas as time went on.

Question. You're not saying that they acted as Communist agents in any way?

Answer. No.

Question. That ought to be quite clear.

Answer. Oh, yes.

Question. You say that the entire history of coalition governments was that Russia took over eventually. We need concrete instances, and examples very much more effective. They must also be complete enough so that they can be quickly identified and so that the reader can see that they are true.

Answer. It will be very brief.

Question. On page 10, "On December 7 last, it was discovered in Washington that there had been a tragic lag in the delivery of promised war material and other goods to Nationalist China, etc." Isn't the reason for that simply because Congress didn't appropriate more than that? Isn't it true that more aid went to Greece and Turkey than China simply because more had been appropriated?

Answer. I have to check on that. This was pointed to by the New York Times in an editorial.

Question. On page 11 there is a dubious slam on the unions. "A special secret order was sent out to the Communists, to be pushed in unions and in every occupation where sympathizers were engaged, etc." It sounds as though you can expect to find Communist sympathizers in every union.

Answer. We can change that. It's a document that I'm referring to there. I will look it up. It may be the way it is phrased. The unions are the chief opponents of the Communists. Communists are always trying to work within the unions. In a number of unions they do have Communists as they do in all fields.

Question. "Arrangements were made whereby the legs of book reviewers were to be pulled so that those works which gave a break to the Chinese Communists would receive favorable notices," etc. We need an instance of this. Make the article much more effective by getting an actual case.

Answer. In previous articles, my statements were specific; then they were made very general.

Question. Any documentation?

Answer. No. I can't prove it legally. That's why I use a general phraseology.

Question. Best thing to do is leave it out.

Answer. The trouble is I did have a host of specific examples and then had to take them out.

Question. On the Amerasia case, refresh most of our readers as to what actually happened. Did the defendants get off without any difficulties? How did it work out?

Answer. Jaffe was fined and one other defendant, Larson (I have to check up on this) got a small suspended sentence. Nobody went to jail. Mitchell was not given punishment of any kind.

Question. Can you indicate how Communist pressure was exerted?

Answer. I'll make an effort to check this. This is pretty well known. That's why I didn't go into it.

Question. But people forget details. The actual outcome of the case should be stated and the definite part that the Communists played.

Answer. Definitely. I should tell more of what these documents contain. The plans of Chiang Kai-shek's army and the economic plans of the Chinese Government were in those papers.

Question. On bottom of page 10, "In his address Mr. John Carter Vincent indicated Nationalist China as a place unsound to invest private or public capital." You're not trying to imply that this was a Communist idea, are you? Hasn't it been pretty well demonstrated that Nationalist China was unsound?

Answer. The State Department was supporting Nationalist China.

Question. The point is Mr. Vincent's quotes on Nationalist China may or may not have been the result of the Communist lie.

Answer. I'll have to look it more closely. It was accepted in the Far East division. I'll bring you more information on this.

Question. If Mr. Carter's advice were taken, you claim there would be an awful fiasco. Isn't there any possibility that part of the trouble in China is the Chinese Government itself?

Answer. Surely.

Question. Never in any part of the article was it admitted that Chiang Kai-shek's government was weak and corrupt. You're trying to show the Communist influence.

Answer. Let me take hold of that. I'll present more examples of Communist activity and show how the activity played its part.

Question. We shouldn't try to convince our readers that Chiang Kai-shek was all white and that Communist propaganda led to what happened over there.

Answer. As a matter of self-defense, America was completely unaware of what was taking place in China.

Question. You have to prove that General Carlson was a party liner--back it up.

Answer. He was such a striking example. He was a Communist many years. I can be stronger. I can give you instances. I can show you who was associated with him on this committee.

Question. On page 21: "It was out of all these pressures, Moscow-directed, that President Roosevelt was persuaded to amend our solemn pledge of China's integrity made at Cairo to the Yalta promise that Soviet Russia would get Outer Mongolia and even a chance at Manchuria, etc." Moscow-directed pressures were not solely responsible; that is putting it a little too broadly.

Answer. It shouldn't be solely.

Question. "It is from such creation of confusion in the American mind that we have promised aid to China and not given it in the measure it was pledged." You were referring to the New York Times editorial, I presume. Show actual figures.

Answer. I'm glad you raised this about Roosevelt. I can tell more in this place. The reason I don't go more into the Communist activities is because I don't want to sound repetitions of some of the other articles. The methods used by the Communists have a somewhat similar tone. The tactics described sound like it happened before.

Question. On these things, the more instances you can show to bear out what you say or what your thesis is, the better it will be. It has to be more than just implied or inferred. Make it as definite as you can possibly make it without getting into libel.

Answer. There is a terrific job in writing this. I know certain connecting links which I dare not say. I try to bring them out, but they become somewhat broken, because I cannot give the link. I will make some of these definite changes that you suggest. I will enlarge the information on the Chiang phraseology.

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Chairman, am I privileged to make a statement about Mr. Roosevelt, since Mr. Roosevelt's name has been put in here?

Senator TRYBINE. Surely. If you don't mind, unless it has something to do with Mr. Lattimore's disloyalty in the State Department, if we get off into Roosevelt here we are going to be pretty far afield. I do not want to preclude you. However, I am going to ask you to try not to go into something that is totally unrelated.

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I only wanted to say that there was an implication here that I was addressing myself against Mr. Roosevelt. I was only addressing against the Communists. There was no reflection on Mr. Roosevelt whatever.

Senator TRYBINE. That is all right. Go ahead, Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, for purposes of clarification, Mr. Budenz, I shall leave this 1937 meeting for a time and pick up a matter which you referred to briefly in your statement there about documents bearing certain initials during the years 1940 and 1941. As I recall, those initials were "L" and "XL" and if I am correct you indicated that those were the—shall we say—code designations for Mr. Lattimore; is that correct? Is that your testimony?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, can you amplify a little about what documents these were? From what did they come, the documents you refer to?

Mr. BUDENZ. These documents were at official proceedings of the Politburo. They used to get them out by the wholesale, that is to say, almost every word spoken, the whole conspiracy was exposed in these documents, and they were sent to a maildrop in Chicago. When I was in Chicago as editor of the Mid-West Daily Record they were sent to a mail drop in Chicago and there given to Morris Childs, a leader of the national committee. He then gave them to the members of the committee who were there, that is to say, William L. Patterson, Lee Ainsboro, myself, and perhaps one or two others representing the national committee in Chicago. We read these documents for our information as to what was happening in the political bureau, and for our guidance on party people, initials were put in, and in that connection, as I have said, Lattimore's name in the discussions on the Far East appeared as "L" or "XL." They used "Y" with your first initial and other things like that with different other names. I remember—well, I think perhaps I need not go into too wide an area of conversations which were unofficial in character, but I do know that this was the official report of the political bureau on this matter—I mean on all matters, and it was very detailed.

Mr. MORGAN. Are any of these documents, to your knowledge, in existence?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would not know. The point of the matter is we had strict instructions to destroy them all.

Mr. MORGAN. How do you know, Mr. Budenz, that the character "L" or "XL" was the designation for Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was told me by Jack Stachel on one of my visits to New York and, as a matter of fact, on several occasions.

Mr. MORGAN. That was something told to you; is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, but Mr. Stachel, who is the man in charge of the conspiratorial apparatus of the party, in his contact with the Communist International and the like.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let us go to the 1943 meeting to which you have referred. This was a full meeting of the national committee; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. This was a meeting of the Politburo, which is very small in number.

Mr. MORGAN. But it is called the national board; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, but, as a matter of fact, to this Politburo meeting there came a number of other people. I mean, Tractenberg is not supposed to be a member of the Politburo for legal reasons because he is connected with the International Library of Publishers and he would be linked up legally, so he comes but he is not a member. At this meeting—well, Earl Browder was present; I remember that; and Stachel and Robert William Weiner. I remember Weiner because he didn't always appear at these meetings. Perhaps I could remember others, but I remember them; and also Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, from this meeting—

Mr. BUDENZ. It may be at this meeting that Philip Jaffe was present. He came to a few meetings through the years with Field, but it is very difficult to place him because he played no part except a very passive one in those meetings.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, how did Mr. Lattimore's name figure in this meeting?

Mr. BUDENZ. This had to do with the fact that Mr. Field reported, as I understand it, that he had seen Mr. Lattimore. He may have communicated with him, but to the best of my recollection and memory—and it is very strong—is that he had seen him and that Mr. Lattimore had said that the apparatus had reported that there was a change of attitude toward Chiang Kai-shek; that we were going to be more hostile to Chiang Kai-shek. There was a discussion on the matter in which Browder did not seem surprised at this development but stated that we must know exactly the emphasis because Browder apparently had information that our emphasis was going to be on the coalition government with the idea of strengthening the Communists, eventually to scuttle Chiang Kai-shek. So far as I remember it, it was agreed that an article should be published in one of the articles of the Pacific Institute of Relations along this line as a beginning, and that article did appear through T. A. Bisson or Jaffe.

Now, the Far Eastern Institute, whom I represented here, which attacks Nationalist China, as I recall—I haven't had a chance to read this article; that is, I haven't been able to read it thoroughly—attacks Nationalist China as feudal China, and Red China is proclaimed as the real China.

Now the substance of that meeting was that Mr. Lattimore should have direct contact with Mr. Field. Now, we had this in the case of the Hitler-Stalin pact, so this is not something abnormal. In the Hitler-Stalin pact period the Communists first came out for the liberation of Poland, although the Red armies were beginning to invade Poland, and they received very sharp instructions to change, so they then attacked the Polish leaders as betraying their people. So the shift had to be made quickly. This shift had to be made in line.

If you will look up the document you will see on Poland that the Communists changed very quickly there, first coming out for the Hitler-Stalin pact and then for the liberation of Poland and then attacking Poland.

Now, the question in a line is always its emphasis, so the question was raised as to its emphasis, and this discussion continued, by the way, after this meeting. That is, finally we were requested to ask Moscow exactly what is the emphasis on this line, and either through Grace Grange of the Inter-Continent News, which no longer exists—Attorney General Biddle suppressed it as a foreign agent—or through the Political Bureau's own methods, we communicated with Moscow—and we did that regularly, incidentally, and we got back an article from a man whom I recall by the name of Rogoff, which appeared sometime in August, I think, 1943.

The thing is, this condemned Chiang Kai-shek by implication. It condemned the appeasers in the Kuomintang. However, subsequently, when the American press became aroused, Mr. Rogoff said he was misinterpreted, and we received very specific instructions that we were to work the coalition in China; that the coalition was designed to put the skids under Chiang Kai-shek; that we must politely be at least neutral toward Chiang Kai-shek or for him for the time being. Now that is the situation.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. Budenz, I do not want to restrict your answers at all, and I want you to amplify them freely because we want all the facts as we go through. However, in order that we might have an integrated picture of this entire situation, you are developing, I would like to know, again, if at this 1943 meeting this reference to Mr. Lattimore was a report given to you by Frederick Field; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. And Browder and Stachel; that is, the report was by Field, and the comments to Mr. Lattimore, in an official way, were by Browder and Stachel.

Mr. MORGAN. Fine. Thank you. That is what I wanted to know.

We come now to the last of the meetings, the meeting of 1944. At that meeting was it again a report that was made to you relative to Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. No. That was not at a meeting. That was Mr. Stachel who came down every day to advise me as to how I should keep in my memory various events. The men in the Daily Worker and people coming to me came with their documents and articles. I had to examine them for the line at that moment and also names. But we were forbidden to keep a list of these names because of the fact that they might be taken out by someone. Therefore, I had to put them in my memory, and Mr. Stachel used to come down and give me information on this question. It was in that connection that Mr. Lattimore was mentioned at the time with the mission of Vice President Henry A. Wallace, in whom, as I say, the Communists were deeply interested.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, going back, Mr. Budenz, to a further matter, I believe you have presently with publishers a book; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the title of the book?

Mr. BUDENZ. Men Without Faces.

Mr. MORGAN. And who publishes it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Harper & Bros.

Mr. MORGAN. What theme have you developed in this book?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the name suggests the theme. The name is not arbitrary. It is because of the fact that we were forbidden to photograph most of the leaders of the Communist Party—that is, Biddleman, Tractenberg, or the secret heads of the Communist Party—we had a rule we were forbidden to photograph them. That is why the name of the book, because it indicates the Soviet fifth column in this country. The book exposes the Soviet fifth column in this country. I know, because I am in it.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you develop in this book this picture which you are giving us today, this picture about the 1937 and the 1943 and the 1944 incidents?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you refer to Mr. Lattimore in this book?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I did not, and there is a specific reason, because if I were to refer to Mr. Lattimore I would be in the same peculiar situation I was in the Wallace situation. In fact, the Wallace situation was the cause of my not putting Mr. Lattimore in this book. The only time that I put Mr. Lattimore in the book was to identify Mr. John S. Service.

Mr. MORGAN. What was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. John S. Service. Service. And because I made a slight error of fact about Mr. Service, saying that he had advised Mr. Wallace, I corrected that to say "advised Mr. Wallace in the Government with Owen J. Lattimore." That is being made because of the error. Now, the thing—

Senator TYDINGS. Would you repeat that last sentence?

Mr. BUDENZ. I said Mr. Service had advised Mr. Wallace in the Government with Mr. Lattimore. This I had in mind. Mr. Service was really in China and Mr. Service was referred to in the Communist discussions as Mr. Lattimore's pupil, but the thing is I had no information with regard to Mr. Service's political affiliations. Therefore, in order to identify Mr. Service accurately, since I said he had advised Mr. Wallace, and he wasn't an adviser technically to Mr. Wallace, I had in mind that he was in China when the Wallace mission was, and I quoted Mr. Lattimore's name. However, in another book which I am writing Mr. Lattimore is very prominent.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, when was the first time that you ever, to any official agency of this Government, mentioned the name of Owen Lattimore as having any connections of the kind which you are presenting to us today?

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't catch the question, Counsel.

Mr. MORGAN. The question is, When was the first time that you ever mentioned to a representative of this Government, whether of one branch or the other, anything concerning Mr. Owen Lattimore in the same connection with which you are speaking about him today?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I didn't disclose any of these events to the Federal Bureau of Investigation until very recently.

Senator TYDINGS. May I ask how recently, if I do not interrupt counsel?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I think, Senator, it was a couple of days after this committee had gone to the FBI.

Senator TYDINGS. It was after our committee had been given the summary of the file, which you learned about through the press, that you went down to the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. I had that practice with the FBI, but when there was a concentrated case I spent hours on it. I have done it not only in this case but in other cases. So that was the practice.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Mr. MORGAN. That means, as I understand it, that the first time that you gave information to an agency of the Government concerning Mr. Lattimore was in March of this year; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that is my impression. That is my remembrance, at least in such detail, and the reason is—I would like to explain that. The reason is because that has been my practice. That is to say, in regard to even the 11 Communist leaders, while I gave general information on them, the concentrated information was not given until the trial.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, if I may ask the question, how soon after you left the party in October of 1945 did you have your first contact with an official agent of the Government concerning Communist matters?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, for 6 months I asked to be relieved of that matter, until I could collect myself, but finally, after 6 months, the FBI representatives came to my name, and for 3 days, and partly nights, I gave them a considerable amount of information, especially upon events such as Miss Elizabeth Bentley and Gouglas, and things of that character on which I was questioned. I responded to questions.

Mr. MORGAN. I presume, then, that would be early in 1946; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, am I to gather from the testimony this morning, Mr. Budenz, that Mr. Lattimore played a principal role in accomplishing this objective that you have referred to in coalition China policies?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is what I state; yes sir. Some of these reports I received while working with Frederick Vanderbilt Field, Philip Jaffe, and other Communists in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I should like to ask, that being true, why from early in 1946 until March of 1950, a period of 4 years, why during all that period did you not call to the attention of some Government agency—and you manifestly were in contact with agents—something about this man that played this prominent role?

Mr. BUDENZ. For the simple reason that there are a number of other people that I have not been able to call to the attention of the Government yet; that is to say, I have been cooperating with the FBI extensively, but largely in the case of prosecutions, and that has taken a good bit of my time. In the time that we dealt together I have responded to questions of the FBI at great length. As a matter of fact, that is one reason I was compiling this list of 400 concealed Communists as, if I may use the term, Senator, my last will and testament to the United States on all I know of the Communist movement, because there are so many people whom I have not been able to identify to the FBI with regard to their activities.

Senator TYDINGS. You are going to turn those 400 names over to the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am doing that now seriatim.

Senator TRYONAS. They are not necessarily employees of the Government?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would say, Senator, that none of the people in this list are employees of the Government. I have taken them up in the public field first.

Senator TRYONAS. Yes. The reason I ask you that, I was interested in one of the great papers of America as being in this 400. I take it most of the 400 were not employees of the State Department, but we are interested in communism all over the world. I am interested in it, and I am very glad you are turning it over to the FBI, because it is a very important thing to do, but I did not want the impression to prevail that it had anything to do with our investigation of the State Department.

Mr. BUDENZ. It has taken some time, because I have to be careful with each name, as to how I know them and the like. My impression is that I have already turned over to the FBI 200 of these names, and am continuing to do so, and, incidentally, you are correct in your interpretation.

Senator TRYONAS. Then the article that you purported to write about me was not correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, if I said that, it was incorrect.

Mr. MORAN. Continuing, Mr. Budenz, I have in my hand here a photostatic copy of page 12 of the Daily Worker for April 20, 1949. Under the caption there on this page, under the caption "Books," there is what purports to be an analysis or an estimate of Mr. Lattimore's book, Situation in Asia, and I am going to ask if the chairman will permit that Mr. Budenz read that—it may be a little long—because this is the analysis apparently made by the Daily Worker of this book which has played such a part in our discussions here. If there is no objection, I should like Mr. Budenz to read it.

Senator TRYONAS. I can see nothing wrong with it. It is from the paper that Mr. Budenz was the editor of. Mark it with an exhibit number, however, so it can be identified. Will the stenographer make sure to identify it?

(The document above referred to was thereupon marked for identification as exhibit 78.)

Senator TRYONAS. Go ahead.

Mr. BUDENZ. The date of this article was April 20, 1949. And I hesitate to testify on things after I left the party because I am not fully conversant. However, I will do the best I can, Senator, from my best knowledge.

Senator TRYONAS. Go ahead, sir. Read it carefully and slowly and in your own way.

Mr. BUDENZ. "Situation in Asia criticizes United States Government policy in Far East."

I will repeat that. "Situation in Asia criticizes United States Government policy in Far East."

Senator TRYONAS. That is the title of the book, Situation in Asia?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the title of the review of Mr. Lattimore's book. Incidentally, I might say, so you won't think this is a partisan issue, that Professor Lattimore has severely criticized the administration in the Nation—I can give you the address—in reviewing the White Paper, as ruthlessly imperialistic as a Republican.

Senator TYDINGS. You don't mean from that last remark that Mr. Lattimore and the Republicans are in the same boat?

Mr. BUDENZ. No. No. I say he tries to put the administration in the same boat as the Republicans. That was described by me by this heading here, "Situation in Asia criticizes United States Government policy in Far East."

Now, this is by David Carpenter, a man whom I know, a Communist whom I know.

Owen Lattimore's Situation in Asia is extremely critical of our Government's policies in that immense area of colonial and semicolonial peoples. He shows that our Government has done nothing but alienate the people's forces seeking national liberation in Asia.

Lattimore, who is the director of the Walter Hines Page School of Foreign Relations at Johns Hopkins University, points out that our dependence on the Kuomintang has served only to make the United States hated by the Chinese people. He contrasts, to our disadvantage, the reliance on the unpopular imperialistic agent Syngman Rhee and the maintenance of United States occupation troops in South Korea with the withdrawal of Soviet troops, and the establishment of a native peoples government in North Korea.

He shows clearly that the efforts by the United States Government to make Japan a major bastion against the Soviet Union must end in failure.

Lattimore proposes that our Government in its alliances with dictatorial, corrupt antipeople's forces in Asia—Lattimore proposes that our Government end its alliances—

I misread that—end its alliances with dictatorial, corrupt, antipeople's forces in Asia. He urges that we stop intervention in the affairs of the colonial and semicolonial countries. He asks that we aid the peoples of Asia to achieve national independence. All this is to the good as far as it goes. But Lattimore goes completely off the beam in his efforts to explain the relationship of political and social forces in Asia and their impact on world affairs, and as long as we fail to recognize the reality of these relations, so long will we be unable to help in the achievement of those aims that Lattimore proposes.

In the first place, Lattimore argues that the colonial and semi-colonial peoples struggling for national independence are developing a third force that seeks to remain equi-distant from American and Russian power. He refuses to admit that the struggle is completely an anti-imperialist struggle to drive out the American, British, French, and Dutch who are subjecting the native peoples to superexploitation for their raw materials and as markets for capitalistic products.

Lattimore admits that the Asiatic colonial and semicolonial peoples are looking to the Soviet Union for examples of how oppressed peoples achieve independence and are turning away from the United States because of its imperialist line. But he makes this a contest of tactics which the United States can change by adopting new methods.

Lattimore refuses to see that the reason the colonial people turned to the Soviet Union for their example is precisely because of the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of socialism in that country. As Stalin points out—

They always have to quote from Stalin. This is in quotes:

"It is precisely because the national-colonial revolution took place in our country under the leadership of the proletariat under the banner of nationalism that pariah nations, slave nations, have, for the first time in the history of mankind, arisen to the position of nations which are really free and really equal, thereby setting a contagious example for the oppressed nations of the whole world.

"This means that the October revolution"—now, that is the Bolshevik revolution in Russia, if I may interpret that—"This means that the October revolution has ushered in a new era, the era of colonial revolutions which are being conducted in the oppressed countries of the world in alliance with the proletariat and under the leadership of the proletariat."

That closes Stalin's quotation.

The core of the leadership in the colonial struggle against imperialism and the guaranty of the achievement of national independence lies in the growth and the development of the native Communist parties, springing out of the exploited native working classes, and leaving the exploited working class and the oppressed peasant masses. That is why the imperialists, under the leadership of the United States, direct their main fire against the destruction of these native Communist parties.

Secondly, Lattimore makes the mistake of assuming that the relationship of the United States and the Soviet Union in Asia is that of a struggle for power. Here he falls into the trap laid by American imperialism, which would like to have the reality of its efforts to maintain its grasp of resources and manpower of Asia.

This approach to American-Soviet relationships obscures the truth. The Soviet Union is not seeking world power. When the colonial peoples look for alliances with the Soviet Union, it is because they see in that socialist country the true defender of their national aspirations. When the Soviet Union allies itself with these peoples—

I hope I am not reading this too rapidly.

Senator TYDINGS. No. Go ahead.

Mr. BUDENZ. (continues reading):

It is not just a counteralliance to protect its own borders against the attack of imperialism; it is fundamentally a defense of the national interest of the peoples of these oppressed nations.

Because the peoples of the world recognize that an attack on the Soviet Union is an attack on the defender of their own aspirations, because they see in such an attack on their own efforts to break the hold of imperialism, they join with the Soviet Union in a common front against imperialism. They have already seen how the peoples of the eastern European democracies were able to protect themselves from the encroachment of imperialism and to begin their own internal development as the result of alliances with and protection by the Soviet Union.

In our own country, if we are to adopt the proposals Lattimore makes for the situation in Asia, it is necessary for us to loosen the hold of the imperialists on our Government. Otherwise, our official policies will continue to be that of oppressing the colonial peoples in the interests of our monopoly capitalists.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, in reference to that article—of course, it speaks for itself and I do not want to presume to characterize it, but in reading it, as I recall, there are in that review certain criticisms of the book; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. Now may I ask you, as having been editor of the Daily Worker, was it ordinary or customary in reviews of books in the Daily Worker to speak critically of one who is projecting, so it has been stated here, a policy for the Soviet Union?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, I can explain to you that we had the policy in protecting people who are out beyond the party proper, to criticize them with faint praise—that is to say, that is, to damn them with faint praise—rather, to praise them with faint damns, is the way I want to put it.

Now I can give to this committee examples of that, but I just will have to have time. However, I would like to analyze this, not as a member of the party but for just a moment out of my experience.

In the first place, you will note that the whole emphasis here is on the "Situation in Asia" criticizes United States Government policy in the Far East." You will note Mr. Lattimore's premise of the immediate action is approved. That is the important thing for Stalin. Communists don't go around saying, "We are Communists." They are pushing a certain line; I mean the Communists out beyond the party. This approves Mr. Lattimore's main premise, and it also comes as a conclusion of that where it says that what he is advocating, if followed out, certain things will have to be done.

What does it speak to Mr. Lattimore under all this extensive verbiage? It speaks to two things: that he puts forward a third-course idea, and, secondly, that he is still advocating capitalism in a way. Now, the Daily Worker knows that Mr. Lattimore in his position can do nothing else but be with capitalism as such. They know that this third force exists because it was discussed while I was in the party, that it is something which the Communists have proposed from time to time; they constantly develop third forces. At the present moment they understand that it is practically impossible—I am only say that, not as a far eastern expert, Mr. Chairman, which I am not, but merely from the discussions within the party before I left—that it is impossible to develop a third force in Asia at the present moment. That is to say, either you are going to be with Chiang Kai-shek or you are going to be with the Reds. That is to say, you can't take a neutral attitude.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not want to be with either one of them in the situation right now.

Mr. BUDENZ. I could discuss that, but I do not choose to do so, but it would only be my personal opinion, and in that respect I wish to refrain. In any event, in analyzing this article we have this method used by the Daily Worker on two men of distinction, men who are adhering to their general policy and under our discipline, but who, if they embrace them too closely, would simply be destroyed. Now, I can give to the committee at the time granted examples of that out of my experience on the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORGAN. As I gather your testimony, then, the fact that there was criticism here of the book does not alter in any way the conclusions you have drawn or the opinions you have expressed concerning it?

Now, Mr. Lattimore, I believe——

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you get an answer to that question?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He shook his head?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I beg your pardon. I said, "No, sir," but very faintly. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. Dr. Lattimore testified, Mr. Budenz, that he participated in an organization which raised funds for Finland during the Russo-Finnish war in 1940. Would that indicate to you that he was a Communist sympathizer?

Mr. BUDENZ. That he was a Communist sympathizer? That doesn't indicate that he was a Communist sympathizer. You would not necessarily have a Communist sympathizer connected with that, but it would not indicate that he was not a Communist. I mean to say that presence on that Finnish committee were not guaranties that men were not members of the Communist Party. I don't know that this is quite the thing to do, Senator, but there has been a very famous name in the headlines from time to time. I know of a specific exemption given to a specific gentleman in this respect and to others. I don't know about Mr. Lattimore's case.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, as a general proposition, would you say that contributing to Finland during this period of the Russo-Finnish war was or was not indicative of Communist sympathies?

Senator TYDINGS. You mean the Finnish-Russian war?

Mr. MORGAN. Finnish-Russian war; yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would say in general it was not indicative of Communist sympathies, but I would say, to my knowledge—and, as I say, I know of at least one instance, maybe more, where exemptions were granted to people who were in delicate positions to aid the Finnish campaign. The proposition was put up: A few dollars to Finland, what does that harm in the situation compared to protecting these comrades?

Mr. MORGAN. The fact that Mr. Lattimore may have aided the Finns would not alter your conclusion in any respect?

Mr. BUDENZ. It would not. That is to say, I don't want to be so arbitrary as that. I would give it consideration, but it would not alter it, knowing what I know.

Mr. MORGAN. Dr. Lattimore referred in his testimony, I believe, to the fact that he had and does support the Marshall plan. What observation would you make with respect to that, Mr. Budenz, if any?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, of course, now here I am testifying to events after I left the party, and I hesitate to do that, Senator, but if my general opinion out of my experience is desired, I shall give an answer. That would not affect my judgment at all, considering his book, Situation in Asia, which I have only read very hastily, but I agree thoroughly with the World-Telegram, that Uncle Joe couldn't state it any better than Mr. Lattimore has done in his Situation in Asia when he states that the Soviet Union is looked to—I don't want to give an exact quote—with awe and wonder by the Asiatic peoples, whereas the United States is only regarded as the occasion for cannon fodder for them. Now that thing is just merely a popularized expression of an attack on the imperialism by the Communists. Knowing that, and knowing that the Communists do give exemptions to men who are concealed, I would say that Mr. Lattimore—of course, I can only give my opinion here—could have been excused on the Marshall plan in order to continue activities in the area to which he is assigned. There have been cases likewise of that to which I can refer if I am given time.

Mr. MORGAN. It is your testimony, therefore, that the fact that Dr. Lattimore may support the Marshall plan has no necessary bearing on whether he may or may not have been carrying out a policy sympathetic to the Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. If in his main line of assignment he continues to support the Stalinite policy, many things are exempted. That, however, does not indicate that I have any knowledge today of Mr. Lattimore's position.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand your testimony relates to prior to the time you left the party in 1945?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. It has been stated, Mr. Budenz, and the characterization made with respect to Mr. Lattimore—at least in one instance—that he was the top Soviet agent in this country. Do you care to make any observation on that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, to my knowledge, that statement is technically not accurate. I do not know, of course, the whole story, what other evidence there is, but, from my own knowledge, I would not say he was a top Soviet agent.

Mr. MORGAN. The statement has been made, I believe, in substance that Owen Lattimore is a Communist subject to Communist discipline. I will ask you if you have ever exercised discipline over him.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have participated in meetings of the Politburo which have exercised discipline over him, and to that extent was a participant in the discipline. Personally I have not exercised any such discipline.

Mr. MORGAN. The discipline to which you are referring here, I presume, is the discipline exercised over members of the Communist Party by party leaders; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORGAN. Now back to the statement that has been made.

Senator LODGE. Now what was it? Let us have that elucidated, please.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the discipline I referred to were these various assignments and instructions to which I pointed. That is what discipline means; and also the fact that reports were made as to his attitude from time to time. Now, once or twice—although, unfortunately, today I can't recall the exact dates. I can on a subsequent appearance before this committee if it is desired. It was indicated from time to time that Field and Lattimore did not fully agree on policies of some kind or another—the carrying out of policies—but Field always said, "That is the same way as with Harry Bridges, with Ben Gold, and Abraham Flaxer." You must understand that we criticized Communists right in the Daily Worker. We criticized Abraham Flaxer right in the Daily Worker. We did it to cleanse the party of certain actions of Flaxer. We criticized John Anderson by name. We did that in order to clear the party of certain acts of Anderson. In other words, there was an appraisal made there of these reports.

Senator TYDINGS. That does not clarify the doubt in my mind.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose you ask the question, Senator.

Senator LODGE. I would like to know a specific instance when an order or an instruction was given and carried out.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the order to represent the Chinese Communists as agrarian reformers was certainly carried out, according to reports coming to me. It was carried out through the mobilization of writers in that field. Yes, it was, but specifically I do not know because I did not hear the detailed report on the matter.

Senator LODGE. Is that the most concrete and specific illustration there is?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the most concrete, yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, going back to that observation concerning Mr. Lattimore that has been developed here. He has been characterized as a member of the Communist Party subject to Communist discipline. I would like to ask you if you, of your own knowledge, know that to be true.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is to say, you mean whether I met Mr. Lattimore in a Communist Party meeting. I have known it of my official knowledge, represented to me by a man like Jack Stachel. Incidentally, Senator Lodge, Jack Stachel is one of the disciplinarians of the Communist Party, and when he designates a man I think you will find that he has authority to do so.

Senator LODGE. What happens if you don't do what you are told?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, first of all, you take Harry Bridges; he didn't always do what he was told. He was given a little time to think it over because he was so valuable, and then he was brought into line.

Senator LODGE. He what?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was brought into line. If you don't do what you are told you are expelled from the party. Now, this expulsion from the party, you understand, Senator, when it comes to concealed communism, is never announced. At the time the party tried to blackmail people by saying that they were Communists when they had denied it before. They tried to do it with regard to Mike Quill of the Transport Workers, and including the Maritime Workers, but as a rule no case is made of that in the case of a concealed Communist. It would impair the ability to carry on this type of work.

Mr. MORGAN. Back to the question, Mr. Budenz—and I want to explain why I regard it as significant. The statement has been made concerning Dr. Lattimore, that he is a member of the Communist Party subject to party discipline. Again, I would like to ask the question: Do you, of your own knowledge, know that to be true?

Mr. BUDENZ. All that I know I have presented to the committee. I think they can judge themselves. I can say this: Senator Tydings thinks not.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to get your answer, yes or no. It is a perfectly fair and proper question, and I think that the counsel is entitled to have you testify directly to the point either one way or the other.

Mr. BUDENZ. Very well. I have no desire to evade. I just thought this might be a legal question.

Senator TYDINGS. No.

Mr. BUDENZ. The point is this: I would say—of course, the question of personal knowledge is a legal question in a certain way—but I would say, so far as meeting Mr. Lattimore, as seeing him in meetings, that I have never done so, that I have never seen any vestige of his Communist Party membership. What I have received is these official reports which are quite binding and were binding on me as a member of the Communist Party.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, I think you made a better explanation, and I don't want to put words in your mouth and you can answer it either way, but the question was the fair way. Do you, of your own knowledge, know, whatever the question was? Now, your answer is you either do or you don't.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the question is what we mean by "personal knowledge," Senator. If you mean—I do not—I have not seen Mr. Lattimore in a Communist meeting; I have not met him as a Communist, I would say—

Senator TYDINGS. Well, let me put it to you this way: without relying on what you have been told, do you know, of your own knowledge, whether it is yes or no?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I can answer that readily.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. Outside of what I was officially told by the Communist leaders, I do not know of Mr. Lattimore as a Communist.

Mr. MORGAN. Now one further point that I would like to have cleared up for the assistance of our investigation here. You referred to corroboration of your testimony here, I believe. Would you care to amplify on what that corroboration might be?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, of course, I can't tell what the character of the answers are going to be by Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Jack Stachel and Philip Jaffe.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe you have indicated that those gentlemen should be subpoenaed.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is my stalwart opinion. For instance, I believe that Mr. Field above all should be subpoenaed, and also his financial records, and any other records he might have still existing; but the other men should be subpoenaed also. Now, the thing is that here we have, in my opinion, a very large problem for the United States. In fact, if it didn't sound rather excessive, I would say one of the largest exposures that America has ever seen, and it lies in the hands of these men. And in addition to that—although for the moment I am not sure of it—since the matter was confined to such a small group of people, I am convinced that there are others who know better than I do in the sense the Senator has asked me about some of these matters.

Now I shall be pleased, insofar as I can, upon trying to refresh my recollection, to submit certain names which I think might be helpful. They may not be helpful, but I am convinced—I know there is corroborative evidence in existence.

Senator TYDINGS. I wonder if the counsel and the committee will bear with me just a minute to follow a suggestion you have made about Mr. Field and Mr. Stachel and some of the other names that I don't recall. From the background of your testimony, if these men are summoned and sworn can we believe their testimony?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would say that they would be inclined to lie, but, Senator, there are skillful—[laughter]—just a moment. But there are skillful means of eliciting from them information, and there have been—

Senator TYDINGS. We would try that, but I would just assume—

Mr. BUDENZ. No. No; I do not assume they are going to come here except as hostile witnesses. However, Mr. Field has in his hands a great deal of information, records, and the like, which are valuable to the Government of the United States and to the infiltration. Now I think you can assume right from the very beginning that their inclination will be to lie, but as in the trial of the 11 Communists, a great deal of information was elicited from them that was of value. I believe that enough information will be elicited to lay the foundation for further investigation.

Mr. MORGAN. Now this point is of more interest to me, although it is of great interest to the committee. Apart from the subpoenaing of these witnesses you have mentioned, have you at this point, Mr. Budenz, any suggestion for further developing our investigation? If you think you should pass it on to the committee in executive session, that is quite all right, but if you have any suggestions to give us for developing this picture, we would welcome them and like to have them.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to give the committee in executive session several suggestions.

Senator TYDINGS. Your wish is respected, and we will call a meeting in executive session.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt? I have here a witness whom I suggest be called. This witness has to leave tonight, and I was wondering if it was possible to put him on this afternoon. This witness was head of counterintelligence and general intelligence for General MacArthur during the war. I think that he can give this committee some testimony that will be very valuable, and he has to leave tonight. Can we put him on this afternoon?

Senator TYDINGS. That is all right, Mr. Fortas, but you have already said that you want the witness summoned today under the suggestion that you have outlined. I would like to have Mr. Budenz continue so we can all cross-examine him first, but I would imagine from what you have said and from what I have learned that this witness will not consume a great deal of time; is that correct?

Mr. FORTAS. Yes; that is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to put it up to the committee and to accommodate you. I think your request is a reasonable one, and in any court of law under similar circumstances I believe it would be honored. So I would like to put it up to my fellow members here and see if we cannot do that, get rid of your witness, and go on with Mr. Budenz this afternoon.

Senator GREEN. I suggest we defer it until lunch time.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, I have got to cancel some matters. This matter takes 4 or 5 or 6 hours of my time a day, arranging for subpoenas, correspondence, and what not, and I just have to have an hour in the middle of the day.

Senator GREEN. It is not only taking your time and Mr. Budenz' time, but the time of some of the other members of the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, I would like to suggest that the witness be called immediately after we reconvene at 2:30. Is there any objection from any member of the committee?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I object to the technique of interfering with the continuity of this testimony until it is completed, and I seriously urge the necessity in any orderly procedure of completing Mr. Budenz' testimony and then the committee meeting to see whether it has other testimony that it desires to put on or not, and I feel very strongly that this matter should go through to its completion in an orderly fashion and not be interrupted and the hearing put at cross purposes, so that we can get through with one thing at a time.

Mr. FORTAS. I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman, but the Senator referred to my request as a technique. I offer this brigadier general of the United States Army, retired, as a witness here, and I shall ask him to testify. He has told me that he must leave town tonight. I assume that the Senator does not challenge that statement.

Senator TYDINGS. What is your position, Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. What has he got to do that is more important than testifying here on the protection of the United States against communism?

Mr. FORTAS. I do not know.

Senator LODGE. Why can't he stay over until tomorrow?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, may I as a witness under subpoena, make a suggestion?

Senator TYDINGS. Just a second.

Mr. BUDENZ. So far as that is concerned, Senator——

Senator LODGE. I would be willing to have a night session with the committee and let Mr. Budenz continue and then hear this witness tonight.

Senator TYDINGS. Assuming that he is not finished then? Because I do not think Mr. Budenz is going to be finished for a couple of days.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, this entire testimony, in my judgment, will take 15 or 20 minutes, and I should like to accommodate this gentleman that came here of his own free will.

Senator TYDINGS. We will take a vote on it. How do you vote, Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I vote to continue with Mr. Budenz' testimony until it is through, then I have no objection to other witnesses that may be put on, in the judgment of the committee.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green.

Senator GREEN. I decline to vote at this time. It ought to be taken up with the committee in executive committee meeting.

Senator TYDINGS. They would like an answer here.

Senator GREEN. I know they would.

Senator TYDINGS. We could stay in executive meeting an hour and get no lunch, if I am right. I don't see why we cannot make up our minds—it is all open and above board—for whatever reasons we have, which I believe will all be good. Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. Well, I don't know enough to vote on this thing. The facts have not been quite clear to me.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. I will vote at 4 o'clock. It seems to me that by that time the general can get a plane or after that get his testimony in. I see him shaking his head. I assume he is the gentleman. What is the general's deadline?

Mr. FORTAS. He has an 11 o'clock train.

Senator McMAHON. Eleven o'clock tonight?

Mr. FORTAS. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. We cannot sit that long. Many of us have engagements. I have two to speak tonight for over a month's standing, and that is the reason I have called the meeting for tomorrow morning.

Senator LODGE. We have received no notice, Mr. Chairman, and I regret that very much.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, I do too, because I instructed that the notice be sent out, and it must be a misunderstanding.

Senator McMAHON. We can take this up later this afternoon. I don't share your pessimism, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will stand in recess.

Senator McMAHON. Senator, I don't share your pessimism, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. I beg your pardon.

Senator McMAHON. We can probably determine this question this afternoon. I think we can probably bring it up again.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will stand in recess until 2:30, at which time Mr. Budenz will go on the stand. In the meantime we will take your proposition under advisement.

(Whereupon, at 1:05 p. m., a recess was taken until 2:30 p. m. of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Senator TYDINGS. The meeting will come to order.

Do you want to say something, Mr. Fortas?

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like respectfully to renew my request that the brigadier general of the United States Army, retired, to whom I referred before the luncheon recess, be allowed to testify this afternoon. He is here as a volunteer, out of a sense of public duty, and I ask that this committee extend to him the courtesy of hearing his testimony this afternoon, so that he can leave town tonight.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, I have had no chance, Mr. Fortas, to discuss it with any of the four other members of the committee during recess.

The committee has heard the request from Mr. Fortas. I will be glad to have your advice. I do not want to make any statement myself, until the committee gives me its opinion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not hesitate to give you my opinion. It is the same as it was. If this request is granted, then Senator McCarthy has an equal right to interpose witnesses in between the beginning and the termination of other witnesses, and if I supported this request, I would have to support a request of that kind on the part of Senator McCarthy, which I have no intention of doing; and, I think that the testimony of this witness should go forward until completed.

Mr. Lattimore was permitted to go forward with his testimony completely, and without interruption until it was completed.

This witness should, when Mr. Lattimore takes the stand again, if he does, he should be accorded the same privilege, and this general has, if he is a retired general, has nothing that is so important, that is, any more important unless it should be some acute personal matter, than to make himself subject to the convenience of this committee which, as far as I am concerned, would be immediately following Mr. Budenz's testimony.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Green.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that he be given the privilege of putting on his testimony at 4 o'clock today.

Senator TYDINGS. Is there a second to the motion?

Senator McMAHON. Yes, I will second it.

Senator TYDINGS. Are you ready for a vote?

Senator LODGE. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I move a substitute to that, if we are discussing our business in the open.

Senator LODGE. I would like to—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I would like to make a substitute, so you can have the issue before you. I move that the motion be amended so that it reads that this witness, whoever his name is, he has not been announced yet, may be permitted to testify at the conclusion of the testimony of Mr. Budenz, in this open hearing. I do not refer to executive testimony of Mr. Budenz.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I presume that this witness has no acute personal emergency, of life and death nature, that requires him to be out of Washington tomorrow. If there had been such an emergency, we would have been told about it, and I think we ought to think very carefully before we start to interrupt presentations by the insertion of witnesses, because if it is done for one, it will be done for all. When you once start doing it, the atmosphere of chaos and pandemonium that is all too prevalent around here anyway, is going to get worse, and that is going to be bad for everybody, bad for the disputants in this case, and bad for the national interest.

I am willing to have a night session. Let Mr. Budenz finish and then put on this general; but, I cannot condone anything which is going to increase the disorderly atmosphere of these proceedings.

Senator TRYDING. Gentlemen, we have a motion. We have had an amendment, and it looks like it is two to two, but I will put the question:

Those in favor of the amendment will signify by holding up their hands.

(Senators Hickenlooper and Lodge raised their hands.)

Senator TRYDING. Those opposed.

(Senators Green and McMahon raised their hands.)

Senator TRYDING. The Chair will vote with the minority and we will not hear the general.

Go ahead with your testimony, Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MORGAN. To resume, Mr. Budenz: This morning, reference was made to the fact that Mr. Lattimore has supported the Marshall plan, according to his testimony, contributed to the Finnish-Russian—in the Finnish-Russian war, to the Finns—

Senator McMAHON. By that announcement, you mean we will not hear him until after the questioning is finished, but if that questioning should finish early, then we will hear him?

Senator TRYDING. That is right, and I only did this because I do not want to get into a vote where there are three on one side and two on the other. I do not think it is good for the country.

Personally, I would like to have accommodated you, General, but I don't think it would have been a good thing for this hearing.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, there are no rights in these proceedings, as I understand it, for counsel to obtain subpoenas.

Senator TRYDING. Mr. Fortas, we will be glad to subpoena any witnesses that you ask us to subpoena.

Mr. FORTAS. This general is a completely volunteer witness. He came here out of a sense of public duty. He was not communicated with, in the first instance, by me or Mr. Lattimore or Mrs. Lattimore or anybody on their behalf. I have asked the courtesy for this fine gentleman, who has so demonstrated his public spirit, to be able to take the stand here for 15 minutes, and that has been denied to me.

I now ask for a recess for 2 or 3 minutes, so that I can confer with him. I certainly do not, myself, want to ask the committee to subpoena, against his will, a gentleman who has shown that fine spirit, and a gentleman of this caliber.

May I have a 2- or 3-minute recess?

Senator TRYDING. I think your request is a fair one and without objection, for 2 minutes we will give you a chance—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I object to this kind of procedure. This meeting was called to hear the testimony of—

Senator TRYDING. The objection is sustained.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Of Mr. Budenz.

Senator TRYDING. You cannot confer. We cannot give you any chance at all. You will have to do the best you can, Mr. Fortas.

Go ahead, Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MORGAN. To resume, Mr. Budenz: Reference was made earlier this morning in your observations, when they were solicited on Dr. Lattimore's statement concerning the fact that he had supported the Marshall plan, had contributed to the Finns in the Finnish-Russian war, and reference was also made to the book review in the Daily Worker relative to his book, and you expressed your observations on it.

I have one further matter that I would like for you to comment on, if you care to.

In April of 1949, we are advised that a Soviet magazine called Mr. Lattimore "a learned lackey of imperialism."

Now, I ask you if such a statement, appearing in a Soviet magazine, would have any relationship, in your opinion, to the matters concerning which you testified today, or in any way affect your opinion?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would first have to see the article and examine it very closely. This is something that comes out of the clear blue sky. I would have to see the article and examine it in order to understand the circumstances which caused it, and the whole atmosphere around it. Therefore, I would request that I be permitted to see the article and to study it.

Mr. MORGAN. Unfortunately, we do not have it here. You do not care to make any observation from that statement?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not care to make any observation, when I am outside the party, on an article which is so vague as that.

As a matter of fact, on any documents within the party today, I would want the privilege of studying them for several days before passing upon them, for this reason: That the Soviet tactics are such that I would be wise to do that, to understand exactly what the circumstances were which caused such an observation, if it were made, and what other observations were made.

Mr. MORGAN. By reason of certain suggestions that have been made in our record here, to possible parallels, Mr. Budenz, I would ask you if you know of your own knowledge whether there is a parallel between the writings of Dr. Lattimore and the Communist Party line relative to the Far East?

Mr. BUDENZ. On that question, I would request from the committee permission, which I intended to do, it may have been omitted in my original statement—to submit a regular written analysis on this matter, and be subjected again to cross examination, if that is found necessary. However, I am not in position today to go into this matter in any extensive fashion.

Senator TYDINGS. Dr. Budenz, as I understand it, you have not made the analysis and have not it available right now.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. So that you would want time to make such an analysis, in the event the question is pressed?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me get to the point, and I will turn it back.

Mr. BUDENZ. Excuse me.

Senator TYDINGS. You do not have it available with you, or in any place you can get it—already completed?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that is all the questions I have at this particular point.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Morris, assistant counsel, might be permitted to ask some questions?

Senator TYDINGS. I think the committee, with the one counsel, unless we are going to bring in all our investigators, that is a rather questionable procedure, and as far as I am concerned, I think the committee members should stay within the purview of this thing, and ought to rely on the witnesses and the questions through the committee members and by the chief counsel of our organization.

Senator GREEN. do you have any questions?

Senator GREEN. Yes, I have a few questions to ask.

You, this morning, Mr. Budenz, referred to Father James F. Kearney?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. As the source of certain information?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. What was the information?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I introduced to the committee, the article—it is an article on Mr. Lattimore.

Senator GREEN. Yes?

Mr. BUDENZ. An analysis of Mr. Lattimore.

Senator GREEN. I mean, in addition to the article you introduced, do you have any other information from Father Kearney?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not, no, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Do you know where Father Kearney got his information?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not know, sir.

Senator GREEN. Did he tell you, or did he not, that he got it from Alfred Kohlberg, of New York?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Senator GREEN. Do you know Mr. Kohlberg?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; I know Mr. Kohlberg. I also know Archbishop Yu Pin, Archbishop of Nanking.

Senator GREEN. You have known him for a long time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Who?

Senator GREEN. How long?

Mr. BUDENZ. Who do you mean?

Senator GREEN. Kohlberg.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, Mr. Kohlberg? Yes, I have known him for some time.

Senator GREEN. How long?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I should say a couple of years at least.

Senator GREEN. Is that all?

Mr. BUDENZ. The first time I met Mr. Kohlberg, in my recollection, is when he came to ask me in regard to Communists in the Institute of Pacific Relations. Now, whenever that was, it isn't more than a couple of years.

Senator GREEN. Is it before you left the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no, sir. Long after. In fact, very long after.

Senator GREEN. Well, you were in agreement with Mr. Kohlberg?

Mr. BUDENZ. On what?

Senator GREEN. On policies to pursue.

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily.

Senator GREEN. Not necessarily, but were you?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. I am not fully in agreement with Mr. Kohlberg, always.

Senator GREEN. Do you know what his interest in the matter is?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have no idea.

Senator GREEN. He has an interest in it, you think?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have no idea.

Senator GREEN. You don't know?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I don't know, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Well, this is a matter very near your heart, and very near his, and you have seen each other a good deal?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have only spoken to Mr. Kohlberg, as I have to other people who have represented themselves as being against communism—I have not inquired into his business or anything of that sort. I have not adopted his views, necessarily.

Senator GREEN. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not adopted his views.

Senator GREEN. We don't necessarily have to adopt anyone's views, but do your views coincide?

Mr. BUDENZ. They do not; no—not entirely.

Senator GREEN. Well, as to China?

Mr. BUDENZ. As to China, yes; but, Senator, I did not know it was an offense in America to be opposed to communism in China, which I am.

Senator GREEN. That has been brought up. The question of whether you are or are not opposed to it in China is one of the questions I thought you yourself raised in connection with Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. BUDENZ. I am opposed to communism in China, and so far as Mr. Kohlberg professes to be, I am in agreement with him; but, I disagree with him on many domestic policies in the United States. I cannot go into all of those.

Senator GREEN. You have read his views on China?

Mr. BUDENZ. What was that?

Senator GREEN. You have learned his views on China?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I have a general idea of his views on China. I don't say that I know them thoroughly; no.

Senator GREEN. Not necessarily, but so far as you know you do agree with them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I agree in this respect: I agree that China has been a terrific disaster, one of the greatest blows the United States has ever received, and I do not know what Mr. Kohlberg thinks about the recognition of Red China, but I suppose he opposes it. I would think that the recognition of Red China would be one of the greatest disasters in American history, because it would consolidate—

Senator GREEN. You do agree—

Mr. BUDENZ. Consolidate Stalin's control of thousands of men. There is a reason for why I stand for that. Mr. Kohlberg had no influence on me.

I know that in 1934 the Communist Parties of China, the United States, the Philippines, and America made an agreement which you may find in popular form in the Daily Worker. I can bring it up here later—that was, of 1934, to wipe American imperialism out of the Pacific, and we were impressed, Senator, in the Communist movement, with the importance of a Red China, to the defeat of the United States, and the establishment of a world military dictatorship.

Mr. Kohlberg had no influence on me in this respect, any more than many other people I meet have effect upon me.

Senator GREEN. But, you have discussed it with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; sure.

Senator GREEN. Lately?

Mr. BUDENZ. Why, yes; I have.

Senator GREEN. In that connection, have you discussed this Lattimore case with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not to any great extent; no.

Senator GREEN. You have discussed it with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. To some extent; yes.

Senator GREEN. What extent?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, to tell you the truth, I can't say, Senator, for this reason—that Mr. Kohlberg is very busy, or was, and so was I, and I have not had a chance to go over the Lattimore case with him at all, in recent times, except in a very superficial way.

Senator GREEN. And then, you have been over it with him before?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, I say—at this time you asked me about this time—I have not been over the Lattimore case with Mr. Kohlberg specifically at all.

Senator GREEN. You said you had been over it with him, had not been in recent times, so the inference was that you had been over it in more remote times, isn't that a correct inference?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think not. I have not discussed Mr. Lattimore extensively with Mr. Kohlberg.

Senator GREEN. You have discussed him with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. Do you know Mr. William Goodwin?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir, I have no knowledge of him.

Senator GREEN. Do you know who he is?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir, not offhand.

Senator GREEN. You never heard of him, as far as you know?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have heard his name in the public press, but I do not know him.

Senator GREEN. Do you know whether he has any interest in this matter or not?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have heard him represented, though I don't know him, Senator, as being in some way connected with the Nationalist China. I don't know Mr. Goodwin, have never met him, never talked with him, and have the very vaguest idea who he is.

Senator GREEN. Have you discussed, in addition to discussing it with Mr. Kohlberg and Father Kearney—have you discussed this matter with anyone else?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well I discussed this matter with—in recent days—with Mr. Morgan and Mr. Morris.

Senator GREEN. Is that all?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, with the FBI agents.

Senator GREEN. What is that?

Mr. BUDENZ. With the FBI agents. I think also, that I also discussed it for a moment with Mr. Kersten, who was formerly Representative Kersten, but that was very hurriedly. That is all I have talked to, so far as I know.

Senator GREEN. Who does he represent?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I am not quite sure. I know him from the House Labor Committee. It may be that he is associated in some way with Senator McCarthy, but I am not certain of that. That is, I know him originally, Senator, from the chairmanship of the House Labor Relations Committee.

Senator GREEN. And you say you may have discussed it with Senator McCarthy, or he may have—

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no, I have never discussed anything with Senator McCarthy.

Senator GREEN. Who was with you and Mr. Kersten when you had your discussion?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Kersten?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the only persons I know, on one occasion Mr. Morris was at my house with Mr. Kersten.

Senator GREEN. You three?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. When was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that was in the last couple of days—the last couple of days. I knew Mr. Morris from anti-Communist activities, the Naval Reserve, Intelligence Service, and many other activities, so that he came out to my house and I received him.

Senator GREEN. So far as you can recall, you have named all those with whom you have discussed this Lattimore matter?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I think so. That is to say, I have refused constantly to discuss it. I don't know what you have in mind, whether you mean someone who asked me a question or had an extensive discussion.

Senator GREEN. I mean even a short discussion.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. The only—if you wish me to retrace the whole history, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to do so.

Senator GREEN. Perhaps it would be profitable.

Mr. BUDENZ. Very good.

I got a letter from Senator McCarthy very late in this business. I can give you the letter as a matter of fact, later today; I haven't it with me, but the thing in that—

Senator GREEN. Will you get it later and produce it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; by all means. I did not answer the letter, because I have shunned appearances at hearings of this kind, and I got a call from Dr. J. B. Matthews, and he asked me what I knew about the Lattimore matter, and I said, "Whatever I have to say would have to be under subpoena in a nonpartisan way from the committee itself.

Then, he asked me if I did have information, as a leader of the Communist Party, and I said I had such information as I would furnish only under subpoena, but I did not wish to do so.

Senator GREEN. You said you would go into the matter in full detail. Have you done it?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think so.

Senator GREEN. That is the whole story?

Mr. BUDENZ. Unless my memory is refreshed, if there are some other people I don't recall—I had many people asking me questions.

I had many people seeking information. I said to all of them, so far as I recall, that I have nothing to say.

Now, there is something else that I have had—I should say scores of people were after me everywhere on the Fordham campus, on the street, and to all of them, so far as I can recall, I have said, "I have nothing to say."

Now, it may be that I have missed someone.

Senator GREEN. It must have been very annoying. I can understand that.

You told us this morning about compiling a list of 400?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, Senator.

Senator GREEN. And as I remember, you stated that there were no Government employees on that list?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is my recollection. I would be willing to present to the committee, and have volunteered to, within a couple of weeks, the names of all Government employees that I know of as Communists.

Now, the thing is, Senator, on this list, it was precisely to end, for good, my appearances in these hearings that I prepared what I call my last will and testament to the American people on the Communist Party. This completes the list of the concealed Communists I know. The point of the matter is—I have begun in the field of Hollywood, the radio, the field of public opinion and the like, and I have not got to the Government, insofar as I remember.

Senator GREEN. This is what I understood you to say this morning—that you were to classify them, to a certain extent, and this 400 was of those outside of the Government?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, if there are any in the Government, that is by accident.

Senator GREEN. That was your intention?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. What are the other classifications that you have made?

Mr. BUDENZ. Hollywood, and I have a very substantial classification there, and a very impressive one, radio—this does not reflect upon the radio organizations, nor upon the moving-picture industry. I would not want you to get the impression that I am trying to create the idea that it is overwhelmingly that way, when I say it is impressive. I mean to say that there is to my mind, too many.

No. 1, Hollywood; No. 2, radio; No. 3, other organs of public opinion, in the professional classes and the like.

Senator GREEN. And the Government employees come last?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well; yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Don't you think, in view of the fact that this committee has been informed to look into the relations of Communists to the State Department, that that would have been the first thing you should have done?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, this list was begun before the committee was in existence.

Senator GREEN. But, it was not finished?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; it was not.

Well, I have not had time since then to do this.

Senator GREEN. Why did you decide to do that last, instead of first?

Mr. BUDENZ. For two reasons: First of all, because with people in the Government you have to be more careful, because they are more protected. As a matter of fact, the people in the Government who are Communists, if there are such, I am making no charges at the moment—

Senator GREEN. We have not found any evidence of any yet.

Mr. BUDENZ. I say, I am making no charges at the moment, though I may later, but the point is—I have not at the moment. Those Communists, that are such, are very highly protected and in those cases, I want to be absolutely certain. Of course, I want to be certain in all instances, but in some instances, I know people very well as Communists in these other fields.

Senator GREEN. You would not like to base your testimony on hearsay, in other words?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is not the point.

Senator GREEN. Is it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I don't want to base it on hearsay, in the sense of just an individual Communist telling me. I wish to base it upon official communications to me, or my own knowledge of their association.

Senator GREEN. I see, and so you are going to compile the rest of these lists first, and end up with that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was my intention.

Senator GREEN. I don't want to change your intention, don't misunderstand me. I am just seeking information—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator GREEN. Not giving advice. Now, this morning you stated something that attracted my attention. I think, for your sake, we ought to clear it up. That was in connection with your discussion with the editors of Collier's about the article, and in explanation of some apparent discrepancy, you stated, "Well, this was a conference. It wasn't under oath."

Do you make a distinction between answers that are made seriously and without oath, and those made under oath.

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; but I do make this statement: Here was a conference on my article. I know very well, Senator, that the Communists have a plan to harass and destroy a man by libel actions. When I received such peculiar questions from Mr. Parris, I immediately intended to shut him off, and as a matter of fact I am compelled to do that repeatedly. People come to me with all sorts of questions. I can't get rid of them.

In this case, I also was dealing with an article not yet completed, and I do not distinguish between under oath and otherwise, except in the sense that I cannot commit myself or permit myself to be attacked by someone who tries to draw me out.

Senator GREEN. You mean, under those circumstances, you are willing to put them off by stating something that is not true?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would not say—"not true," but that doesn't make the matter—

Senator GREEN. What expression would you prefer, having the same meaning—"false"? How would you put it? Put it in your own words.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would say, Senator, this: That for me to say to Mr. Parris that Mr. Lattimore was a Communist agent, in the way that Mr. Parris was pressing me, would have been of no advantage to the article, and would have, at the same time, have been a matter of attack upon me.

Senator GREEN. Well, later in your testimony you stated that these persons were not ex-Communists, but are still Communists, and if we called them, we couldn't rely on their testimony, because they might be telling the truth or might not be, didn't you?

Mr. BUDENZ. You mean, the Communists I asked to be brought before you?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; I said that these, as Communists, they are not ex-Communists, they are Communists—

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. They would do it on behalf of the cause.

Senator GREEN. But you think there is a distinction between the ex-Communist and the Communist in that respect?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the public will have to judge that. I cannot enter into that question. I can only say this, that the Communist lies only for the cause, for the party. He may be a very truthful person otherwise. He will lie for the cause, and as a matter of fact we have proof of such falsehoods.

Senator GREEN. I also understood you to say, well, your definition of a Communist was that he need not necessarily carry a card or be on any list, but if he followed consistently the party line, he was a Communist, and that when he ceased—couldn't cease to follow the party line because then he would be disciplined and would cease to be a Communist.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; under instruction, always, and under discipline always, but you must understand this, Senator, if I may explain that—where you have men in key and delicate positions, their discipline is to follow what they are ordered to do. That is to say, I am sure, and I don't want to reiterate this to any painful extent, but I am sure that we will find out that maybe in many public matters Mr. Hiss didn't follow the party line.

Senator GREEN. That is the second time you brought in his name. What is your idea?

Mr. BUDENZ. The only reason I do, Senator, is because it is an illustration which stands out, that is all. I have no particular reason to mention it except for that reason.

Senator GREEN. Did you know him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not know him in a personal way. I knew of his association with the Washington cell, officially.

Senator GREEN. You have seen him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have seen him; yes, sir; but I didn't remember that at the time of my testimony before the House committee.

Senator GREEN. You testified there, did you not, that you had not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. I later saw Mr. Hiss and recognized that I had met him under a false name, but didn't know him at the time. It was only on one occasion.

Senator GREEN. Never mind.

If the Communist line twists and turns, and you have given testimony to that effect, it might cover a great number of people in the different twists and turns, those who agreed with one policy, and another group that agreed with another policy, and so on, and if you judge them by their temporary agreement with a particular policy at a particular time, almost everyone would be a Communist who had any opinion on Chinese affairs.

Mr. BUDENZ. No; that isn't the way, Senator.

Senator GREEN. What is the way?

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, that is just exactly what the Communist Party does. At one time during the Hitler-Stalin Pact, we had thousands of pacifists, or propacifists that joined, even Nazis, joining the Communist Party. Later on they all dropped out. There is a tremendous turnover in the Communist Party. The Communist is the one who carries through steadily, under directions and instructions, whatever line, not only whatever line, but whatever discipline is imposed upon him.

Senator GREEN. You claim that Mr. Lattimore's views on China have changed in accordance with the change in the Communist line, is that your point?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would not wish to be able to pass upon that until I have examined all of Mr. Lattimore's writings, as I have said.

Senator GREEN. How many of his books have you read?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very few, in a very fragmentary way. I am not in a position to pass upon Mr. Lattimore's writings, except in a general way, except on his last book Situation in Asia.

Senator GREEN. Then, he might not have followed the Communist line in his previous books, I believe he has published 11.

Mr. BUDENZ. That we can see when we analyze them, as far as I am concerned.

Senator GREEN. If you think that one book shows he is a Communist, because he is following the line, and the other books did not, what would be the weight or balance of evidence?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would have to depend, of course, that is why I must analyze the book, we cannot talk about this in such shorthand terms. It seems to me, Senator, I would have to analyze the book.

Now as a matter of fact I have come here before the committee to testify to certain facts of my own knowledge, to the extent that I have been informed of them; so far as these other matters are concerned, I have not had the opportunity to analyze them. I have offered to analyze them and shall do so if the committee so desires.

Senator GREEN. How much of his published writings, I won't limit it to books, have you read?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very few indeed.

Senator GREEN. How many?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that I cannot say, offhand.

Senator GREEN. Have you read one book?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have read hurriedly Situation in Asia.

Senator GREEN. Just looked it through?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. How many articles of his have you read?

Mr. BUDENZ. Practically—well, now, I don't know that. I wouldn't be able to say.

Senator GREEN. You have drawn deductions from those, what you have got?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have drawn no deductions except from what I have learned and have been advised of. I do not need to draw deductions from other sources, but in order that there will be corroboration of what I said, I have volunteered to present to the committee an analysis of Mr. Lattimore's writings, in the light of my experience as a Communist.

Senator GREEN. Would it make any difference to you, in your opinion of Mr. Lattimore, if his writings showed that he had been opposed to communism most of the time, or the Communist line, most of the time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Now, Senator, we would have to look at these books. I know certain facts. The Communist line is something that is very interesting indeed. The Communist line has different emphases, different expressions, different treatments, and I am satisfied, because of what I know from my own knowledge, that an examination by me of Mr. Lattimore's books, with my knowledge of how Communist procedure goes on, would show that he has been following the Communist line, but I cannot make that assertion without having examined the books.

Senator GREEN. Then, you say you have never seen him, never talked with him, never have had any communication with him—you have read none of his books to speak of, none of his articles to speak of, and it is based entirely on what someone has told you about him, is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, but officially told me, as a matter of more or less life and death in the Communist movement. These official instructions, they are known and followed out.

Senator GREEN. Since part of the Communist creed is to lie or swear falsely in order to support their cause, how can you be sure that some of your colleagues were not doing the same to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is one thing a Communist—this is a serious matter, Senator, because we are analyzing the Communist movement—about which America knows too little. The point of the matter is that the Communist does never lie to his colleague in his report, because it is a matter of the most serious moment. This is a conspiratorial organization—

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. In which the truth has to be followed within the limits of the Communist organization itself, and that is a fact that the reports officially made by the Communists to each other, are unfailingly correct. Where they engage in falsehood, and this is what Lenin has said, is where they deceive people outside the Communist movement.

Senator GREEN. Suppose they suspect somebody inside of the Communist movement—Communists sometimes desert the cause—suppose they suspected that you were going to desert the cause—

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, Senator?

Senator GREEN. Might they not lie to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. To me?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, no, because this was not to me, this was to an official meeting, and also, repeatedly in instructions to me over a long period of time.

Senator GREEN. Well, some of it was to you, you got communications signed with code letters.

Mr. BUDENZ. That was not the whole national committee, a member of the national committee—

Senator GREEN. You don't think they would have lied to them?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; they would not. As a matter of fact, the whole essence of their conspiracy rests on their telling the truth to each other. Otherwise, the conspiracy will collapse. There must not be, within the conspiracy, there must not be any uncertainty. I think that will be testified to by everyone from within the Communist movement.

Senator GREEN. Then, you think that if a man were suspected of following the Communist line and supported some doctrine that was opposed to the Communist line, he would be suspected——

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't catch that last.

Senator GREEN. Suppose for instance Mr. Lattimore was trusted, and then Mr. Lattimore wrote an article favoring the Marshall plan, and that is anathema, as I understand it, to the Communists—would not that subject him to suspicion?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I cannot testify to that, that is since I left the party, but as a matter of fact——

Senator GREEN. As an illustration.

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, it might or it might not, according to the instructions, because Mr. Lattimore is not openly a Communist. What he says does not reflect upon the Communist movement. The open Communist, if he were to come out for the Marshall plan, he would be seriously disciplined, but a man who, because of his peculiar position, has to take an attitude—that is a different matter.

Senator GREEN. What form does their disciplinary action take?

Mr. BUDENZ. It takes the form of expulsion from the party, or attacks upon you and your character and everything else, it depends upon the individual. Generally, it is an expulsion from the party, with an attack upon the party——

Senator GREEN. Under what circumstances can you resign?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is a slogan within the party, "You are not permitted to resign, you must be expelled."

Senator GREEN. I think that is all I care to ask.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of documents that I have sent for, that seem to be misplaced. I would like to have those before me, before I question Mr. Budenz.

If someone else has any questions, and they could find those documents, I would appreciate it, if I were allowed to question him later. They are in my office somewhere, and we are unable to locate them.

Senator TYDINGS. You want to pass, now?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I would like to pass, at the moment.

Senator GREEN. I have thought of another question I would like to ask.

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead.

Senator GREEN. Either in your testimony, or some other testimony in one of these hearings, the charge was brought up against Mr. Lattimore that he favored the recognition of the Communist Government in China. Do you think that is evidence of his sympathy with communism?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily, sir. It might be, but that is a matter of public policy in America, and I do not regard that alone as evidence of Communist membership. I think there are other people who are not at all connected with the Communists that may have that view.

I think they are thoroughly mistaken. I think it is going to lead to a terrific attack upon the United States in which thousands of our young men are going to be destroyed, but there are others who have other opinions. That is a matter of public debate. I certainly do not say that anyone who stands for that is necessarily a Communist.

I think it will be a most serious thing, however. That is just my personal opinion, I might say, my private opinion, Senator, if I may, because you know that the instructions of the Communist Party, and I can support this by document after document, from the official Communist records, gave to the American party the assignment to assure a Red China and a Red Poland in order to bring about the conquest of Europe and Asia, and the defeat of American imperialism, namely, the United States.

That is the reason I say it, but that does not mean—pardon me, I wanted to say that does not mean that everyone who stands for that viewpoint, and disagrees with me, is therefore a Communist—no, sir.

Senator GREEN. Suppose a man said if the Communist Government in China in fact proves its ability to govern China without serious domestic resistance, that it should be admitted to the United Nations, would you say that he was following the Communist line?

Mr. BUDENZ. No. I would not, necessarily; although I would think that he was falling for appeasement very badly, since that brought about Munich, and other things of that character. That is to say, I would think that of course—you see, there is one supposition in there, Senator, I am not familiar with this statement, but there is one supposition I noted immediately: He said if the Communist regime was able to do so and so—I don't know what it is—

Senator GREEN. Govern China without serious domestic resistance.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is a terrible admission, that we are going to surrender the Chinese people to the secret police of the type which has put 15 or 20 million people in concentration camps in Soviet Russia. I do not say that the gentleman who says that may not have other arguments for his position, I am not engaging on a debate on this. I say, however: No. 1, that does not necessarily make him a Communist, no; but, secondly, I think it does show that we do not realize, this gentleman does not realize the seriousness of the situation confronting the United States.

Senator GREEN. Well, the gentleman whom I quoted was not Mr. Lattimore, that you seemed to assume. It was Mr. Dulles.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. That is to say—I didn't know it was Mr. Dulles, incidentally, when I said "That is correct," but I wish to say, regardless of whether it is Mr. Dulles or not, that America today is in such position that if we recognize Red China, that hundreds of thousands of our young men, Senator, are going to be sacrificed to the Chinese paratroopers who will be fed better food, and used to attack the United States.

That is not a wild claim. I will be prepared to show this committee, not definite proof of that, I have no idea of the Soviet plans of that, but definite proof that the Soviet Union stated repeatedly that China is the key to the conquest of Asia and the establishment of the Soviet world dictatorship, and again, Senator, I know that this Harry Bridges moved across into Hawaii, infiltrated into Hawaii, to meet with the Chinese Communists to drive imperialism out of the Pacific, and I will be able to show, by documents, I mean official documents, statements indicating the importance of China to the defeat of American imperialism, namely, the United States.

Now, Mr. Dulles is an important man, but he could be mistaken, and I feel very decisively that if that is a full opinion, then he is mistaken.

Senator GREEN. You are a very important man, or were, in the Communist Party, and knew all the top-level people who were running the party, and yet—when it came to the recent Government case in New York, where there were 11 Communists convicted, you were not called as a witness, were you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, I was the chief witness for the Government. I don't like to put it that way. I was the first witness for the Government, and was on the stand 10 days. I hate to appear to present myself in that fashion, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's have order in the room; no demonstrations, please.

Mr. BUDENZ. In addition, Senator, may I say just in explanation—that I spent week after week with Judge McGohey, and his staff, and my whole Christmas vacation on this case.

Indeed, I think that I can say with all due modesty, I did as much as any man on that matter.

Senator GREEN. Then, you have had your hand in.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, pretty much in that case, Senator. I would have preferred not to. If you will get in touch with Judge McGohey, you will find I was just as reluctant to enter that case, as I was here, and it took a lot of persuasion to get me there, but I did get in, finally.

Senator GREEN. That is all, thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you have your documents, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Not yet.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, like Senator Lodge, I have some questions that I think in the best interests of the United States, should be asked in executive session, and so I understand that Mr. Budenz is coming back to see us in executive session.

Mr. BUDENZ. I will be delighted to, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. There are a few questions, perhaps, that could be better asked in executive session.

Mr. BUDENZ. I will be glad to answer.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. One question I would like to ask, although as I have said, I intend to conduct my cross examination in executive session.

I would like to bring to the attention of everyone, bring their attention back to the fact that the prime purpose of this investigation was to ferret out disloyal persons in the State Department, and not to establish whether some man is right or some man is wrong, that is why my attention was arrested by your statement that you had not completed the presentation which you intend to make some day on the subject of communism in the Government.

This committee is primarily interested in the subject of communism in the Government, and not communism in Hollywood, or communism in the newspaper business or communism in any other walk of life, and I disagree with Senator Green. I would like for you to change your modus operandi, and at once give a high priority to the Communists in the Government.

I understand you to say you did not want him to change---
 Senator GREEN. No---I asked him to.

Senator LODGE. I misunderstood. I was going to ask him to get on to this business of the Communists in the Government, because that is what this committee is officially, and by specific terms of the resolution, charged with going into.

See what I mean?

Mr. BUDENZ. If the chairman will permit me, I will volunteer to have such names as I have, together with the occasions of how I know them to be Communists, presented to this committee within 2 weeks at the latest.

Senator LODGE. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. Is that all, Senator?

Senator LODGE. I intend to question Mr. Budenz later, in executive session.

Senator TYDINGS. I mean now.

Senator LODGE. Now---yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think I will have to proceed, Mr. Chairman. The documents I have been searching for in my office seem to be temporarily gone, so that I cannot use them at this time. I may use them later, if they show up.

I understand that it is your testimony, that what you have given here today is confined to the period beginning with the time when you joined the Communist Party, about 1935, and the time you left the Communist Party in about 1945; is that correct.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, during that period of time, when you first joined the Communist Party, did you immediately take on what might be considered an important role in the Communist high command in this country, or what was the level of your activity at the time you joined the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. Well, of course, there is one high command in the Communist Party, and that is the Communist International representative, and he is run by Stalin. Don't let us mistake that. I learned that very severely, but I might state that, taking into account that fact, the fact of the matter is that I was made, in a very short time, labor editor of the Daily Worker, and in general exemption to the Communist practice, I was made a member of the national committee within a year.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I see.

Mr. BUDENZ. The reason for that was, you must understand that for a number of years I had been in contact with the Communist Party, sometimes in opposition and sometimes in what they called these united fronts; they had a pretty good idea of my viewpoint and activities.

Well, I could give other reasons too, because at that time they were trying to put forward this people's front, and they thought myself and other people had a certain influence in the labor movement that would help them. That is what Stachel told me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Have you ever met Mr. Joseph Stalin?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Have you ever had any direct communications with Mr. Joseph Stalin?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you believe Mr. Joseph Stalin is a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I had to make an oath to him, of allegiance, when I joined the party, and the oath said that "we will agree to follow you wherever you shall lead, the leader and teacher of the working people of the world, under the Marx-Engels-Lenin and Stalin doctrine until the triumph of communism throughout the world."

That indicates to me that he is associated with communism.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am merely exploring your idea or knowledge of who is a trusted and a high-level Communist as a result of your reliance upon party assurances, and I take it that you know Mr. Stalin to be a Communist, and rely upon the fact that he is a Communist through public statements in the newspapers and through the statements and associations through the high party command?

Mr. BUDENZ. More than that. We knew it through every book we were compelled to read, through every article we were compelled to write, through the statements that the line of the party is infallible because Stalin gives it to us, and he can make no mistake whatsoever, between the fact that he is the leader of the working people of the world—consider that, Senator—that the American working people, under the Communist conception; of course, this is a maligning of the working people, because they get more following among other groups. I must say, than among the working people, but we have document after document proclaiming Stalin—in fact, at the Moscow Conference of Intellectuals for Peace, I counted—because I got these Communist documents by an indirect way—I counted 22 different speakers who proclaimed Stalin to be the leader of the people of the World and therefore his presence was pretty obvious to me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In other words, proof to you that Mr. Stalin is a Communist is not dependent upon your ever having met him or talked to him personally?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, after you joined the party—

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't understand the direction of your question. I thought your question had to do with Stalin's control of the party.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am, of course, obviously asking you whether it is necessary for those who are in the inner sanctum of the party, to be convinced that someone is a Communist only upon personal association and personal admission by that person to the one so assuming?

Mr. BUDENZ. Particularly not in the Communist organization. The normal American has no idea of what the Communist organization is. It is a gangster conspiratorial movement which, by the way, draws in nongangsters. That is its greatest, I should say, danger—that is to say, it is a movement in which there is absolute discipline. As a matter of fact, it took me a whole year, when I got out of the party, to reorganize myself from that sort of a concentration camp that I was in, and here I was, in America, a native American, from four generations of Americans.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Have you at any time met Gromyko or Molotov?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Is there any question in your mind but what they are Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You get that from publicity and—

Mr. BUDENZ. We were compelled to read all of Mr. Molotov's writings.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You get that from publicity and assurances from within the party that they are reliable Communists; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So I take it, it goes with a number of others who are publicly accepted as Communists, that many of those you have not seen personally, nor have had them admit to you personally that they are Communists, but you know they are, and accept them as such because of the party knowledge that they are Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. If you will permit me, Senator—that is correct; but if you will permit me, in order to give why I was so eloquent on that other matter, I will show you this document.

This is totally divorced from this hearing, but I think it is important. This is a picture of Joseph Stalin, the only picture ever permitted on the front page of the official theoretical organ of the so-called American party, Communist Party of the United States. No other picture has ever been permitted on that front page, but that of their leader, Joseph Stalin.

That is one indication of the complete control he has over that organization. I wanted to explain why I went over, there, and gave a rather oratorical dissertation.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. After this first year's activity of yours, in the party, did you move on to other positions in the party, in the next 10 years?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. In November 1937 I became editor of the first daily labor paper launched by the Communists; it was the Chicago Daily Record. That was supposedly a people's front thing, but I was editor and it was completely dominated and financed by the Communists. As a matter of fact, in part it was financed by the secret conspiratorial fund under Robert William Weiner, who came into this country for conspiratorial purposes. The thing is, after the Middle West Daily Record folded up because of the Hitler-Stalin pact, I came back to New York, but already it had been decided that I be made managing editor of the Daily Worker, and president of the corporation conducting that publication.

Comrade Browder, he was "Comrade" Browder then, stated to me: "The reason you are being appointed to this is because you have no technical difficulties. You have not violated any passports, or have any crimes against the United States on you, so you can defend the Daily Worker better during this period."

I said "I hope the reason is because I also know something about the newspaper business!"

He said that was true, but the main reason is because "you have no technical difficulties."

I state that to illustrate why I was made editor of the Daily Worker.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Can you move on rapidly through the remaining years up to 1945, and outline your movements in the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I was a member of the national committee for 9 years, 6 of them openly and 3 secretly, for political purposes; and then I was a member of various organizations—I have recounted that before—until October 1945, when I left the party.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, then, during that period, Mr. Budenz, when did you first meet Mr. Foster and Mr. Bridges and Mr. Field? I mean when did you first come in contact with those men that you have referred to as being in these groups that met periodically?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. William Z. Foster?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have known him many years. In fact, I met him—he came to see me in New York on his way to Moscow to become a Communist, and, very frankly, I said one thing—I said, “One thing you should do, Bill, is never become a Communist.” That is when he was passing through, so I knew him since the time he made the trip to Moscow and became a Communist over there in Moscow.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not so concerned about the early days, as the period of 10 years during which you were—

Mr. BUDENZ. I know Mr. Foster all the time.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Perhaps I can clear this—

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't understand your question.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. What I am trying to get at is this: After you joined the party and began to move into the circles of the party where decisions were discussed and programs were discussed for the party, at what point did you begin to have association with Mr. Foster and Mr. Bridges and Mr. Field? I am trying to get, frankly, trying to get the continuity of their association with you during the time that you were an important person in the party.

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Foster I got to know immediately. Mr. Bridges I got to know in 1936. I then knew him as Comrade Rossig, a member of the national committee of the Communists.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And Mr. Field?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Field I also—well, I think the first time I met him was in 1937, although I had heard of him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. These others you have mentioned, when was the first time you began to associate together in the programs of the Communist Party in this country? That is, I am trying to find out just when you began this rather intimate association with these men, and how long it continued, up until 1945.

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know what men you refer to.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. The men you referred to, such as Mr. Foster and Mr. Field and Bridges, and the chief man, whose name I forget.

Mr. BUDENZ. Eisler?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No—Stachel.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh! Stachel. I knew, right away—I knew him as soon as I joined the party, and he just came back from Moscow from the seventh congress, and I knew him immediately and associated very closely with him. He is really the main man within the Communist Party, so far as constant attention in America is concerned. Of course, in addition, there is also a Communist International representative, who, when I was there, was Gerhart Eisler, under the name of Edwards.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. During this period from 1935 to 1945, while you were in the party and while you were associated with these men, and on the repeated occasions where they have talked over party policy with you, and party programs, and where they brought reports, for instance, of party activities here and in other parts of the world, was there ever any occasion during that 10-year period when any of those men, to your knowledge, ever falsified or lied about the party programs, or individuals connected with the party, if it affected the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Never. This is like a secret police system. If you ever did that, just like the NKVD holds them up, I say, the NKVD holds them up, because that is what they are reported to have over there in Russia, they put one person to spying on another, and if they would lie, ever, you would be held up; in fact, there is a special committee which watches your statements in every discussion to see if you have any false statements therein, or any misrepresentations of the line, Communist to Communist, because that is their basic morality, there he must be truthful, there you must be upright, in a Communist sense, you must be willing to sacrifice, or he must be willing to sacrifice himself, die, or anything for the Communist cause.

When it comes to the people outside of the Communist cause, in other camps, then Lenin tells us very frankly, "You must, as a matter of Communist morality, when necessary, lie, perjure, and do other things."

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let me ask you—during this period of 10 years, did you have occasions to be able to test, from time to time, the truth in what those men reported, as Communists, to the high command of the Communist Party here? In other words, did you have a chance to test their veracity, so far as it was concerned, in their reports?

Mr. BUDENZ. Repeatedly. I don't know that I can give you illustrations right now. I could give you illustrations if I had the time to think it over.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, it leads me to this question, Mr. Budenz: Your conclusions, and your statements, and your testimony today—are they based upon the unbroken line of experience that you had with these men in their statements, so far as communism is concerned, and does that experience lead you to rely upon the words you got within the conspiracy?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. Just like in an army, the truth is within themselves, so far as the facts are concerned. It is a part of their artillery, amongst themselves. You are given these instructions, so that you will act the way they want you to act, and it must be based on correct information, otherwise the whole army will suffer for it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let me now ask you this, Mr. Budenz, and I want to confine this to the period while you were a member of the party, and not later than October 1945, and it has something to do—and I would not ask the question, had not some similar questions been asked just a moment ago—I feel that this is a fragmentary bit of information, but if an official Soviet publication, published in Russia, praises and approves, or did—I am confining this to not later than October 1945, and during the period when you were a Communist—if an official Russian publication praises and approves the writing and analyses of certain situations involving Russia, would you say that that approval and that praise was with the full knowledge and consent of the Russian Government, talking about an official Russian publication, that is, an official newspaper or magazine?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, of course, I have never been in Soviet Russia. I can only state that from the fact that I know the Russian Government runs the Communist Party here as though it were a secret police system, therefore there cannot be, in Soviet Russia, more freedom than you have here. I mean to say, it must be intensified, they have police power, and it is known that all the press are Government organs—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think I shall not pursue that at the moment, Mr. Budenz, because that was one of the documents I have been unable to locate this afternoon, that I wanted to show you here; but I perhaps can discover it a little later. It has been mislaid some place for the time being.

Now, I think you were asked a while ago the question about what you had told the FBI. I take it from your answer that you have told, or given answers to the best of your ability to the FBI in all matters, and to all questions which the FBI has asked you.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. So much so that in the case this morning, I even put in a long-distance call to the FBI to tell them about something I had forgotten to tell them. Frankly, I think the Federal Bureau of Investigation is one of the finest agencies of the American Government. I say that in all good faith, not because I am dealing with the FBI, but because as a Communist and as a non-Communist I have observed the FBI, and in my opinion they are the finest, and I therefore have sought to give them every bit of information I can.

I tell the FBI everything I possibly can think of to tell them, except that, naturally, you understand, Senator, I have to do something else; I have 14 hours a week of teaching, which means preparation; I have other things I have to do, and therefore I have to take that into consideration, but wherever I can, and particularly where a trial is up, or some emergency, I have cast aside all other business, always, and given to the FBI as much of my undivided attention as I could.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, as a result of your membership in the party, and your discussions within the party high command, in connection with Mr. Lattimore, can you give us your estimate of his value to the Communist Party, especially with regard to the trends in Asia, as you knew them, as a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it seem to me that I should leave that in the hands of the Senators, after I have told them the truth as I know it. I think my own interpretation would merely seem to be an attempt to furnish the Senators more than I know. I have told my story—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, let me ask you—

Mr. BUDENZ (continuing). So far as I know it. I think it can be corroborated. I know it can. That is all I can do.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let me ask you this question: While you were a Communist, and during these years, and in connection with the discussions of Mr. Lattimore, was Mr. Lattimore considered by those that you discussed him with, as a valued agent, or a valued adjunct to the Communist cause, especially in Asia?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, he was. There are specific statements in that respect by Mr. Stachel, in that respect, and Mr. Browder, to that effect.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I believe you testified in your statement, or otherwise, that Mr. Lattimore was referred, in communications—referred to under the symbol "I" or "XI"?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was a practice in regard to anyone under party discipline who was being discussed.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is, to refer to them in communications with a symbol?

Mr. BUDENZ. Anybody who was in public life, out of the party, also had a dash. We had to guess that, or go and get it. There was not, not even a letter in regard to a person who was, for instance, a person that would be approached in public life because, after all, the Communists can approach a person and that does not mean that person is a Communist, but the thing is, the Communists had another idea in mind and that was not to disclose who was operating secretly. Therefore, all people who were non-Communists, so far—there was a dash for them, and you had to learn, yourself, who it was, but you got it from the substance of the discussion, that generally gave you some indication.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. During the time you were a Communist, and up to the time you left in 1945, did you ever have any serious or substantial reason to doubt that Mr. Lattimore was being used knowingly by the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I have told the picture here. I have no doubt. Nothing came to my attention beyond what I have said.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. How do you know—or do you know of any occasion when any reports were made to the effect that Dr. Lattimore was the conduit through which information might have, on occasion, been transmitted from Moscow to the party in this country, or to members of the high command?

Mr. BUDENZ. Only in the situation to which I have referred. That is the one in 1943. I know, much more definitely, that Mr. Field and Mr. Jaffe are Soviet espionage agents, and I want to establish that very firmly, because that is the beginning, in my opinion, of an investigation that would be of great value.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, I think you also stated it was the Communist Party line, while you were a member of the party—that China was probably the vital spot for conquest as an eventual attack against the United States, or American imperialism?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. China was the main—I will be able to show you, I regret I didn't bring some of those documents here today, but China, throughout the Soviet history, has been one of its main considerations. A Red China was one of the main objectives and instructions to the American party, which even Browder—it even led him to change its name—that we must win the acquiescence in America of a Red China and a Red Poland. That was dinned into us over and over and over again, the importance of China, its great reservoir of manpower was terrific, and you will be able to see, from documents in the Communist International magazine, in the International Press correspondence, which is the official reportorial system of the Communist International, and in many other official Communist statements, the importance of China.

As a matter of fact, so much is this the case that in the official greetings—I don't want to take up too much of your time, but this is something that comes out of your question—in the official greetings to the Seventh Congress, the Communist International, the China Communist Party got the place of honor, and what is done in the face of all this propaganda that they were an agrarian reform group—they say this: their whole hope is in the man of unlimited wisdom, unparallel courage, undying love and devotion to the working class, our leader and teacher, the great Stalin.

In other words, they give their oath of allegiance to Stalin, and that opens up the Seventh Congress of the International in Moscow in 1935. That was done designedly, as the Communists always do, to indicate the importance of the conquest of China.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, Mr. Budenz, would you say that the efforts in China, on the part of the Communists—would you say they were of the highest priority in this world-conquest program, at least during the period while you were a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. They have always been of the highest priority, and they became much more so after World War II. They became of the highest priority when Russia opened up World War No. III against the United States in 1915, because that is what is happening right now. Stalin has said, "Wars are not declared today, they are made," and he is waging a two-front war against us, and in that, China was a big prize, it was the biggest prize, along with Poland—Poland and its coal, and China and its millions.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Would you say that with the importance of China in the Communist program being as great as it is, that the Communists would assign their most able men to their activities in connection with this Chinese revolution, and the whole China situation?

Mr. BUDENZ. They would, and they did.

For instance, they assigned Gerhart Eisler here, and he was an expert on China, and he is one of the shrewdest members of the Communist International, and is now organizing attacks upon us in Germany.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And then, one of the following results—after the either capture or consolidation of China by the Communist Party, an eventual target is the United States, is it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the target.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That comes along in the pattern, step by step?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the target. All of this other is just merely attaching the United States. That is exactly what we were instructed, and what I stated when I left the party in 1945, that a creeping blitz-kreis is being organized again in Europe and Asia to hurl those two continents against the United States.

As a matter of fact, I refer again to this agreement in 1934, that that is not the only conclusive evidence that we have of their intention to drive the United States out of the Philippines, Hawaii, and out of the Pacific.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know, in connection with our activities with the Communist high command, Mr. Budenz, whether or not Mr. Lattimore was assigned to, or cooperated in, Communist organizational activities on the west coast of the United States at any time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that is where he was located during part of his time to which I have referred.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And were those activities directed largely toward the orientation of articles in the Institute of Pacific Relations, or one of its subsidiaries?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, for a number of years he was the editor of Pacific Affairs, one of its papers, and during that time the Communists were very generously presented as authors in that publication.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now I want to ask you—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is, in generous numbers.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just to clarify my own thinking on this matter. The Communist apparatus, as I understand from your testimony, is generally divided—that is, so far as its personnel is concerned—into two classes. One is the Communist who could be referred to more or less publicly as a Communist; it doesn't make too much difference if they are publicly known as Communists. And the other is the Communist supporter and aider and abettor who may be in a position where his identity with the Communist Party must be concealed and any information of that must be avoided if possible. Is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I think I can best answer that by giving an illustration of a tree, because that would tell all the categories of communism. The roots are underground, which really rule the party—that would be Peters, Eisler, men of that character; Peters, the man who sent Whittaker Chambers down here to steal papers out of the State Department, director of espionage for many years; Eisler, scores of enemy aliens in this country at the moment, who have been here for a number of years, have been here instructing the native Communists.

Then the trunk of the tree. The trunk is the open party, and then the men and women in the branches are the concealed Communists. The sap of instruction goes from the roots through the trunk, the open party, to the men and women in the branches. On the public stage they are not Communists. Therefore you do have several categories of Communists. You have the illegal aliens in here, who are sent in by Moscow and who really direct the party. That is the Kremlin policy. And an American may be in charge in the Philippines and in China; he cannot be in charge in America, although he is concealed. He does not appear on the public stage. Then you have the open Communist, such as I was, such as Browder was, in order that the party will appear to be a political party, which it is not.

Thirdly, you have the people who are walking across the public stage as not Communists but who are Communists. However, they all, all three of these groups, are all in this one conspiracy together.

Does that answer your question, or did you want a different definition?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think you have explained it in a little more detail than I was really asking for. I am glad to get it, but what I was trying to bring out is that there are persons of undoubted loyalty to the Communist cause whose names are not carried on any official roll of the Communist Party membership, or who are not so-called card-carrying Communists, literally, but who render yeoman service to the Communist Party with their identity secret and even every attempt made to conceal a direct association.

Mr. BUDENZ. There are hundreds of examples of that, and I will give you one personal illustration, the case of Dr. Norman Bethune, the Canadian physician who died in China with the Chinese Reds. That is an appropriate illustration.

Dr. Bethune was known widely as a non-Communist. He was very indignant whenever anyone proclaimed him to be a Communist, yet when he died Earl Browder arose in a public meeting and said, "When Dr. Bethune left for China the last request he made, because he was going into a war area, was, when he died, if he did die, it should be announced that he was of the army of Stalin." There is one illustration. I could give you many others.

Then there is Mr. Frederick Vanderbilt Field, who denied for a long time that he was a Communist, yet now very openly rejoices in the defeat of American imperialism in the Pacific, and as a Communist writing in this official theoretical organ which is for the leaders of the Communist Party, not for the rank and file. Therefore there are those persons, and I could tell you many, who, after being secretly Communist—well, in New York we had the case of Dr. Bella Dodd, who after many years' denying she was a Communist then came out in the teachers' union, suddenly, as a Communist. There are others of that type.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now may I ask you this question. Out of your experience as a Communist, who does the most effective work for the furtherance, the general furtherance, of the Communist cause, the known Communist or the secret Communist who denies his membership and about whom every cloak of removal or every method of removal from the Communist Party is thrown?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, they are both important to the conspiracy. I want to tell you that. It is very important to the Communists to have an open party, a legal party, although they are not. They are a conspiracy and a fifth column. But in that respect the open Communist plays his part. But of course in the effectiveness of penetrating, infiltrating, and being able to influence, the concealed influence is a tremendous asset.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And is the concealed Communist considered more important in the psychological direction of philosophy favorable to the Communist Party or is the open Communist considered to be more important along that line?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, it is very hard to measure that. Each have their part to play, although as I said, in the deception and confusion of public opinion, necessarily the concealed Communist can play a larger role. However, he needs the open Communist to work with him, and therefore you can't measure the two. However, you must understand that the Communist Party has as its purpose not merely espionage. I hope I made that clear. I think that that is perhaps the lesser of the two things we should consider, but what the Communists call diversion or penetration, the influencing of public opinion, and therefore the concealed Communist is of tremendous value.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Budenz, is it a fair assertion to say that the American people have pitifully little knowledge of the insidious and active work of the Communists in this country?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I think the American people have totally belittled the Communists because the American people think, thank God, in democratic terms, but they have to also add to that that they think in terms of numbers. The Communists don't think in terms of numbers at all. They want numbers, but they want discipline. Stalin said, "We want cadres, military units, steeled units, people who will lie and steal, if you like." The Communists used to have a formula here; to make it all very brief, Browder used to belittle the party himself. "We have a very small party, but our influence is much greater." The Communist counts his effectiveness by the places where his followers are placed, by their influence over others.

I have given you an example, the United Electrical and Radio and Machine Workers' Union, 500,000 fine, patriotic Americans who were persuaded by a group of about 5 percent Communists to adopt many resolutions against the public policy of the United States, attacking the Marshall plan, attacking many other things, at their Boston Convention, that were for the good of America.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Just two more questions, Mr. Budenz, and I shall finish—that is, two more themes, maybe three questions or so.

You are now an assistant professor at Fordham University, are you not, or what is your rank there?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am assistant professor of economics at Fordham.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Prior to your acceptance or your appointment as assistant professor at Fordham University, did you make disclosure to the officials of Fordham University of your Communist background?

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't have to make much disclosure, Senator.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In other words, they were aware generally, of your history?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, sir. Catholic authorities were thoroughly aware of my history. I am not giving them as verifying my character. Don't misunderstand me. But I am today, I am very proud to say, a member of the Catholic Church.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, Mr. Budenz, it was with the knowledge that you had been a Communist and that you had recanted or forsworn communism and changed your beliefs—it was with that knowledge, that you were thereafter given this appointment as assistant professor at Fordham University; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, because the Catholic authorities appreciate that some of their great leaders—and I am not comparing myself to them—like St. Paul, who helped to stone Stephen, like St. Augustine, who was the enemy of the church for many years, have been in other camps. That does not compare me to them, but I mean to say the idea of redeeming yourself is important, and I am seeking to make amends for my conduct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am in no way criticizing you, but the point I am trying to make is that Fordham University is a great and reputable university.

Mr. BUDENZ. But, Senator, I do not wish to use the prestige of Fordham University to support my own character. I will stand on my own feet. The fact of the matter is, however, that at least I was considered to be competent enough to teach young men economics and labor-management relations.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I only want to observe that it is a recommendation at least in my mind for you that this great university would see fit, because I have some idea of their fundamental and patriotic purposes, to put you on its staff.

Now, one other question. You have been a witness for the Government in certain prosecution trials involving Communists. I believe you testified to that effect a moment ago.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have been, in my opinion, too often a witness, but I was unable to avoid it. I say too often, because it is not tasteful to me.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And as a witness for the Government in certain Communist trials, therefore, you are bound to have been vouched for by the Federal authorities when they put you on the witness stand to testify in the prosecution of the case?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, I hesitate to throw upon my shoulders all of these commendations. I feel that perhaps it should be stated that I was a witness for the Government against the 11 Communists. I am not criticizing you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not commending you, Mr. Budenz. I am neither commending you nor condemning you. I am calling attention to certain open facts, and merely as a result of your statement and the knowledge that you were a witness sponsored by the Government in the trial of certain Communist cases it is bound to follow that the Government of the United States sponsored your integrity as a witness, when they saw fit to put you on the stand in support of the Government prosecution cases.

I am not asking you to comment on your own integrity nor upon what that means. I am merely making the observation that there are two instances where that sponsorship has become apparent.

I have no more questions.

Senator TYDINGS. Thank you, Senator Hickenlooper.

Mr. Budenz, will it suit you to come back here on Monday? Some of the members of the committee find it impossible to be here tomorrow. I would like to ask you a great many incidental questions, perhaps, and probably most of them in executive session—maybe all of them. I want to accommodate you as far as I can.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, do you think it could be Tuesday? I will come back Monday. I am in the hands of the committee. I just have to make certain arrangements in New York.

Senator TYDINGS. We will make it Tuesday morning at 10:30, or let's make it 10 o'clock, and the meeting will be in room G-23, in the Capitol. That is a small room off the Senate Chamber, and the arrangements for it will have to be worked out. If you will be here Tuesday at 10 o'clock we won't call on you until then. I have asked you no questions, and I am going to defer my interrogation until then in order to give this general a chance to go.

Senator LODGE. Before we hear the general, it is my understanding that the vote of the committee was to hear Mr. Budenz in public session, and I didn't think we had voted to hear anybody else in public session.

Senator TYDINGS. You said yourself you had some questions you wanted to ask him in executive session. I am trying to accommodate you. That is what you said.

Senator LODGE. I didn't say that at all. My recollection is that the subcommittee voted to hear Mr. Budenz in public session today.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator LODGE. I do not recall that we voted to hear anybody else in public session today, or at any other time.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right.

Senator LODGE. If we hear this general, whose name I do not know, does that mean we are going to go on hearing anybody that may be presented on any side of this case in public, because we will be here until Columbus Day if we do that.

Senator TYDINGS. I think we can hear the general. Mr. Fortas has requested the general. I will put it to a vote.

Senator LODGE. I just want to renew my observation that it is going to make very difficult the work of the investigative agencies who are charged with policing the disloyalty program in the Government, and it is going to continue to be injurious to the position of the United States if we prolong these public proceedings, and I just don't know when we are ever going to stop; if any time Mr. Fortas or Senator McCarthy or anybody else wants to put on a witness in public hearing they are going to do it, then those proceedings will have no end we will never get down to the serious business of ferreting Communists and disloyal persons out of the Government, and we will never give American diplomacy the chance to go ahead with the job of opposing communism all over the world.

Senator TYDINGS. We will have an executive meeting of the committee at 10:30 a. m. We will conclude our open hearing here today, and we can then decide on what kind of hearings we would like to have.

I would like to have the general come forward and be sworn.

Mr. ABE FORTAS (of counsel to Mr. Owen Lattimore). I think that it is a matter of plain fairness to permit some rebuttal, inadequate and not prolonged—

Senator LODGE. If everybody says that, Mr. Fortas, there will be no end to that, because then they can rebut you.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you solemnly promise that the testimony you shall give in this case pending before the committee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

General THORPE. I do, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Take a seat, sir, and give us your full name.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In view of this procedure, I may say that I am informed that Senator McCarthy has a witness he would like to bring on almost immediately in public session.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Give your full name, sir.

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. ELLIOTT R. THORPE, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED

General THORPE. I am Brig. Gen. Elliott R. Thorpe, United States Army, retired.

Senator LODGE. A little slower, please.

Senator TYDINGS. A little more clearly and a little more slowly, general, if you will.

General THORPE. May I read this statement?

Senator TYDINGS. You may read it, before the microphone, so we can hear you. You are a tall man.

General THORPE. Any statements or expressions of opinion made by me at this hearing in no way reflect the opinions or policies of the Department of the Army and reflect only my own opinions.

I have spent something more than half my 32 years of Army service doing intelligence work, the major portion in the Pacific Ocean and the Far East. I have done intelligence work in Hawaii, the countries of southeast Asia, Japan, Netherlands Indies, and the Philippines. During the war, I was Chief of Counterintelligence and Civil Intelligence on the staff of Gen. Douglas MacArthur. My last assignment prior to retiring in December was as military attaché at the American Embassy in Bangkok, Siam.

At this point I believe I should state I am not in possession of any files connected with my work, as they are, of course, in possession of the Department of the Army and consequently are not available to me, which I regard as quite proper. I do believe, however, it is entirely proper for me to express my strong conviction, based on careful examination, that Owen Lattimore is a loyal American citizen and is in no way an agent of the Communist Party nor of the U. S. S. R.

I have had three occasions to look into Owen Lattimore's conduct and loyalty. First in the early 1930's when I was examining the affairs of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Second, when he visited our theater of operation in 1944 and in 1946. Finally my last look at Dr. Lattimore was in 1947 while in charge of procuring Russian linguists for the Army.

To review these three instances, I should like first to mention the Institute of Pacific Relations. It is my personal belief that this organization contains within its membership highly respectable citizens interested in the Pacific Basin and the furthering of peace in that part of the world. It also has associated with it educators interested in using its facilities in their educational work. Finally it has, as have apparently all such organizations, the usual collection of intellectual panhandlers and screwballs. From my limited examination in recent years, I doubt the value of these latter characters to any intelligence-seeking organization.

As an intelligence officer of some years' experience, it is my belief that there is no information available to any foreign government through the Institute of Pacific Relations that cannot be better had through the Government Printing Office, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or going and making a personal examination. In a country as free of access as this, there are practically no places denied foreign visitors other than a very few technical plants. I believe the Institute of Pacific Relations could profitably part with some of their people, but I doubt the capacity of such people to do any serious harm to the United States should they be so inclined.

To return to Dr. Lattimore, in examining the statements of the protagonists of Nationalist China on Dr. Lattimore, I have never, in my experience as an intelligence officer, heard a man so frequently referred to as a Communist with so little basis in fact. It is my belief based on careful examination that through the past 10 years Dr. Lattimore's opinions on China have been the primary basis for this accusation of disloyalty.

It should be borne in mind that there are no neutral views on China. Interested persons are for the most part emotional and positive to an extreme degree. Repeatedly I found people willing to call Lattimore a Communist and then be unable to offer anything more in substantiation than the belief that his opinions on China were pleasing to the Communists. When I had finished looking into this man's loyalty, I found I had nothing but hearsay evidence, much of it obviously vindictive in character. There is no question in my mind that Dr. Lattimore has aroused a vigorous antipathy toward himself among the friends of the Chinese Nationalist cause.

As for Dr. Lattimore's ability to act as a spy for a foreign government, unless he has had access to top-secret information of which I am not aware, regardless of his desires, I rate his capacity for such action so small as to be of no value.

Based on my belief that Dr. Lattimore is and has always been a loyal citizen during the early days of our occupation of Japan, I asked and received his assistance in dealing with matters pertaining to the U. S. S. R. of a confidential nature. His assistance was of material value. When in 1947 I again sought his assistance in acquiring and training Russian linguists, he again gave valuable aid.

For me to say I know the innermost thoughts or all the secret acts of Owen Lattimore would be absurd. I can only say that were I called on to commit my personal safety and that of my command on information supplied by Dr. Lattimore, I would do so with confidence that he would always act as a loyal American citizen.

Senator TYDINGS. General, first of all give us a quick run-down by years of your various Army assignments, starting with, say, 1932.

General THORPE. Hawaii, the Philippines, Dutch East Indies. I was in the Dutch East Indies when we were overtaken by the Japanese. I got out of there and joined General MacArthur after I escaped from the Japanese, when the general came out of the islands, and I stayed as his Chief of Counterintelligence and Civil Intelligence until I returned home in 1946.

Senator TYDINGS. You were his what?

General THORPE. Chief of Counterintelligence and Civil Intelligence.

Senator TYDINGS. In what geographic area was your field?

General THORPE. The Pacific theater.

Senator TYDINGS. The whole Pacific theater?

General THORPE. Yes, sir; everything commanded by General MacArthur.

Senator TYDINGS. What time did you become his Chief of Counter-espionage, what year—1941?

General THORPE. No; 1942; after he came out of the islands in February, 1942.

Senator TYDINGS. And you stayed with him until 1946, and then came home?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. What have you done since 1946?

General THORPE. I have commanded the Army Language School Training at Monterey, Calif., and been military attaché at Bangkok, Siam.

Senator TYDINGS. Where were you stationed in the Far East while with General MacArthur?

General THORPE. All the way from Australia to Japan.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you have a force of agents working under you?

General THORPE. I did, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. How large was that force, if you feel you can tell us.

General THORPE. I would rather not, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Don't do it, then. Were there a considerable number of them?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you have occasion to put any of these agents to investigating Dr. Lattimore?

General THORPE. I did.

Senator TYDINGS. Was the investigation continuous? That is, was it off and on, or did you do it all at one time?

General THORPE. We did it twice, each time he came to the theater.

Senator TYDINGS. Was it a cursory or a thorough investigation?

General THORPE. Sufficient so that I was willing—

Senator TYDINGS. You have made a pretty broad statement here.

General THORPE. So that I would allow him to see confidential documents, and after all I have heard about these various statements—

Senator TYDINGS. Was the advice he gave you the kind of advice that paid dividends eventually, or was it erroneous advice?

General THORPE. It was good advice.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you find any point in his exposition to you where it caused you to question his loyalty?

General THORPE. No, sir. In his aid to me I had no occasion to question his loyalty.

Senator TYDINGS. Did he show a partisanship for any other country besides the United States?

General THORPE. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Senator TYDINGS. Were his opinions based, in your judgment, upon the welfare of this country, rather than foreign commitments on other countries?

General THORPE. I believe he was very earnest in aiding the United States.

Senator TYDINGS. I have to apologize for leaving. I have an engagement, as I said earlier in the day. I am going to leave my proxy with Senator Green and, Senator Green, I ask you if you won't take the chairmanship of the meeting in my absence.

Senator GREEN. Senator Hickenlooper, have you any questions?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

General, you say you first met Mr. Lattimore in the early thirties?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Where were you stationed at the time you first met Mr. Lattimore?

General THORPE. Sir, I would like to correct that. The first time he came to my attention was while I was responsible for investigating the Institute of Pacific Relations in Hawaii.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Why were you investigating the Institute of Pacific Relations in Hawaii?

General THORPE. For the very reason that they were concerned about how effective they were as a subversive organization.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And you had had some allegations that there was a chance that it was a subversive organization?

General THORPE. Oh, yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So you were investigating them. In your investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations, either then or later, did you find—and I am not asking you about the organization itself as a whole, there were individuals connected with the organization who were considered to be subversive? I may say to you that I may or may not ask you who the individuals were. I am asking you for the fact.

General THORPE. Subversive, having the capacity to do harm to the country? Yes. I think I can recall—I am sorry I can't tell you his name, but this was years ago; yes, there was one man in Hawaii at the time this question came up, and I am not sure, but I believe that was before Dr. Lattimore joined the institute. I have not rehearsed this with anybody; I have come here right out of the country.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you come to the conclusion, not necessarily that the entire organization or its membership is subversive, but that there was evidence of subversive activity within the organization?

General THORPE. It wasn't so much subversive as chiseling. There was more evidence that there were people—I think the description "intellectual panhandlers" describes them, who go around in organizations and make a living getting jobs in various capacities. Their intentions may have been subversive but so far as ever producing any evidence of subversive acts, I was not able to do that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You say that on a couple of occasions, or on two different occasions later, when Dr. Lattimore came out to the Orient where you were—do you recall the years, approximately?

General THORPE. That he came out? I think it was in 1944. I am doing all this from memory.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is all right. I don't expect you to give exact dates.

General THORPE. Around 1944, I think, and then again after the end of the war with Japan.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. At the time you investigated the Institute of Pacific Relations and first came into contact with Dr. Lattimore, did you investigate him at that time?

General THORPE. I investigated the institute before I came in contact with him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was he included in that investigation?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then when he came out to the Orient the first time, if you recall, in 1944, you investigated him again?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And then the second time he came, in 1946, you again investigated him. What was the occasion for those two investigations? Were there allegations or charges or statements that he might well be investigated?

General THORPE. Sir, there is no one neutral about opinions on China. We have a great many people who were in our theater who were very important Nationalists and they were known, and I say their dislike for Dr. Lattimore was very earnest. He has certainly earned their cordial dislike.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes; I can understand that. But were there allegations made to you derogatory to Dr. Lattimore's purposes in China, so far as our own policy was concerned, that caused you to investigate him to see whether they were true or not?

General THORPE. No, sir. We investigated people that came out to find out whether they were persons who could be trusted with confidential documents. This was during the war. We trusted everybody, but to make sure we checked them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you develop your own information there on the ground about him?

General THORPE. Most of it; yes, sir. Some of it from back here in the States.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is, reports sent from here in the United States?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you have access to any investigative files that might have been compiled by the FBI or other departments at the time of those investigations, or either of them?

General THORPE. My theater, my field, has been the Pacific. My recollection is that we did not turn over to the FBI investigation of subversive activities beyond the continental limits until about 1939, I believe.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then in 1944 and 1946, when you had these two investigations of Dr. Lattimore—

General THORPE. At that time Mr. Hoover had representatives in my section. The cooperation was very close.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. My question that I was asking you is whether or not you had access, at the time you were investigating Dr. Lattimore, to any investigative files that might have been developed in the United States.

General THORPE. Yes, sir; I believe I did.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are not sure about that?

General THORPE. I never imagined I was going to be called on to ransack my memory on this.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You said a moment ago, General, that Dr. Lattimore was shown confidential documents. What kind of documents was he shown there by you?

General THORPE. Sir, I am a retired officer. I do not have those documents.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not asking you for the details. Were they secret, confidential, top secret, restricted, or what was their classification?

General THORPE. Sir, I cannot tell.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you have all kinds of documents of various classifications?

General THORPE. From top secret down to restricted; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. To confidential and restricted?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Was Dr. Lattimore given access to these documents in connection with matters that you wanted to ask him about?

General THORPE. Sir, I am sorry, I would have to say truthfully I don't remember.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I understood you to say he was shown confidential documents.

General THORPE. He could have had access to them. I am sure he must have seen some confidential messages in connection with his work there that he was advising on.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He was there to advise you?

General THORPE. He was advising me; yes, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And any document which would be necessary for his information in order for him to advise you would be accessible to him?

General THORPE. He must have seen them. Yes, sir; he must have seen them.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That would be whether they were restricted, confidential, top secret, or secret?

General THORPE. That I can't remember.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. If it were necessary to show him the document in order to get his advice, he was cleared for access to that document?

General THORPE. He was cleared for access to it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General Thorpe, you spent some time in the Orient and in China and the places of that kind, and you are now retired. I would like to ask you whether you favor the recognition of Communist China.

General THORPE. No, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You do not?

General THORPE. I do not, sir. I would like to add, since you asked the question, it is a personal opinion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It is purely a personal opinion.

General THORPE. I cannot urge too strongly the seriousness of communism in the United States. That is why I am here.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is why we are here, too.

General THORPE. Yes, sir; but I would like you to understand my motive in coming here, sir. It is that of a loyal officer.

Senator McMAHON. What was your answer?

General THORPE. I would like to have you believe that I came here as a loyal American officer deeply concerned with trying to stop communism. That is why I volunteered to come before this committee, because I am concerned about communism, and communism should be earnestly looked into. I am sure it is much greater than people can realize. I have just come from a country where—

Senator GREEN. This hearing is connected with an individual.

General THORPE. Yes, sir. He asked my opinion about an individual.

Senator GREEN. Why did you come in that connection?

General THORPE. Why did I come?

Senator GREEN. What is your purpose in asking to be heard?

General THORPE. Sir, I came here because I am concerned as an intelligence officer about a person. I am greatly concerned about cutting off our sources of supply. I have stated my belief in regard to Dr. Lattimore, and no one else, and I am concerned that people who handle Communist documents, people who are seen with them, if they are going to be accused of communism when they in my opinion are not, it is going to cut off what little bit we have left in the way of information.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General Thorpe, I don't think anyone here is questioning your loyalty in the slightest. That element is not entering into it, so far as I know.

General THORPE. Thank you, sir. Senator Lodge thought I was highly improper in staying.

Senator LODGE. I have said nothing at all.

General THORPE. I mean before I made my statement.

Senator LODGE. You are putting words into my mouth. I have said nothing. I hope to question you in a minute, but I haven't said anything yet.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. General Thorpe, were you connected with the preparation of an intelligence report in connection with a man named Norman shortly before you left China and came over to Japan and came back over to the United States, whose report was submitted to General Willoughby?

General THORPE. Norman? I don't recall the name.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You don't recall a man by the name of E. Herbert Norman?

General THORPE. Oh, yes; yes, sir. He is the Canadian representative. Oh, yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is the fellow. Were you associated with Mr. Norman in preparing a report that was transferred to Mr. Willoughby shortly before you came back to the United States?

General THORPE. Not that I know of. Dr. Norman was associated with my section in SCAP Headquarters until he was appointed Canadian representative on the Far East Commission, that is correct, but I don't remember ever making a report on him, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did he make a report which was filed with you for transmittal to the proper channels on the political situation in Asia?

General THORPE. Sir, not that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And with certain recommendations?

General THORPE. Not to my knowledge; no, sir. That must have been after I left.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am asking about shortly before you left.

General THORPE. No, sir. So far as I recall, I do not remember that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I am not necessarily assuming such report was made, but following up my question, a report which was submitted to you and which you approved and transmitted on to General Willoughby.

General THORPE. Not to my knowledge. I was not under General Willoughby. I reported directly to the Chief of Staff, and did not report to General Willoughby. I had no occasion to transmit reports to him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Change my question to the transmission of the report to the Chief of Staff on the political situation in Asia.

General THORPE. Not that I recall. In Asia? That I am sure I did not. On something in Japan, I may have submitted a report at the time we were investigating war criminals, but I am sure it was not while I was there.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And was any report on either Japan or China, which had been approved and transmitted by you, the subject of controversy within the general headquarters in Japan? In other words, were you called upon to explain or discuss the implications of a political report which you had O. K.'d?

General THORPE. No, sir. I am sure that someone has it confused, and that must have been after I left, because, if you mean a report in which there was disagreement in the staff, and I was called on to defend the report, no, sir.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Something of that nature.

General THORPE. No sir. I am sure that they have me mixed up with someone else in this.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think that is all, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GREEN. Senator McMahon, have you any questions?

Senator McMAHON. What are you doing now?

General THORPE. Sir, I just retired from the Army. I am trying to get my home up in Rhode Island straightened out. That is all. I am right now trying to take care of my personal business. It is not a matter of life and death; it is a matter of personal business. I had no idea it would be so embarrassing.

Senator McMAHON. Did you come up through the ranks?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. You went in as an enlisted man in what year?

General THORPE. 1917.

Senator McMAHON. And then you stayed in the Army?

General THORPE. Yes, sir. I came out of Rhode Island State College into the Army and stayed in until I retired last year.

Senator McMAHON. When did you start intelligence work?

General THORPE. I think at the Peace Conference in Paris after World War I.

Senator McMAHON. Did I understand you to say that Lattimore was a part of your organization?

General THORPE. No, sir. He was an adviser, but he was not—I cannot say that he was—a part of the organization. He came over with the Pauley Commission, and he was considered one of the best-informed people on the subjects with which he wanted to deal, and therefore we asked him for his advice.

Senator McMAHON. General, you have heard Lattimore's views on China expounded, have you not?

General THORPE. Sir, I am not here to defend Dr. Lattimore's views. I am merely here to state that it is my opinion that he is a loyal American citizen. I know him to be.

Senator McMAHON. Did you discuss those views with him when you were engaged in work with him?

General THORPE. In China, or about China?

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

General THORPE. Not particularly, because we were concentrating on Japan, and at that particular time we were not interested in the Chinese. We were interested in Russians and Japanese. So far as any discussions of Dr. Lattimore's views on China, I am unable to offer anything.

Senator McMAHON. General, I presume that the restrictions of your trade are such, or the trade from which you retired, your occupation, that you cannot go into details relative to the kinds of assignments that Lattimore had.

General THORPE. No, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Would it be possible at some future meeting of the committee in executive session for you to develop that matter?

General THORPE. I am sorry, but I am a retired officer, and as such I feel that that information should——

Senator McMAHON. You would have to get a release from the Secretary of Defense?

General THORPE. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Or the Secretary of War?

General THORPE. Yes, sir. You understand my position?

Senator McMAHON. I do. I understand it perfectly. But I take it if you were released by the Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary of War, you then would be able to go into more detail with us concerning these transactions between you and Lattimore.

General THORPE. Sir, I hope this is my final appearance here.

Senator McMAHON. It occurs to me that since you have given such a forthright opinion here, and you largely based it upon your conversations and your knowledge of his activities in the Far East, that it would be most helpful in evaluating your testimony if we had a complete exposition of the relationship that he bore to your organization. That is my only purpose in suggesting that. Perhaps the other members of the committee might think that it was a good idea to get a release for you by the Secretary of Defense.

General THORPE. I feel it would serve no useful purpose. You know my opinions now. You can take them or discard them, according to your judgment. Were I to take up your time for days on end, and were I to go into detail here, I feel I would not be helpful to you.

Senator McMAHON. That is all.

Senator GREEN. Senator Lodge?

Senator LODGE. General, when did you write this statement?

General THORPE. Yesterday.

Senator LODGE. So you thought you were going to appear today?

General THORPE. I knew it. I came down here. I came all the way from Minnesota to appear here.

Senator LODGE. I think it would have been courteous if we had known about it, because it helps us, you know. We have a job to do.

General THORPE. I apologize sir.

Senator LODGE. Just a minute, sir. It takes some time to study these matters and prepare yourself to ask intelligent questions and to do the job that we are supposed to do.

When was this mimeographed? Do you know?

General THORPE. Yes, sir; last night.

Senator LODGE. I think it is something somewhat less than frank to have prepared this yesterday and mimeographed it yesterday and the first thing we know about it is half-way through the morning.

Mr. FORTAS. May I ask that that criticism be directed to me and not to the general? If you should have been advised to that effect, it was my responsibility.

Senator LODGE. I am not undertaking to address it to anybody, but I am interested in orderly procedure and I am interested in things being done in an orderly and just, and as fair a manner as possible, and I want to avoid the atmosphere of chaos and the atmosphere of a circus, and I want to get ferreted disloyal people out of the State Department, and I think this device, with all these movies and all this sort of thing, is not the way to get disloyal people out of the State Department.

Will you be available to be questioned in executive session?

General THORPE. Sir, I don't live in Washington.

Senator LODGE. Rhode Island isn't very far away. I go through Rhode Island when I go to Boston. I go to and fro.

General THORPE. I am not there yet. I haven't had a chance to go to Rhode Island yet. If the committee would be good enough, and I am sure you are going to be disappointed in my lack of information when I come back here, if you want me to come. I came voluntarily this time and, to be perfectly honest, it is expensive for me to come here.

Senator LODGE. I think it would be preferable from your viewpoint, as well as every other, to question you in executive session.

General THORPE. Sir, I have no objection to this.

Senator LODGE. You would come if you were asked, would you not?

General THORPE. Oh, sir, I am interested in anything that will help further the cause of eliminating communism in the United States.

Senator LODGE. All right. Thank you very much.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as Mr. Fortas has assumed full responsibility, I would like to know whether Mr. Fortas notified the chairman of this committee that the General would be here; if he did, when he notified the chairman of the committee and what the circumstances are surrounding that. Apparently the general was brought down here from Minnesota, or came down from Minnesota, yesterday, prepared to testify today, and the first notice I ever had was when the proposal was made this morning, and certainly I was laboring under the assurance that we would have only the one witness today.

Mr. FORTAS. Senator, if that was your understanding, it certainly was not the understanding that I got. I got the understanding from previous statements—perhaps they were statements of the chairman alone—but from previous statements by this committee, by an authorized source on this committee, that Mr. Budenz would be put on the stand and that I, as counsel for Mr. Lattimore, would then have an opportunity to produce such witnesses in rebuttal as might occur to me. I know of no rule and no custom, with all apologies to Senator Lodge—

Senator LODGE. Wait a minute, Mr. Fortas.

Senator GREEN. One at a time, please.

Senator LODGE. Don't talk to me about rules and customs, Mr. Fortas, because I am not a lawyer, and this is not a court and this is not a legal proceeding. These are elected Senators representing the people, and we are not a lawyer, and all I say is that if I am going to do my job thoroughly, it is only courteous to give me a chance to know what is coming, so I can do a little home work. That is all I said. I am not talking about law and custom.

Mr. FORTAS. Senator, I was about to say that if there is a custom, or if this committee now instructs me that it would prefer to have any statements handed to it in advance, I shall of course comply. I was not so advised previously.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you care to state, Mr. Fortas, in answer to my question which I asked you a while ago, if you notified anybody on this committee of the general's appearance today? If so, when did you notify, and whom?

Mr. FORTAS. My best recollection, Senator, is that several days ago I mentioned to the chairman that I hoped that General Thorpe would be here.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Did you notify the chairman or anybody on yesterday or at any time when you knew that he would be here that he would definitely be here today?

Mr. FORTAS. I think I did, Senator. I think I notified the chairman.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. You are a very intelligent and able man, Mr. Fortas—

Mr. FORTAS. Thank you.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. And this has only been a day or so, and it would seem to me that your memory should serve you sharply in this short time, and you could say definitely whether or not you did or you didn't, because only 2 or 3 days has gone by.

Mr. FORTAS. I appreciate the Senator's compliment, but I am telling the Senator that I think that in a conversation with Senator Tydings on yesterday I did tell him that the general was in town, and that I would bring him to the hearing; and I will not be any more positive than that, because I cannot be. I saw the Senator for about three-quarters of a minute, or something thereabouts, in his office, and he was in a great rush and saw me and quickly ushered me out the door.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That was yesterday?

General THORPE. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That is sufficient. Thank you.

Mr. FORTAS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a point of inquiry here, if you are through with the general. Are you?

Senator GREEN. Yes; thank you very much.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I wonder if counsel has any questions to ask.

Mr. MORGAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't believe I have any questions.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a point here about procedure, and it is an inquiry. It was my understanding, and I now respectfully request, that Mr. Lattimore be given an opportunity to appear in public session before this subcommittee in order to make such reply to Mr. Budenz as he may see fit.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Fortas, if you have received that information, it is correct. We will afford Mr. Lattimore an opportunity to reply to Mr. Budenz.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, may I say we should like to have at least 24 hours from this time to consider Mr. Budenz' remarks, and for Mr. Lattimore to prepare himself?

Senator GREEN. As I understand it, there is no intention of having any meeting before next Tuesday.

Mr. FORTAS. That is fine, sir.

Second, Mr. Budenz in his testimony asked the committee to subpoena Mr. Frederick V. Field. I should like to join in that request, and I should like to state my reasons very briefly.

Some days ago there was a radio announcement, or a statement by a radio commentator, to the effect that Mr. Budenz would say that he had received information from Mr. Field that Mr. Lattimore was connected with the Communist Party. I thereupon traced Mr. Field to Las Vegas, Nev. I do not know Mr. Field. To this moment I have not seen him. I told Mr. Field of the rumors, and asked him to send me a letter as to whether the allegations were true or false. I should like at this moment to read the letters and offer them for the record.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I object. If we are going to get Mr. Field we will get him here under oath and he can give his own testimony.

Senator GREEN. This matter will be taken up in executive session by the committee—your request.

Mr. FORTAS. May I merely state, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that these letters are pertinent to the committee's consideration of whether it will subpoena Mr. Field?

Senator GREEN. We are not going to discuss it here publicly. You can submit to the committee the letters.

Mr. FORTAS. My third point is this: I have before me an affidavit that I should like to offer for the record at this time.

Senator GREEN. What is the nature of it?

Mr. FORTAS. I am sorry I do not have enough copies for all the members of the committee. It is an affidavit by Bella V. Dodd, who was a member of the Communist Party, a member of its national committee. She was a member of the national committee from 1944 to 1948. She was expelled from the Communist Party in June 1949 after charges had been preferred against her on account of her opposition—

Senator GREEN. What request are you making in connection with the affidavit?

Mr. FORTAS. I am offering it for the record. Would you like me to read it?

Senator GREEN. We have no sworn witness to offer testimony, and there is nothing to go in the record.

Mr. FORTAS. May I, on behalf of Mr. Lattimore, offer this as an exhibit?

Senator LONGE. Why can't you do that when he appears?

Mr. FORTAS. This witness has not been subpoenaed. I have no right to subpoena.

Senator GREEN. You just requested a subpoena for Frederick V. Field.

Mr. FORTAS. That has not been granted.

Senator GREEN. It has not been refused, either.

Perhaps Mr. Lattimore, when he appears again, can present this affidavit.

Mr. FORTAS. You prefer that procedure to my offering this now?

Senator GREEN. Certainly.

Mr. FORTAS. All right, Mr. Chairman.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, by my silence I do not mean to give consent to the procedure. I think, if in the opinion of the committee the witness is necessary, the witness should be subpoenaed.

Senator GREEN. Certainly, but I say this affidavit can be presented then and we can take it up at that time.

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, I know no better way of presenting the facts with respect to a prospective witness to this committee than by offering a statement or an affidavit, but I leave the matter where it is.

Senator GREEN. Thank you.

Is there anything else?

The meeting stands adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 5 p. m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene in executive session at 10 a. m. Tuesday, April 25, 1950, in room G-23, U. S. Capitol.)

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1950

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 231,
Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The subcommittee met in executive session, pursuant to call, at 10:30 a. m., in room G-23, United States Capitol, Senator Millard E. Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), presiding.

Present: Senators Tydings (chairman of the subcommittee), Green, McMahon, Hickenlooper, and Lodge.

Also present: Senators Connally, chairman of the full committee; Mr. Louis F. Budenz; and Mr. Edward Morgan, chief counsel for the subcommittee.

(Following off-the-record discussion in regard to committee procedure.)

Senator TYDINGS. All right, let us proceed with Mr. Budenz.

(Mr. Budenz entered the room.)

Senator LODGE. Here is Mr. Budenz.

Mr. Budenz, you said in your testimony on April 20, and I quote:

In this cell was also Owen Lattimore. This I know from reports received in the Politburo, and given to me officially as managing editor of the Daily Worker.

Now, are those reports available?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no; they are not. No communications or reports of that character that come in are available. They rely purely on oral transmission of instructions.

Senator LODGE. When you say a report is received at the Politburo, that is a verbal report?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes. All reports are verbal except those that come on onion skin, occasionally. That is Communist practice.

Senator LODGE. There are records or reports of any kind that could be subpoenaed and found?

Mr. BUDENZ. The only thing that could be subpoenaed are certain Communist leaders that I suggested, such as Jack Stachel; and, I would also suggest subpoenaing, although I am not sure of this, but I wish to cooperate in it, a Manning Johnson, a Negro Communist leader, who is now out of the party.

Senator LODGE. Let me ask you this question: In view of your previous statement that a Communist has no hesitation about perjuring himself, what good does it do to get those men?

Mr. BUDENZ. At the trial of the 11, Senator, I believe you will find in the record that they were compelled to make admissions which were very damaging to themselves. Now, I do not know that that can be the case here, but I do hope that it can be. Certainly it did prove to be the case there. There, you had the same situation exactly: The only written documents you had there were the official pronouncements of the Communist Party, and yet by oral evidence they were convicted, and that is the only way you can convict Communists.

Senator LODGE. Later on, on Thursday, last Thursday, you said "In 1944, Jack Stachel advised me to consider Lattimore as a Communist."

Now, what is the significance of that statement? Did he say that to you—for what purpose did he say that to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was in order that I would be able, in case of a hearing that Lattimore, any comment on Lattimore, or discussions on Lattimore, to take his reports or statements as authoritative. We had that understanding in regard to a great number of people in the Daily Worker. That is what I was assigned to do, keep track, in order that, when copy came to me, I would be able to handle situations properly.

Senator LODGE. That was made to you with the definite purpose, a definite purpose and not just a casual remark?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was an official, definite purpose. That, by the way, was not only a definite purpose, I might call it a custom or rather a practice—"practice" is a better word.

Senator LODGE. Now, you have referred, in your testimony the other day, to other witnesses, and one of those, I gather from what you just said, Manning Johnson—

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I am not certain that Manning Johnson will be able to substantiate what I have said. I mentioned him for the reason that among the Negro comrades the Pacific question was very much more brought up than among other Communists. They were given the responsibility, on a number of occasions, of handling the Pacific questions, within a certain degree within the party, and it may be he will be able to do it.

In addition to that, I have suggested the other witnesses.

Senator LODGE. Field, Jaffe, Browder, and Stachel?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct; especially Stachel.

Senator LODGE. Who else?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is all for the moment.

Senator LODGE. All for the moment?

Mr. BUDENZ. I may be able to suggest more, before this session is over.

May I make a remark, Senator?

Senator LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. This isn't arbitrary. I said my statement could be corroborated, because I am certain that, while this is a small group that knows about this, someone like Manning Johnson, or others, will also know it. I am not certain that he is the man, but I have a general impression he might be. He was a member of the national committee who was interested in the Pacific question and from time to time was in touch with the Pacific question.

Now, one of the men that will be able to be of some help—at least, in certain admissions I shall be able to show you in a minute—is Frederick Vanderbilt Field. He will be a very reluctant and hostile witness, although of course a man that will not perhaps show his hostility; but his long acquaintance with Mr. Lattimore, and association, will enable you, I think, to elicit certain information from him.

Senator LORGE. In the hearing the other day Senator Hickenlooper made a point which I thought was very important, and I wanted to cite it to you, because it forms the basis for a question I want to ask you.

Senator Hickenlooper said:

I am, of course, obviously asking you whether it is necessary for those who are in the inner sanctum of the party to be convinced that someone is a Communist only upon personal association and personal admission by that person to the one so assuming.

To me, that is a significant point, because it indicates that in this whole contemplation we are dealing with hearsay evidence, but there are various degrees of hearsay evidence.

So far as liability is concerned, hearsay evidence, when official in character and deliberately done, as you say this was, is much more persuasive than just casual.

Now, these statements you made were all made by these Communists in this official capacity; is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. There was an official practice which was carried out regularly; that is to say, in my specific instance, being managing editor of the Daily Worker—and, by the way, that is a life-and-death matter. I want to assure you gentlemen this is no casual matter for the managing editor of the Daily Worker. It is what I would call a political life-and-death matter that he have no errors in the publication in regard to the different individuals or in regard to different issues. Consequently, you are constantly refreshed by the liaison officer of the Politburo, who comes in every day and makes changes from time to time, personnel changes, but for the larger period of time it was Jack Stachel. He is, by the way, the most powerful member of the Political Bureau. He is the man, incidentally, closest in touch with the Communist International "apparatus."

Senator LORGE. Pursuing that same line, Senator Hickenlooper then said:

Let me ask you: During this period of 10 years, did you have occasion to be able to test, from time to time, the truth in what those men reported as Communists to the high command of the Communist Party here? In other words, did you have a chance to test their veracity, so far as it was concerned in their report?

And you gave this answer, Mr. Budenz:

Repeatedly. I don't know that I can give you illustrations right now. I could give you illustrations if I had the time to think it over.

Well now, you have had a little time to think it over. Could you give us illustrations proving the veracity of these Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. This is just something that has occurred so frequently, perhaps, I can't grasp it for the moment; but, as a matter of fact, that was the whole center of their information.

I will give you one example. Mr. Alger Hiss is an example, and I have to refer to him because he is so outstanding and is well known but I would be able, upon reflection, to even furnish to the committee in written form instance after instance, which would be the reason I mentioned it in that fashion. I could take matters which are public record, more than personal knowledge, incidents in which this would be conformed.

Senator LONGE. It seems to me it is very pertinent to have any information that the witness can give which will show that these assertions by Communists in the past, on their own internal organization, have been accurate. I would like to request, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Budenz furnish us with illustrations of this veracity.

Mr. BUDENZ. I will furnish you with a written report—which, of course, will still be under subpoena—of a number of such instances.

Senator LONGE. Now, I asked you the other day if you could give a specific illustration of when Lattimore received an instruction and carried out an instruction which came to him from the Communist organization; and you stated that the most specific instance that you could make was when he was instructed to portray the Chinese Communists as agrarian reformers—

Mr. BUDENZ. To direct it.

Senator LONGE. What?

Mr. BUDENZ. To direct that campaign.

There is another example I might give.

Senator LONGE. All right, go ahead.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is in regard to the Communists writing in the Pacific affairs. I brought a list here today and that is one of the reasons I requested an executive session, Senator; because it seemed to me that it would not serve the public interest to be spreading the names of all of these people all over the papers, and I believe that you know my sentiments are rather in favor of trying to get into this thing in executive sessions wherever possible.

Now, the thing is that I have a list here. Of course, I could answer your first question, if you wish it—

Senator LONGE. I think that would be more orderly, if you did. I would like, if you could say when, where, and how Lattimore received these instructions, or this instruction.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, now, Senator, here I am in executive session, I suppose, and in this respect I will have to mention the fact that necessarily I did not follow Mr. Lattimore around. I only know that in Political Bureau meetings, which I attended, I heard instructions made that these things were going forward, and I saw visible evidences of it going forward in the tremendous campaign which took place in book after book on this subject.

Now, that Mr. Lattimore personally had a conference with this gentleman or that, I cannot tell you.

Senator TYDINGS. How was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That he had a conference with this writer or that one, I cannot tell you because I was not present.

Senator TYDINGS. I did not catch that.

Mr. BUDENZ. But, I have heard reports that this campaign was proceeding, and that it bore full fruit about 1943.

Senator LONGE. Do you know, did any Communist worker tell you that he told Lattimore to start this campaign?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; that was the substance of this report. That was why I was advised, not only that they had started—

Senator LONGE. Who told you that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was the report made in regard to this session in 1937. This was Browder's report, and Field's report.

Senator LONGE. He told you that Lattimore had received these instructions?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes; that he had received them—that is to say, first, I was thinking of the meeting when they said they were going to give them to him. Later on there followed this report and others verifying them, specifically Browder and Stachel confirmed that the instructions were being carried out.

Senator LODGE. Did they say where they had given them, somebody going to see him at his house, or were they given to him over the telephone?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, no.

Senator LODGE. You don't know the procedure?

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, Senator, the Communists' reports to the Politburo don't go into details of that character. They give the general report on the campaign that is taking place, what is happening, and a general résumé of the situation.

Senator LODGE. So, you could not pin point all those details?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I never so claimed.

Senator LODGE. I know.

I realize you have not, but I am just asking. I am not trying to say that you claim that you could, but I was asking you whether you could. Then, you think that he received the order, and then you believe that he carried out the order. What makes you think he carried out the order?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that is the information which I received officially, that he carried out the order, and was proceeding, the campaign was proceeding, and Lattimore was participating in directing the campaign. I saw it proceeding publicly and therefore I took it for granted.

Senator LODGE. By that, you mean you saw his books and magazines and articles and speeches?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not his, but the books and magazine articles being used publicly for this.

Senator LODGE. What did you think was his connection with these books and magazine articles? Do you think he furnished the materials?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not the materials necessarily, but directions. It is common Communist practice to give directions to others in regards to a thing.

Senator TYDINGS. I cannot hear you.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is a common Communist trait, to give directions to others in regard to a campaign.

Senator LODGE. So, the people who were writing the speeches and making the speeches, and writing the articles and books were Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. Quite a few of them were; yes, Senator.

Senator LODGE. Otherwise, they would not have been?

Mr. BUDENZ. One man I do not know to be a Communist was Harrison Foreman, but Communists have a way of getting people to also write who are not Communists, on occasion. Harrison Foreman, so far as I know, was not, but some of the others were; yes.

Senator LODGE. Because otherwise, is it not true they would not have been responsive to Lattimore's directions?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. They were Communists.

Senator LODGE. Because if they were Communists, by the same token they probably follow the same policy, or would, anyway, whether they got it from Lattimore or not.

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily. There has to be a channel of communication.

Senator LODGE. To tell them what to do?

Mr. BUDENZ. Of course. Today Eisler is very powerful in Germany, because he knows all about America, and can direct a campaign against us. He is the channel of communication there and always cadres are developed. They develop people for special fields, or specific fields. One man may be valuable in one field and another man valuable in another field.

Senator LODGE. You mentioned this man Harrison Foreman as a man who took the line that the Communists favored, although not being a Communist himself.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is, I do not know that he is a Communist.

Senator LODGE. We all know there are cases of men who say the things the Communists believe, without being a Communist themselves; do we not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. Many of them are influenced by Communists.

Senator LODGE. They may be dupes, may they not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator LODGE. You do not think it is possible that Lattimore fell in that category, or falls in that category, of not being a Communist but being a man not skilled in the ways of the world, and had something suggested to him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can only rely on the statements given to me, and these statements are authoritative; and, following the channels that Communists' communications follow, and to my understanding, or rather to my knowledge, have always been accurate.

Senator LODGE. I know you have a great reputation for accuracy.

Mr. BUDENZ. Not I. I say they have been accurate within the authority; not my own accuracy. I mean their accuracy has been tested, as I have said over and over again, within the party. It is essential that this army of sedition, this army of destruction should be based on facts. That is to say, it is an error of the most serious moment, if facts are not stated, within the Communists themselves.

Senator LODGE. You would not know, then, from where you were sitting, of anyone who had received a personal directive from Lattimore; would you?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would not know; no, sir.

Senator LODGE. In addition to directing this campaign to change public opinion about China, is there any other major job that you think he did?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is this one special thing that I can point to, and that is the matter of getting Communists to infiltrate the Pacific Affairs; that is the publication of which he was editor.

Senator LODGE. Getting jobs for them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Getting them to write. It was not jobs, it was influence—American businessmen and American professors and American people of good will toward the Pacific in their way of thinking. You must remember this type Institute of Pacific Relations was founded by the Young Men's Christian Association. Therefore, they had a group of people the Communists were very eager to influence. I compiled a partial list. Here is my embarrassment, Senator: I am unaware of whether this list is going to be given out, and while I was watching with interest the discussion here, this is one of the reasons I asked for an executive session.

Senator TYDINGS. What do you mean "be given out"?

Mr. BUDENZ. I mean, would it be made available for anyone?

Senator GREEN. That is for the committee to decide.

Senator TYDINGS. The committee will have to decide that.

Senator GREEN. We do not have to decide before we hear it.

Mr. BUDENZ. The reason for this is, Senator, that—No. 1, some of these people may still be engaged in activities that would deserve further scrutiny; others may have broken with the party. In other words, this is a heterogeneous group of people, so far as the present listing is concerned.

Senator TYDINGS. They were writers on the paper?

Mr. BUDENZ. Repeatedly have written for the Institute of Pacific Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. One observation, Mr. Chairman: On this list, one of the names is that of one of the other men who has been publicly charged and has appeared before this committee. It seems to me that this list presents a mechanical problem that the committee is going to have to wrestle with right now because the list is of those writers whom Mr. Budenz will identify as Communists that wrote for this magazine at the time that Mr. Lattimore was the editor of the magazine; and as I say, in that list, is one of the individuals who has been publicly charged, and who has replied and appeared before our committee.

Senator LODGE. Was he one of the writers?

Mr. MORGAN. That is right; is it not, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator LODGE. May I ask, before going further—this is a list of these writers and speakers that we have been referring to in the colloquy between you and myself, that is supposed to—

Senator TYDINGS. Will you pardon me?

Senator LODGE. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Delete the name of ——— until the committee decides whether it ought to go in the record.

Senator LODGE. I want to relate this list Mr. Budenz has, to understand what the significance of it may be. These are names, are they, of men who were writers or speakers that were supposed to have taken directives from Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily directives; these are writers or speakers placed on the Pacific Affairs by Mr. Lattimore, who are Communists.

Senator LODGE. I see. Let me ask you this: To go back to the first category, have you got the names of writers and speakers that engaged in this campaign to change American opinion on China, that you were referring to?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can furnish you with such a list.

Senator LODGE. I think we ought to get that list, because it may be that in that list we will find a man who said he received a directive.

Senator TYDINGS. All right. I have no objection to getting the list.

Senator LODGE. This Mr. Harrison Foreman that you speak of, I think we ought to get him and find out.

Senator TYDINGS. Do what?

Senator LODGE. Get this Harrison Foreman whom Mr. Budenz mentioned.

Mr. BUDENZ. I can furnish you with the list of writers. I haven't them with me today; I didn't know it was pertinent.

Senator LODGE. And have the staff see if any of those men, what they say in regard to the question of whether or not they were communicated with by Mr. Lattimore, and if so, for what purpose.

Senator GREEN. Is it a list of names whom you know to be Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, now, Senator, the question now is again up—that is to say, I know some of these people personally, face to face; others—

Senator GREEN. I didn't say face to face; I say, you know them to be Communists.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have been advised officially that all these people are Communists.

Senator TYDINGS. I had no chance to question you the other day, Mr. Budenz.

I would like to ask you a few questions. How do you know that Mr. Lattimore personally employed these people to whom you refer?

Mr. BUDENZ. I only know it from the reports that came to me, that he was doing that; that is, the reports in the Political Bureau; and, the fact that in substantiation you shall find his name as editor.

Senator LODGE. In other words, you were told by what you believe to be competent authority that that was to be the case.

Mr. BUDENZ. And also supported by the printed record, in this sense that Mr. Lattimore's name, as editor, appears on the publication in which these people write, and they increasingly wrote from 1936 on.

Senator TYDINGS. But you have no concrete proof of your own that Mr. Lattimore personally employed these people.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no; no concrete proof. That is, I mean I have never seen Mr. Lattimore do it, never seen the act of him doing it.

Senator TYDINGS. But you were told that he did.

Mr. BUDENZ. I was told officially. Also, I say their names appear in Pacific Affairs and they did appear there, and reference to the publication will show that they wrote repeatedly from 1936 on.

For instance, I will give you an illustration so that you will see the point: Mr. James S. Allen, an open Communist, the Communist International representative for the Philippines, and later on foreign editor for the Daily Worker, who was well known as a Communist, wrote Reconstruction and many other Communist pamphlets and books, and his writings appeared at least four times, if I am correct, in the period that Mr. Lattimore was editor.

Senator TYDINGS. But, you don't know that Mr. Lattimore induced him to write.

Mr. BUDENZ. Only that Mr. Lattimore was editor.

Senator TYDINGS. You don't know who did induce him to write.

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not.

Senator GREEN. Do you know whether he wrote—

Senator TYDINGS. Let me finish. I had no questions at all the other day.

Senator GREEN. All right.

Senator TYDINGS. You never met Mr. Lattimore yourself?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I did not.

Senator TYDINGS. You have never been to the office of publication?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You have read all these articles yourself?

Mr. BUDENZ. Which articles?

Senator TYDINGS. The ones to which you are referring.

Mr. BUDENZ. A long time ago I glanced through them.

Senator TYDINGS. I would not say when, but you have read them all?

Mr. BUDENZ. A long time ago, yes. I wouldn't say all of them, Senator, but—

Senator TYDINGS. A great many?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is taking in too much.

Senator TYDINGS. Were there any of the articles written by any of the people you have denominated there that you did read?

Mr. BUDENZ. There may have been.

Senator TYDINGS. I believe I quote you with substantial accuracy when you said that "Jack Stachel said Lattimore was helpful" and that he advised you to "consider Lattimore as a Communist"?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I said that Stachel said to consider Lattimore as a Communist in 1944, when he was with Mr. Wallace.

Senator TYDINGS. Were they, as near as you can recollect, his precise words?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. That Lattimore was "helpful" and that he said for you to "treat Lattimore as a Communist"—

Mr. BUDENZ. Consider him—

Senator TYDINGS. "Consider Lattimore as a Communist?"

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Wait just a minute about that "helpful."

I don't remember that phrase specifically, Senator. I remember Jack Stachel said that Lattimore was helpful in the time of the Amerasia case.

Senator TYDINGS. That is what I mean.

Mr. BUDENZ. Those are two separate occasions. You see, it may have been that he used that phraseology also in 1944, but I have no present recollection of it. What I recollect in 1944, we were discussing the Wallace visit to China, which was considered very important, and that Mr. Stachel said to consider Lattimore as a Communist.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUDENZ. Now, the other reference was on another occasion. That was in 1945.

Senator TYDINGS. Now, coming back to what Stachel said to you, is it possible, in your belief, that an individual could have had a point of view so in line with the Communist point of view that the high command, knowing, reading his works, would assume it would be a good thing to treat him as a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; that is not correct.

Senator TYDINGS. What would be your belief?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was a regular formula used by Stachel to deal with people who were in the Communist movement.

Senator TYDINGS. And he said for you to consider him as a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. He used that, by the way, that phraseology on a number of occasions in regard to other people. That is, I was compelled to know, more or less, as a matter of fact not more or less, but definitely these people.

Senator TYDINGS. Now, you also said that Lattimore was designated as "XL," I think, or something pretty close to that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. As a Communist designation?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator TYDINGS. Did his signature appear opposite that designation?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh no. This is onionskin instructions coming from the Politburo.

Senator TYDINGS. So, there was nothing to identify Lattimore with the "XL" on the onionskin itself?

Mr. BUDENZ. Only the instructions given us by the Politburo.

Senator TYDINGS. In what respect do you claim that Reverend Kearney's article corroborates your accusations of Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, in the sense, as Father Kearney says that Mr. Lattimore is the person most responsible for the disaster in Asia, and he goes on to indicate Mr. Lattimore's views.

Senator TYDINGS. So that would be what Father Kearney would say—that would accentuate rather than otherwise—it would be in line with what you say.

Now, would Father Kearney have any intimate knowledge to your knowledge, that Mr. Lattimore was a Communist, that you did not have?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no, he would not have, not that I know, unless he had something. He was a missionary in the Orient, I believe. In fact, he is on his way back now. The only thing is that his analysis of Mr. Lattimore's views I thought strengthened my own declarations. That is, I did not put it forward as absolutely a mandatory thing, but confirmatory.

Senator TYDINGS. I wanted it to show on the record.

Mr. BUDENZ. Thank you.

Senator TYDINGS. You resigned from the Communist Party in 1945, I believe it was.

Mr. BUDENZ. October 1945.

Senator GREEN. Excuse me. I asked that question. He did not resign. A Communist was not allowed to resign. He was expelled.

Mr. BUDENZ. I am just using it as a general rough term—left the party.

Senator TYDINGS. Separated from the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't resign. I arranged carefully whereby I wouldn't resign. In fact, my name is on the letterhead on the date I was received in the Catholic Church of St. Patrick's. I did that so that I would not be framed. I might explain this to you, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. That is not important.

Senator GREEN. I think it is very important.

Senator TYDINGS. You may ask it on your time.

In the approximate 5 years since 1945, did you report Owen Lattimore to the FBI as a Communist, or a Communist agent?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't recall that I did. I may have, Senator, but I don't recall; but, I might say that, Senator, just in regard to my own actions there that I have not reported quite a few people because I cannot possibly do it.

Senator GREEN. You have not what?

Mr. BUDENZ. Reported quite a few. That is the reason I decided to make up this list of hundreds of names so that once and for all I can give the FBI all the names that I had.

Senator GREEN. Did you talk to a special agent of the State Department in September 1947, about communism?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't recall that.

Senator GREEN. In September 1947 did you talk to any special agent—in 1947—of the State Department?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't recall that, Senator.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you say, in that interview with this State Department agent, that you were not prepared to pass judgment upon the degree of Mr. Lattimore's association with the party, that you thought he was a sympathizer but that you were unable to recall at that time any incident which definitely indicated that he was a member of the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I do not recall that, but if I did, it was in a telephone conversation, and I am very evasive on the telephone, and with very good reason, as anyone who considers how the Communists act, can understand. I have to be very careful. In fact, even in this case I don't know whether the Senator really believes it or not, but it is a fact, when Doctor Mathews called me up on this case on the phone—

Senator TYDINGS. Who?

Mr. BUDENZ. Dr. J. B. Mathews, a well-known investigator, was in charge of the Dies investigation—

Senator McMAHON. And who was a member of the party at one time?

Mr. BUDENZ. He says he was not. He was very close to them and was placed with the responsibility of their most important Communist front, the League Against War and Fascism, and broke with them.

Senator TYDINGS. He did talk to you, then.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. What was the time, was it approximately as you recollect, about September?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no; I am referring to another, to show you how careful I am on the telephone.

Senator TYDINGS. Didn't you talk also to a special agent of the State Department in 1947?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I cannot recollect that, but I would say that I have had several telephone calls from the State Department representatives, and I have always been very evasive because on the telephone I do not give information. I was trying to show you, Senator, that even in this case, the Senator McCarthy case, I was called by Dr. J. B. Mathews, and he said to me that he had information that I knew that Lattimore was a Communist. I simply said "Whatever I have to say about Lattimore, I will only say before the committee, under subpoena."

Senator TYDINGS. Would you therefore deny that you said in 1947, to any representative of the State Department, that you could not be called at that time, you could not recall any incident which definitely would indicate that Lattimore was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I won't deny it.

Senator TYDINGS. You won't?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would not deny it or affirm it, because on the telephone—

Senator TYDINGS. I am not talking about on the telephone.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I am sure that the only time I ever talked with a representative of the State Department, except in one specific case, was on the telephone, and I did not give information on the telephone.

Senator TYDINGS. But, why would you not have said, rather than "I do not recall at this time any instance which definitely indicates that Lattimore was a member of the party," why would you not have said, if you did not want to talk on the telephone, "I do not care to discuss the matter on the telephone," or something else, other than that affirmative statement that you didn't recall any instance which definitely indicated that Lattimore was a member of the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I just used that device, if that is the case.

Senator TYDINGS. Would that put you in a position of making a statement that might not be true, or does it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily, sir. Maybe I had not had Lattimore on my mind. You must understand, Senator, in regard to cases of this character, I had been very careful. That is to say, I do not make assertions unless I check very carefully on the case, and in checking up, know exactly what the facts are.

Senator TYDINGS. But, in this case you had nothing to check up on other than your conversation with Mr. Stachel, because he was the man that had previously—

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; I may have had—

Senator TYDINGS. Excuse me, because I am directing myself particularly to the testimony that Mr. Stachel and some other people, I think it was Stachel who said "You are to consider Lattimore as a member of the party!"

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. And you were outlined about more activities there, and you were told that Lattimore was very helpful—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. You were also told that the movement was progressing very favorably and you knew Lattimore was head of the magazine.

Well, now, if you had all that information in your mind, why would you say, in September 1947, that you did not recall at that time any incident which definitely indicated that Lattimore was a member of the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't recall that statement, but if I made it, under the circumstances, I made it on the telephone, and therefore was not prepared, unless by very careful examination, which I always give, to make statements that are definite.

Senator TYDINGS. But, there is no record necessary for you to fix your—no record you could look up by research, you might say, in the case I have in mind, if Stachel told you that orally—why would you not have said, knowing this, knowing about Lattimore and knowing about the writers and knowing that Stachel had told you to consider Lattimore as a Communist, why would not you have said "I would like to talk about it with you, but privately," or "I don't care to discuss it," other than to make the affirmative statement that "I recall of no instance now that would indicate that he, Lattimore, was a member of the party"?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, in the first place, I have only given information fully to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. That has been my rule.

Secondly, I do not know people who promiscuously call me on the telephone and I have to be very careful.

Senator TYDINGS. I appreciate that, but what I am trying to get at, Mr. Budenz, and I don't want to prolong it——

Mr. BUDENZ. I understand.

Senator TYDINGS. I do not blame you for saying over the telephone, "I don't care to discuss it," or I don't blame you for saying on the telephone that, "This is something I might want to talk to you privately about"; but, instead of picking one of the things that would have protected the position you rightly wanted to protect, did you not say at that time, "I am unable to recall at this time any incident which definitely would indicate that Lattimore was a member of the party?" And to convey the impression to your own Government, after you left the Communist Party, that you had nothing in mind that would show Lattimore was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not have the time or energy to check carefully on the facts I had before me. I always do that, and I have made that reply, incidentally, more than once, along similar lines.

Senator GREEN. I have put off my engagement for a half an hour——

Senator TYDINGS. Is it your idea, Mr. Budenz——

Senator GREEN. I will take my turn.

Senator TYDINGS. Is it the idea that Mr. Budenz will come back tonight in open hearing, was that the proposition that was submitted here?

Senator McMAHON. He has not added anything new.

Mr. BUDENZ. If I might say, I don't know what Senator Green has in mind. I personally have nothing to add to my open hearing. I have said my say. That is the only thing I have.

Senator GREEN. I haven't had the list. I want to ask——

Senator TYDINGS. Well, we will try to come back this afternoon, if it will suit the committee.

I am trying to accommodate everyone.

Senator McMAHON. I have a lot of questions I want to ask Mr. Budenz, that might be interesting to Mr. Budenz.

Senator TYDINGS. I suggest we meet at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Senator LODGE. Let us get back, as soon as we get some lunch.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me pursue this one thing for five more minutes, and I will let you go.

You testified, I believe, I asked for all the places that you had testified, Mr. Budenz, just simply to get chronological count, and I am going to read them and if you find any error in them, stop me.

On April 31, 1946, you testified in closed hearing, before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

On November 23, 1946, you testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee regarding the part every Communist in the United States has as a fifth columnist.

On March 14, 1947, you testified before the House Labor Committee, on two union officials, and so forth.

On June 15, 1949, you testified again, you were a Government witness in some deportation proceedings in New York, and I—I won't take the time to read the list, but as you have said yourself, you have been called many, many times to testify, before a great many groups and bodies of public figures, from which this is taken, and this list comes on down to June 10, 1949, I think that was the last before this hearing opened up, and did you at any time say that Lattimore was one of those who was a member of the Communist Party, or any Communist cell, or anything?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; because there was no occasion to do so. I could analyze each one of the hearings and explain that. Indeed, I have always confined myself to the immediate matter at issue. For example, in one of those hearings, to give an illustration, I was asked about Harry Bridges. I knew about Harry Bridges, but I said to Representative Thomas "Since the Government of the United States, through a special commission, has exonerated Mr. Bridges, for the time being, who am I to damn him as being a Communist?"

And why was that? Because I would have been off again on a new investigation, a new hearing, and new difficulties. The thing is that there were just so many hearings that I could go to. You can see—

Senator TYDINGS. I am not critical.

Mr. BUDENZ. Am I answering?

Senator TYDINGS. I am asking the questions for the record, because somebody will say "Why didn't you ask that?"

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, I am not feeling at all that you are critical. I just want to make it as explanatory as possible, that I always confine myself to the matters at issue.

Senator TYDINGS. Well, the committee has been pretty patient.

You will remember that when Senator McCarthy appeared before us this morning, I promised that when the committee was all here, I would lay his request before you again that he be allowed to interrogate the witnesses.

Senator GREEN. Is that all you have to say?

Senator TYDINGS. But, I want a vote on it because I promised him I would give him a vote on it, and the reason before, that we haven't done it, you will remember, was because the witnesses who were accused had no right or chance to cross examine the man who was accusing him, and we thought inasmuch as that right was absent—

Senator McMAHON. I thought we had settled this.

Senator TYDINGS. I know we have, but it was brought up again, so if there is any change—

Senator McMAHON. Let him have his story.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, we will come back again at 3 o'clock, recess until 3 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 1:30 p. m., the subcommittee stood in recess until 3 p. m., that same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Senator TYDINGS. I have some things here.

Mr. Budenz says this: He has pretty well outlined what he wanted the committee to know—am I correct in that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. And, I have a lot of incidental things to ask him, but in my opinion most of them flow from his testimony, anyhow, and I have had my chance; so rather than delay the witness, who has asked me, he is pretty well pressed, and has been right generous with his time, and wants to get away, I am for a moment going to ask you to ask him the questions you want to ask him.

Senator GREEN. Before he goes on, did he or did he not put in this list?

Senator TYDINGS. Well he did not put it in, and I am not going to ask him to put it in, or to withhold it. It is up to him to do what he wants to do.

Senator McMAHON. I think we ought to have a quorum of the committee present.

Senator GREEN. I would like to know whether it is or is not in.

Mr. BUDENZ. There is a little bit of a problem here. Some of the names I am perfectly willing to give; others, I feel hesitant about.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator McMahon, have you some questions you want to ask the witness?

Senator McMAHON. I have a few.

Did you want to say something?

Mr. BUDENZ. I was going to say something, Senator.

I have turned this list over to the FBI, and unless it would seem unfair on my part, I would just like to indicate two or three names.

Senator GREEN. I think if you indicate any, you ought to indicate them all, ought you not?

Senator TYDINGS. I think we should let the witness use his own judgment.

Mr. BUDENZ. I feel, in one or two instances, I should let it rest with the FBI.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Has our counsel seen it?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Our counsel has seen it—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. As far as I am concerned, if the witness wants to say only two or three, I am satisfied.

I do not want to oppose Senator Green, but if the information is in the hands of our counsel, and he only wants to give two or three names—

Senator GREEN. Let me ask: This is made up of a list of persons whose articles have been published in the Institute of Pacific Relations magazine?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. During the time Mr. Lattimore was editor?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Well, now, have you taken pains to find out whether they published articles by these same authors before or after that period?

Mr. BUDENZ. Some were published after; yes, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Any published before?

Mr. BUDENZ. The number of these begin very strongly around June 1930, in the midst of Mr. Lattimore's editorship.

Senator GREEN. That isn't the answer to my question.

Mr. BUDENZ. I beg pardon.

Senator GREEN. Can you tell us whether there were any articles by these same authors printed before he became editor?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not to my knowledge.

Senator GREEN. Well, do you know?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I don't know exactly; but I do know that the number increased terrifically after June 1936.

Senator GREEN. How do you know the number increased terrifically, if you do not know whether they published any before or not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would just have to say that my observations have been confined to Mr. Lattimore's editorship, and immediately thereafter.

Senator GREEN. Then, for all you know, they may have been publishing them before, at the same rate they did afterward?

Mr. BUDENZ. This only introduces corroborative things that I learned; I am not trying to have it stand on its own feet.

Senator GREEN. It is not corroborative, if they contributed freely, as freely before as after he became editor.

Mr. BUDENZ. All I am submitting them for is for this committee to investigate further and learn that. I did not have the opportunity.

Senator GREEN. That may be, but I thought likely you would know about it.

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not know; no.

Senator TYDINGS. All right, Senator McMahon.

Senator McMAHON. Back on this list—in this list that you have before you you state that you have given it to the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Does it contain either past or present employees of the State Department, to your knowledge?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that is where I am somewhat handicapped. I am not fully informed of just who are in the Government, except from the names I got occasionally, you understand, from reports.

I should say that very few are. However, I mean I know a number of these people as Communists, directly, and know who they are. I should say that very few are employees of the Government.

Senator McMAHON. Have they ever been employees?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that I would not be able to tell you.

I should say the majority of them—yes, there is—Gen. Evan S. Carlson, formerly employed by the United States Government, was a Communist before he was a general.

Senator TYDINGS. Employed where, sir?

Senator McMAHON. Carlson's Raiders.

Mr. BUDENZ. Gen. Evan S. Carlson, of the Marines.

Senator TYDINGS. Was employed where?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was an employee of the United States, but he is dead now.

He asked if any one of them was ever employed by the Government.

Senator TYDINGS. I have got a bad cold in my left ear, and didn't hear you.

Mr. BUDENZ. I know he was a general. Therefore, he was a part of the governmental machinery.

Senator McMAHON. On Carlson, you know he was a Communist. Do you know him in the same sense that you know Lattimore was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. I was introduced to General Carlson.

Senator McMAHON. Before he was a general?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. While he was in the Marine Corps?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. I think he was retired at the time, for that period.

Senator McMAHON. Before he came back into the service, at the outbreak of the war?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Was he introduced to you as a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. And he accepted the introduction?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Where was that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was in New York.

Senator McMAHON. Who introduced you?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was at a meeting at Frederick Vanderbilt Field's house.

Senator McMAHON. Could you fix the year? I know it is impossible to fix maybe even the month, but perhaps you could fix the year?

Mr. BUDENZ. I could not, offhand; but, I could after some little thought on the matter. I do not think I could here today. I know that he was not known as a general then. It was at that time—

Senator McMAHON. He was a colonel for sometime.

Mr. BUDENZ. Colonel Carlson, he was retired at the time. As a matter of fact, his life, gentlemen, is written up by a Communist under order of the Communist Party, by Michael Blankford. Michael Blankford was a former writer on the Daily Worker.

Senator McMAHON. Was he an active man under the Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. General Carlson was as active, I understand, as he could be. I don't know very much about his activity, to tell you the truth, Senator, except that I know we discussed him quite extensively again, just before I left the party, when he was made head of the campaign committee on China, by the Communists, that later got a name like—I forget the name, but it is a matter of public record that he was head of that committee.

Senator McMAHON. When he was introduced in Frederick Vanderbilt Field's house, was there anybody in it, in the company, who was not a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Senator McMAHON. All were party members?

Mr. BUDENZ. So far as I know.

Senator McMAHON. How many would you think were there? Again, I know you can't say 12 or 13.

Mr. BUDENZ. There was a small group—as a matter of fact, there was Marion Bachrach—I remember it was a small group. He was passing through New York, or something like that.

Senator TYDINGS. Marion Bachrach is a man?

Senator McMAHON. No; a woman.

Mr. BUDENZ. A woman, and sister of John Abt—and four or five other people.

Senator McMAHON. What other names have you—

Mr. BUDENZ. You must understand, Mr. Field's home is right across from the Daily Worker, catercornered.

Senator McMAHON. Very convenient.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; there was some very great soirees there, for many people. I have been to many more elaborate parties than that.

Senator McMAHON. Does he serve good refreshments, and that sort of thing?

Mr. BUDENZ. During the war, he served refreshments which were in violation of the war rules. That was one thing I noted in the beginning to be critical. That was toward the end, when he had a reception for—well, I don't know whether I need to go into that on this inquiry, but for Representative Adam Clay Powell. Paul Robeson was master of ceremonies.

Senator McMAHON. Do you have any other names on the list?

I don't see, Mr. Chairman, why we should not have this list in evidence.

Senator TYDINGS. It is up to Mr. Budenz.

Senator McMAHON. I will tell you—he has given it to the FBI—

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh yes.

Senator McMAHON. You have given it to the FBI because you believe these people are members of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Now, here is this witness before us, he cannot tell us whether the people on this list are or have been members of the State Department—am I correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am perfectly glad to do it. The only thing is, gentlemen, what I am trying to do is not to have this thing brought before—I don't mean the Senators will, I want to give the list in such a fashion—

Senator TYDINGS. Would it be a satisfactory procedure for the committee—I suggest that the stenographer not take down the names which you read, and then I suggest that the list of names be sealed in the committee report, and not to be opened except upon vote of the committee. In that way we can do it and we won't have any doubt of revealing the FBI information.

Is that satisfactory?

Senator McMAHON. It is with me.

Senator TYDINGS. How about you, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. All right; that is, with the reservation, if we later think we need it in the record, we can put them in.

Senator LODGE. I have no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. All right.

Senator TYDINGS. When you get the names, don't put them in the record—is that all right, Senator Green?

Senator GREEN. All right.

Senator TYDINGS. Before the reading of this list, Mr. Budenz, I presume you made up this list out of all the hundreds and hundreds of Communists you know. You made this list in particular to bring it with you today, because you thought it had some relation to our inquiry?

Mr. BUDENZ. This was the list I took from looking through the back number of Pacific Affairs.

Senator TYDINGS. I see.

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not get this just to bring here.

Senator McMAHON. Let us follow that up.

Mr. BUDENZ. That was about all I could do between the time I was here before, look through the list of Pacific Affairs.

Senator GREEN. One other question about its nature that I would like to ask you: How did you pick out these names from the contributors to the magazine?

Mr. BUDENZ. These are the men and women who wrote the articles for the magazine while Mr. Lattimore was editor.

Senator GREEN. Not all of the articles?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not by any means.

Senator GREEN. How did you select these afterward, on what basis?

Mr. BUDENZ. That I knew them to be Communists. There may be others, and there may not.

Senator GREEN. All along a certain line, are they, these articles?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not reviewed them again, Senator. I just know the affiliations of these people.

Senator GREEN. What was the nature of the articles they wrote?

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, a slight pursuit will show, in most cases, that I am correct. It doesn't take much to discover that several of these people are Communist.

Senator GREEN. What was the nature of these articles on China—on what?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily. On the Pacific in general, the Philippines, China, the Moscow trials, other things.

Senator GREEN. The general subject of the magazine?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. As a matter of fact, they even entertained a critical article from William Henry Chamberlain, criticizing their article on the Moscow trials.

Senator GREEN. They are not necessarily Communist articles?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily. You see, Communists do not always write Communist articles. They write their articles in line with the line Kremlin is trying to put forward at that time.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you read the articles yourself?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not recently.

Senator TYDINGS. At sometime, you were familiar with the articles that each of these persons wrote?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would say very vaguely familiar.

Senator TYDINGS. In other words, you know they wrote for the magazine, and you are tendering those names—

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I know their affiliations.

Senator TYDINGS. You say they are Communists, but as far as the articles themselves are concerned, recently you have not familiarized yourself, and your recollection is vague as to what they did and did not contain, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. That would have to receive further consideration.

Senator TYDINGS. All right.

Senator McMAHON. When you read the names, would you just say after it "I know him personally," or "I do not know him"?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, I shall.

Senator TYDINGS. Put "1" for the first name; "2" for the second name, and so forth, so we will know, if we want to correlate them, how we can key it to the testimony.

Go ahead, sir.

Mr. BUDENZ. One—

Senator GREEN. Say the first name, and the figure 1, and the stenographer will use the "1."

Mr. BUDENZ. 1. (Name omitted.) She is, to my official knowledge, a Communist; but, I have not met her as such.

2. (Name omitted.) He is to my personal knowledge a Communist. I met him on one occasion myself.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He was at one time—off the record.

(There was discussion off the record.)

Mr. BUDENZ. Three—

Senator TRYBOS. Let me suggest to the committee a reconsideration of what I have just said. I think it would be better if we put the names in the record, and then carefully safeguard the record and the part we make public can be deleted, because when you say so and so was the widow of so and so, you lose the whole thread there, unless you have all the names in.

If that is agreeable to the committee, I suggest you read the names into the record, with such designation as you want to make, and we can delete it afterward, rather than wonder afterward what or who you said.

Senator LONGE. I understood in light of the vote we took before lunch, that this whole record is going to be secret, is it not?

Senator TRYBOS. I want to make that extrasecret because the FBI is working on it.

Senator McMAHON. It is secret, or is it not. When we started in here, this was agreed to be a closed meeting.

Senator TRYBOS. Suppose you start out and reiterate those on the record.

Start at the beginning.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, first will be Ella Winter, widow of Lincoln Steffens, who was known to me to be a Communist from official reports received.

Senator McMAHON. You never met her?

Mr. BUDENZ. I never met her.

No. 2, Joseph Barnes, known to me personally to be a Communist.

Senator McMAHON. You met him, and met him as a Communist.

Mr. BUDENZ. At least on one occasion.

No. 3, General Victor Yakhontoff—

Mr. MORGAN. Can you identify them further? A name such as Joseph Barnes, is such a common name.

Mr. BUDENZ. Joseph Barnes is the former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and one of our most distinguished foreign correspondents, considered so at one time. Then, he became editor of PM, as you recall.

General Victor Yakhontoff, I know him only from official reports.

Harriett Lucy Moore, I know her personally to be a member.

Senator McMAHON. Harriett—

Mr. BUDENZ. Harriett Lucy Moore, a very active person in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator McMAHON. You met her as a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Gunther Stein, I know him from official reports to be a Communist, and in a very confidential capacity.

Senator McMAHON. Have you ever met him?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir.

Haldore Hanson. I know him only from official reports, to be a member of the Communist Party.

Senator McMAHON. Haldore Hanson?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. That rather surprises me, Mr. Budenz, because he appeared before the committee, and made about as forthright a statement as I ever heard from a witness. He was never a member of any Communist-front organization of any kind or character, as far as could be made out from his background, from his activities--there wasn't a single indication. I only say this to you by way of information. This is a public hearing, and you may have seen the testimony. I wanted to say to you that the impression he made on me was excellent--fooled me completely.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He is not in the State Department?

Senator McMAHON. He is in the State Department at this minute, working on the point 4 program, and I would like, therefore, to have you pretty carefully give us your testimony on him.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I shall have to submit that to you further. That is to say, I shall have to consider it further because I just know this now as a general matter from official information received.

Senator LOXIE. Official information?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Somebody told you that he was?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not gossip around headquarters; official information. I carried his name with me.

Senator McMAHON. Who gave it to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, as I recall at the moment, Jack Stachel.

Senator McMAHON. Jack Stachel?

Mr. BUDENZ. However, I shall be glad to advise you more definitely, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. I wish you would, because he certainly seemed like a very decent young man who had a very honorable career in the service of the Associated Press, and our own country; and, I know you would not want to do him an injustice.

Mr. BUDENZ. I think I have been as responsible for acquitting people of being Communists in the loyalty tests, I think more people, than convicting them, and I have no disposition to do otherwise.

Senator McMAHON. At this time, Mr. Budenz, as far as Hanson is concerned, you can give us no definite information as to who informed you that he was?

Mr. BUDENZ. My strong impression is that it was Jack Stachel.

Senator McMAHON. You say that you are going to think about it further. Does that mean you have recourse to a diary or notes?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I have recourse to one very excellent source of information.

Senator McMAHON. Recourse—I mean.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is, the files of the Daily Worker. Now, sometimes they fail me, but in this way I have been able to recall many events from other events. For example, I don't know whether I need to take your time—

Senator McMAHON. I understand the process.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have lived in the Daily Worker, it was my life. I made every issue. Now, I shall be glad to give the committee such evidence as I have on this matter. Indeed, I ask always, on these matters, that confirmatory information be obtained.

Senator McMAHON. I take it, that as far as he is concerned—don't misunderstand me, if he is, we want to know about it—I want to know about it. Contrary to any public assertions that might be made by other people, I have no desire to shield anybody in the State Department.

Senator TYDINGS. May I interrupt to ask one question?

Senator McMAHON. All right, surely.

Senator TYDINGS. I wanted to ask you: Your information as of today, rather, your information that this man is a Communist is based on oral words, oral evidence that you received from somebody else?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Budenz, do you recollect ever having discussed Hanson with the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I did not, except quite recently.

Senator McMAHON. How recently, would you know?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I should say, I am not sure whether I did before, as a matter of fact, I discussed, even though it seems as though I have not discussed names with the Federal Bureau, I have discussed many names, but I do not think I discussed Mr. Hanson with them until very recently, I should say, in making up this list.

Senator McMAHON. Now, in discussing it with the FBI, you say "very recently."

When was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, the last week.

Senator McMAHON. And you gave them the name of Hanson this past week?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, I gave them—

Senator McMAHON. Did they ask, by the way, who in the FBI did you give it to?

Mr. BUDENZ. I gave them to the agent, McCarty, who works with—

Senator McMAHON. McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. He doesn't work with me, I mean to say he contacted me more than anybody else.

Senator McMAHON. Is he assigned to the New York office?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. I see; and, when you gave him this list, did he go down the list with you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, yes, sir; we went down the list together.

Senator McMAHON. You told him everything you know about each one?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. Well, I don't know now, you must understand, Senator, sometimes I have to meet the FBI in a terrific hurry. We meet at all times, and in a terrific hurry. I might not have gone into each one in detail.

Senator McMAHON. This is rather fresh in your recollection; it is just a week ago.

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't think I went into Mr. Hanson in any detail.

Senator McMAHON. Did you go into any detail about any one of the rest of them?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; because I will tell you—most of the names, with one or two exceptions, I had given the FBI before; not most, but some of them. We didn't have an opportunity, see, the time was limited, to go into all the details.

Senator McMAHON. How long did you spend with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I only spent about—you mean, on this matter?

Senator McMAHON. On this list.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I would say about a half an hour, maybe, at the most.

Senator McMAHON. Of the list of 21, you say you gave most to the FBI before?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, some of them now, for example, I'm not sure whether I gave Ella Winter, because they know her anyway—that is, her association with the Communist Party.

Senator McMAHON. She would not take any discussion time at all?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; we didn't discuss this list.

Mr. MORGAN. If I may say, Senator, I recognize quite a few of them myself.

Senator McMAHON. I understand, so that there would be no occasion for discussing that, either on the ground they were notorious, No. 1; or, No. 2, Mr. Budenz would say "Now, you know so and so, I have talked either to you or agent Brown or Smith about it before."

Now, that leaves three or four, namely, Hanson, and who else the other three were, and in the half hour that they were together, I wonder how much discussion there was about Hanson.

Mr. BUDENZ. The half hour was not spent in that; it was also spent in this list of 200 names which I have been compiling. We were not long on this.

Senator McMAHON. Did you discuss the 200 names?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, we discussed compiling the 200 names. As a matter of fact, what we have done, we have been discussing these 200 names some time. First of all, I am trying to get up this list of names, and then I am going to go over it very carefully, and write in how I happened to know, that is—well, I won't give an example—but the thing is I am trying to give the FBI once and for all how I know, and who I know, and where I got the information.

Senator McMAHON. That is a very commendable thing. I hope you go through with it.

When you went down this list, was there any member on there, any name on there that you did discuss with McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't think so; at the moment I was just giving him the list.

Senator McMAHON. Gave him the list?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Gave him a copy of the list?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Did he comment on the list at all?

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Senator McMAHON. He did not?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; not to my remembrance.

Senator McMAHON. That is the first time to your best recollection that Hanson's name ever passed your lips, as a member of the Communist Party, known to you by reason of being told so?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; that is the first I recall. It may be that I didn't answer before.

Senator McMAHON. You cannot now recall who told you he was, but you think it may have been Stachel?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. All right, who is No. 7?

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask a question?

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz, I realize you will have to refresh your recollection some, but could you tell us generally, during the 10-year period of your association with the party, about what time during that association, or in that association did you know Mr. Hanson as a Communist? Was it '34 to '40, or '40 to '46, or any other narrower limits that you could indicate?

Mr. BUDENZ. It was after I came back to New York.

Senator McMAHON. When was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was in '40 or '41.

Senator McMAHON. 1940 on?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I can probably get that.

Senator McMAHON. No. 7, Mr. Budenz.

Mr. BUDENZ. No. 7 is Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Senator McMAHON. We don't need time on him.

Mr. BUDENZ. The next is Lawrence K. Rossinger, who writes a number of articles for the New York Times, Lawrence K.

Senator McMAHON. Is he on your staff?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that I don't know. He writes or he reviews books for them especially on the Far East.

Senator McMAHON. Do you know him personally?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I do not.

Senator McMAHON. No. 9.

Mr. BUDENZ. Edgar Snow.

Senator McMAHON. He is also a writer?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, now with the Saturday Evening Post.

Senator McMAHON. Is he another one of these fellows, Mr. Budenz, whom you know personally?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; I do not.

Senator McMAHON. By reference?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know a great deal about him because he got in trouble with the party, wrote something wrong, and he had to amend his book on orders of the party.

Senator McMAHON. After it was in print?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. Well, that is my recollection.

Now, I may be wrong. My recollection is—

Senator McMAHON. Do you remember the title of that book?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can get it very readily. It is—I wouldn't want to be—

Senator McMAHON. He is a native of Connecticut; is he not?

Mr. BUDENZ. He may be.

Senator McMAHON. I think he comes from up around—

Mr. BUDENZ. He has had many difficulties with the party, and always straightened himself out. He may not be now. That is one reason I didn't want to mention his name.

I'll tell you why. One great one was his wife, Nym Wales, Mrs. Peggy Snow, from whom he is now divorced, and that may change the picture. Therefore, I want you to understand, gentlemen, even with this list, I am not intimating these people are Communists now.

Senator McMAHON. We understand, at least I do.

Senator GREEN. On the other hand, some of them are Communists. You say they were Communists, all of them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Or have become Communists since?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know what they have become since.

Senator GREEN. But they were Communists then.

Mr. BUDENZ. James S. Allen.

Senator McMAHON. Before you get to Allen—you said you were going to mention Mrs. Peggy Snow.

No. 10 is who?

Mr. BUDENZ. James S. Allen.

Senator McMAHON. James S. Allen?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes he is a man I mentioned several times.

Senator McMAHON. As far as you know, he has never been in the Government service or in the State Department?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh no; never.

Senator McMAHON. I take it that none of these people have, with the exception of Hanson.

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Mary V. Kleeck, with the Russell Sage Foundation.

Senator McMAHON. What?

Mr. BUDENZ. K-l-e-e-c-k.

Senator McMAHON. By reputation?

Mr. BUDENZ. Known to me personally, from many meetings. I won't say meetings—

Senator McMAHON. Seen her in meetings?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know her pretty well.

Senator McMAHON. You have conspired with her?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. She was a Communist before I was, even.

Nym Wales, N-y-m W-a-l-e-s. I only know by reputation that she is a Communist, and I also only know by reputation that this is the pen name of Mrs. Peggy Snow—I mean, by reputation. I mean, by that, by report.

Senator GREEN. When you say "report," you mean official reports, or general reports?

Mr. BUDENZ. Official reports; yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Would you say that Stuchel told you about that name?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would say—

Senator GREEN. Was that an oral report?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oral, always. Communists have nothing but oral reports, except that time when the Politburo used it to get out the recommendations on it, until the Hitler-Stalin break.

Evan Carlson.

Senator McMAHON. He is 13?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. He was introduced to you at Frederick Vanderbilt Field's house, as a party member, and at that party there was nobody else there but party members; is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, but also, Senator, in addition, I have had official reports on General Carlson for many years.

The next man is T. A. Bisson, of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator McMAHON. T. A.?

Mr. BUDENZ. B-i-s-s-o-n, known to me by official——

Senator McMAHON. Bisson?

Mr. BUDENZ. Bisson.

Known to me by official reports to be a Communist.

Senator McMAHON. Do you know him personally?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not. I don't think I know him personally. I may have met him.

The reason I have to put that in sometimes is—I shall explain that we had national-committee meetings, large national-committee meetings, where about 500 people met under assumed names, a great many of them. I have met a number of people I later recognized. I don't want to say always I have not met them.

Senator McMAHON. Did they use assumed names between themselves?

Mr. BUDENZ. They do; yes, sir.

You see, where you have 500 people together, then the danger of it coming out in an innocuous way is strong.

Senator McMAHON. Who is XV?

Mr. BUDENZ. Anna Louise Strong.

Senator McMAHON. That is a familiar name to me.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, well, she is now expelled from the Soviet Union. I don't know the reason. She is well known to me as a Communist, for many years.

Senator McMAHON. Thrown out of the party; is she?

Mr. BUDENZ. That, I don't know. There is a sort of twilight zone there.

Senator McMAHON. Has she not had some publicity?

Mr. BUDENZ. She was expelled from the Soviet Union as a spy.

Senator McMAHON. What did you think of that?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't think she was a spy, but I think she made some mistakes. You see, she disagreed with the Soviet leadership.

Senator McMAHON. Why didn't they kill her instead of expelling her?

Mr. BUDENZ. Because she is an American citizen. They have killed but that would be too open there to do that. As a matter of fact, she comes right back and has written pro-Soviet books.

Senator McMAHON. She has?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator McMAHON. Even though they tossed her out?

Mr. BUDENZ. Even though they tossed her out; yes. She is a peculiar person. I have known her; she is the daughter of the Reverend Sidney Strong, in Seattle. They used to put her on the spot in Soviet Russia, and she would weep tears and go right out and repeat Stalin's lies. What can you do with a person like that? She would break down and take recourse in tears. How can you argue with a person like that? This probably should not all be on the record, but I thought I would give you an example.

Senator McMAHON. When were incidents like this?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was before I joined the party. It was before 1935, when she was already a Communist.

Senator McMAHON. That is interesting.

Now, No. 16.

Mr. BUDENZ. Andrew Steiger.

Senator McMAHON. Do you know him personally?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; he is not known to me personally.

Senator McMAHON. Just by reputation?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think I can bring in a number of the Marxist writings, but I am not sure of that. I think you will also find he was also ghost writer for Henry Wallace. You will have to put a question by that, because that isn't any official information; that is something I heard through headquarters, and believe it is correct.

Senator McMAHON. By the way, he was never in Government service, as far as you know?

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Senator McMAHON. 17?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know; that is all I have.

Senator McMAHON. That is all you have?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. I thought you said you had 21?

Mr. BUDENZ. I thought I had 21, but I have 17. I may have a few more, but—

Senator LODGE. Will you yield, Senator McMahon?

Senator McMAHON. Yes.

Senator LODGE. How do you identify these people not in Government service—a miscellaneous list?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; this was the list of those I said wrote for the Pacific Affairs when Lattimore was editor. Mr. Allen, for example, wrote about four or five times.

Senator McMAHON. The theory is Mr. Lattimore brought this cattle in.

Senator TYDINGS. They are all writers.

Senator LODGE. You referred to this list this morning.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. You made a pretty careful research, in your own mind, since we have been talking about this thing, this matter of the Pacific Institute; is that it, this Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Did the best you could?

Mr. BUDENZ. I haven't had much time, but I have known it over the years.

Senator McMAHON. At least, prominent persons you have had occasion to look over, in the light of your testimony to us the other day, who were connected with it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Philip Jessup was a member of the board of trustees?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Dr. Jessup was working very close, on very close and friendly terms, with Frederick Vanderbilt Field, and his name came into Mr. Field's report.

Senator McMAHON. As a member of the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; not to my knowledge. I never heard him mentioned as a member of the party; I only heard him mentioned. I think I recall, above all, is a mention of the time that Mr. Field put up to the Politburo—I can't give you the exact date at the moment, but the event is very clear in my mind—he put it up to the Politburo whether he should stay in the Institute of Pacific Relations or join the American Peace Mobilization, to attack President Roosevelt.

Senator TYDINGS. You mean Field put it up—

Senator HICKENLOOPER. As to who should stay?

Mr. BUDENZ. Field.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Whether Field should stay?

Mr. BUDENZ. Remember, Field was called out of the Institute of Pacific Relations to become head of the American Peace Mobilization, which picketed the White House and attacked President Roosevelt very violently during the Hitler-Stalin Pact. They had to take Field out, because they had to find some new personality. Dr. Ward had been head of the American League for Peace and Democracy, and that thing had been just the other way around. They had a shift, so they had to get a person who could attend to it, and they decided that Frederick Vanderbilt Field would be the person. And, of course, we know what they did, picketed the White House and attacked President Roosevelt rather violently, I should say.

However, of course, when Mr. Field became director of the American Peace Mobilization, it was not known that he was going to play that role to the extent that he did. I daresay, however, Mr. Field did declare at the time—and I don't know whether this ought to be on the record or not.

Senator McMAHON. This is an executive record.

Mr. BUDENZ. All right. The thing is that, well, I am saying this in justice to Dr. Jessup. I do not know him as a Communist. I repeat, Mr. Field reported that Dr. Jessup felt that he could serve better in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Now, you must understand, I do not know whether Dr. Jessup knew fully what Mr. Field intended to do. I know that is what was given in, and the Political Bureau decided nevertheless that Mr. Field should become head of the American Peace Mobilization, which he did.

Mr. MORGAN. You used the word "better" there, which confuses me a little. Dr. Jessup could serve the Institute of Pacific Relations "better" than what?

Senator TYDINGS. Than Field could?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, no; that Field could perform a better service.

Well, I don't want to quarrel or quibble about words.

Senator TYDINGS. It was Field he was talking about, rather than Jessup?

Mr. BUDENZ. Dr. Jessup did not want Field to leave, in other words.

Now, I have no information that Dr. Jessup based that on any connection closer than their previously working together.

Senator McMAHON. I am pleased to hear you say you don't know him as a Communist.

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not.

Senator McMAHON. I have known him for some years, and I would hate to think that he had fooled me.

Mr. BUDENZ. They were very close together, but that does not mean he was a Communist.

On the other hand, I thought I should report to you this statement, because I don't know what was meant by that. That is the only thing I know about Dr. Jessup that stands out, at any rate.

Senator McMAHON. Mr. Budenz, when did you get wise to yourself, and break with the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was a long process, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. I should put it this way: When did you finally cut the thread?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well—oh, when I walked out.

Senator McMAHON. When did they know that you had gone?

Mr. BUDENZ. They knew it on October 10, the evening of October 10, 1945.

Senator McMAHON. 1945?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Right after the end of the war?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. Did you announce it to them, in a closed session?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not. I will tell you what I did. I don't want to take up your time, to show you how hard it is to get out of the Communist conspiracy; but they have the rule that you cannot leave the party. I mean, you cannot resign; you must be expelled.

I, as the president, had signed thousands of dollars of checks. I had to sign thousands of dollars of checks. The Communist Party does the biggest cash business in the world. That is, for example, suppose the Daily Worker is short of money until it gets its campaign going. It borrows from the International Workers Order, the Fur Workers Union, or anything else under Communist control.

Senator McMAHON. Always in cash?

Mr. BUDENZ. Always in cash, so if the auditor comes in they can send the cash back, $10,000 at a time. They don't make it too big—$10,000 here, and $10,000 from another source, until they get, say $100,000.

Senator McMAHON. You said you signed checks.

Mr. BUDENZ. Then, when we get the money, we return the cash back to the organization, because then we have $250,000 or $400,000 on hand.

Senator McMAHON. In other words, when it comes in from the Fur Workers Union in cash, it is deposited by you as a cash receipt?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Not indicating where it came from, except on a private record, so when the cash comes in from a drive, it is repaid?

Mr. BUDENZ. The business manager keeps that record. William Browder. William Browder is the business manager. He is permitted by the corporation, under the corporation rules of the board of directors, to draw on that under the name of William Browder, business manager, which we pay back to it on a cash basis, again. We make it, on the record, "William Browder, business manager, $10,000," or "$20,000," and I was signing the checks up to $50,000 and I feared they would accuse me of conspiracy with Browder, or something, to do away with the money. They do do those things.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you not get some of the money from Moscow handed to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. I will tell you about that in a moment, Senator.

The thing is, in order to protect myself, since I knew on October 10 I was leaving, I went to the Politburo, to Stachel, and said to him, "Am I permitted to sign these checks as president of the corporation?" He said, "Yes," because William Browder was the brother of Earl Browder, who is in disgrace at the moment.

He said, "You are permitted to do that," and they thought I was more diligent than ever.

I might say, during the last 2 weeks I was there, it may sound a little histrionic, but it is a fact: I was under terrific nervous tension while I was giving orders to the comrades. I did have a rosary in my pocket to give me a little strength, because if I had been discovered, I would have been in a terrible position.

Now, by virtue of that, I was able to escape without being castigated or attacked, or my character assassinated until later. Later the character assassinations began, very strongly trying to attack my family.

Senator GREEN. How much later?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it began—of course, they had to catch their breath, Senator, I mean.

Senator GREEN. How long did that take?

Mr. BUDENZ. About 24 to 48 hours. Then, they made an attack upon me, but first attacked me as leaving on account of money. That didn't work. Then, they attacked my past personal life very strongly, and every place I went I was attacked as a bigamist and adulterer and everything like that.

They knew what affection I had for my family, my four daughters, and they used that to attack me.

Of course, it is very ironical that that was the attack made. However, that was defeated also and the latest attack they have now, throughout the country, that meets me at meetings is: "If you did all the things you say you did, how can we trust you now?"

I find that Communists do that, and I smoke them out. I say, "I don't solicit your trust, or desire your trust. All I ask is that you look at these records and documents."

That has been my line, because I cannot ask anybody's trust.

Senator McMAHON. What documents do you show?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have one of the finest libraries on communism in the world. I have been keeping it up; that is to say, documents which show all the lines of the determination to conquer the world.

Senator McMAHON. You showed something to use the other day.

Mr. BUDENZ. That was one little sample.

There comes to this country, Senator, an amazing amount of instructions to the Communists.

First of all—

Senator McMAHON. Before you go into the instructions, Mr. Budenz—

Mr. BUDENZ. Maybe I am going on too far?

Senator TYDINGS. This is very interesting. I am glad you are doing it.

Senator McMAHON. I am, too, but before you go into that, I am interested, yes, I am glad to you did it and collected all this Communist literature. You apparently were a pretty systematic and a careful fellow, and have been by nature.

Were you ever able to get any of this onionskin stuff segregated and place it aside?

Mr. BUDENZ. You know, Senator, it is strange—I was an honest Communist when I was a Communist.

Senator McMAHON. So you tore it up?

Mr. BUDENZ. I tore it up and threw it away.

Senator McMAHON. I see.

Mr. BUDENZ. Then, I also gave it back. Later on, there was this checking, and I have regretted many times many things I didn't observe more carefully; but I had no idea, until a certain period, even when I began to have doubts—the first great doubt was when I learned of the slave labor camps in the full fashion I did. Then, as I went forward, then, of course, you don't think about that, I thought about how in the world are you going to get out of the concentration camp, to tell you the truth.

I would like to say that one thing now—there comes into this country a tremendous amount of directives to the Communists in the form of publications, in English, beautifully translated, the New Times, every week. That is the successor to the Communist International magazine. It comes in here from Moscow, very rapidly got together, and they send that into every country on the globe in the language of that country. This Cominform publication presents more agitation material, gives the slogans to bring before the people, tells what is more educational, explains the difference—

Senator TYDINGS. Through the mail, by the boatload, and is distributed, or what?

Mr. BUDENZ. It comes here, I don't know how, but it is distributed by the Four-Continent Bookstore, and others, a Soviet foreign agent, and is on the newsstands in New York and other places. I didn't inquire how it comes here. No reason why I should, and at any rate, it is easy to trace.

Senator GREEN. Who publishes it?

Mr. BUDENZ. It comes direct from Moscow.

Senator GREEN. Who publishes it, the Government or who?

Mr. BUDENZ. It has the name of being on the subject of trade-unions, from a Communist International newspaper, we were told that when the Communist International went out of existence, they couldn't have any Communist International magazine.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Let me ask—

Mr. BUDENZ. It is there in words, news, and views, and now, you take that Communist leader, he takes that and studies that and he gets the shorthand instructions from a man like Eisler and he is supposed then to be able to interpret the lines from these things he studies day and night, but he gets the spearhead.

You understand, what I used to call political shorthand, he gets it orally from Eisler.

Senator TYDINGS. At the risk of interrupting you, he didn't influence any of the rest of the United States.

I would like to ask you this question, which has nothing to do with this hearing, but I am just curious: How do the Russians contribute in money, in this country? Will you give us a sentence or two on that, and satisfy my curiosity?

Mr. BUDENZ. I cannot tell you the agencies they use. They did have some kind of corporation through the late Joseph Brodsky. He was an attorney. He is dead, unfortunately, but what they have here is this Robert William Weiner. He is an illegal alien who has been over here many years, was convicted when Browder was, but didn't serve because he had heart trouble. He doles out the cash from the conspiratorial fund.

Suppose Browder goes to Moscow? They can't put on the books of the Communists, "Earl Browder going to Moscow, illegal passport." You understand? He gets this money in Washington, thousands of dollars out of Weiner's hands. Also, they have a subdivision of this conspiratorial fund. Suppose a person is ill, or something—

Senator TYDINGS. You have answered my question. I am going to ask you another question, and ask for an answer, yes or no, and then I will quit.

Have you conferred—off the record.

(There was discussion off the record.)

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I want to ask a question about the New Times magazine that you were speaking of, or referred to.

This is a rather broad generality that I am asking you about, but if the New Times had the praise for an American citizen as having a grasp of Soviet aims and Soviet objectives and understanding of the Soviet purpose, would that at least be an indication that they considered that advice as friendly to them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, of course; it wouldn't be presumed that he was a Communist, because they sometimes praise a man like Henry Wallace, who is not a Communist.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Or Winston Churchill?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, when they praised him—they praise certain people during certain periods. They have a line and praise them.

That isn't a presumption—

Senator McMAHON. When you left the party on October 10, 1946, how long was it before you got with the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it was 6 months.

Senator McMAHON. Was it as long as that?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

I will tell you, the reason was, in part, not my own action. Of course, I will tell you, generally, you don't just get out of the Communist camp and become renewed immediately; and one of the greatest helps I received was from Father O'Donnell of Notre Dame, who agreed with me that I should have 1 year of doing nothing but reorganizing myself.

Now, the thing was that during the course of that reorganization, it may have been less than 6 months, at any rate, it was about 6 months, and then the FBI came to Notre Dame and, well—may I tell something very frankly gentlemen? I hope you won't misunderstand me.

To show you how I feared, not the FBI so much, but—I made it a condition, and I hope you won't misunderstand me—that I must have two practical Catholics in any questioning, and that was no reflection, don't misunderstand that. It was that I had to have some personal assurance in my coming out of the concentration camp—of people I could talk to, you understand. I don't know whether anybody knows how a Communist is when he comes out, how he thinks there is a Communist everywhere—you understand?

Senator TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BUDENZ. Not so much in the FBI, but he is so afraid of being trapped, that is one thing—so afraid of being trapped he don't know what he is going to be trapped about, but he is afraid; he has to admit to that.

Senator McMAHON. I happen to be a Catholic, so you can appreciate that I am not trying to trap you.

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not mean that. I wanted the other Senators to understand that there was no reflection on any other religion. That was the only way I could express it.

Senator McMAHON. I know you appreciate the fact that anyone who tells the truth welcomes all examination that they can get because obviously we are here to find the truth.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

On the other hand, you see, in the beginning—of course, as time goes on—

Senator McMAHON. You get reorganized.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have developed and reorganized; but in the beginning, I was afraid to talk to almost anyone, and that still lingers on to some extent.

Now, I did have these two men, and they gave me a grilling for 3 days. Now, I want to confess, Senator, on some points I didn't want to tell them things. I mean, I still had a lingering of wanting to keep things back.

Senator McMAHON. Where did you have those conferences?

Mr. BUDENZ. At Notre Dame.

Senator GREEN. Who were the two men? Teachers there?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; they were FBI agents. They were FBI agents and they gave me a real grilling for 3 days, and a part of the nights.

Senator GREEN. And how did they find out about you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, they knew I was at Notre Dame. I mean, they knew I was at Notre Dame—they knew that.

Senator TYDINGS. The press had it in there.

Mr. BUDENZ. The press did it, it was all over. The point is that they came out there and grilled me 3 days. I say "grilled," not unfriendly—

Senator McMAHON. A searching examination.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. At the school, 3 days, and then there was a break and you went back with them again?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, then, as they didn't have much to do with me, I should say—I mean, off and on, they would come and see me, but they didn't have much to do with me until I came back to New York; and then, I began to prepare certain cases with them.

Senator McMAHON. What month was that, that you came back to New York? You said 6 months. That would bring it roughly to March of 1946, before they were at Notre Dame.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, about that. It may have been earlier.

Senator McMAHON. February or March?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it was in—I had to settle down. I should say it was in September 1946.

Senator McMAHON. You were back in New York in September 1946?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. And then how many days did you spend with them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I can't give you the exact number of days. It is very irregular, but they used to come irregularly, particularly in the preparation of cases. That is to say, first of all, they had me analyze the whole Communist constitution. Well, I had to do a careful job on that. At any rate, we went along on it, and they were preparing a case and I spent most of the time preparing cases, although from time to time, they would show me a picture, or ask me a question.

Senator McMAHON. Perhaps, as you know, I used to be in charge of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, so I have many, many friends in the Department of Justice.

Now, we have been associated off and on for 20 years, and are very close friends, and I am very much interested in the fact, I have been following you for some time and I asked them one time how you were doing, and they said "Very well"—that they thought you were telling them every single important fact that you knew, and this is my recollection, which is very hazy, and you would have a much better recollection than I would have of it, and one fellow told me that, as I recollect it, that you spent 11 or 12 days discussing this conspiracy with them.

Is that about right?

Mr. BUDENZ. You mean—when?

Senator McMAHON. I mean, well, 3 days at Notre Dame, and when you came back to New York?

Mr. BUDENZ. For 11 or 12 days solid? Well, as a matter of fact, gentlemen, I should be on the FBI payroll some way.

On the big trial, I didn't only spend it with the FBI, but with Judge McGohey. He came every Thursday, that was my day off, he came to Fordham, and we spent nearly all day on that case.

Also, in addition to that, the whole Christmas vacation, Judge McGohey came to my house, so we would have the records there, and we worked on that.

I am trying to show you that—

Senator McMAHON. You spent literally hundreds of hours talking to these agents?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Cooperating with the Government, and giving them the very best information that you had, to combat this great conspiracy?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. That was your desire, to do that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, surely.

Senator McMAHON. Right from the start?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, sir.

Senator McMAHON. You say that it was a life and death matter to you, in your instructions at any time in carrying out the party line, and that intrigued me.

How in the world did you succeed, for so many years, in watching that line?

Mr. BUDENZ. It was a very tense situation. I used to stay almost every night and study these documents, and in addition, there was a representative of the Politburo who came every day, and we conferred on these matters.

Now, the representatives of the Politburo, like Jack Stachel, he is in touch with the Communist International representative, he brings in a new line, and therefore, I mean, it may be a variation of the line, or a change in the line and there he tells about it.

Now, Stachel is a very clever man. He wouldn't say much when a new line was coming, because sometimes these bureaucrats would come in and say: "You have to have these editorials immediately," and couldn't explain it, and you would have to go and look up problems for them, but Stachel was clever, he would come in and ask everyone of the editorial board of the Daily Worker: "Well, now, under this situation what do you think we should do?" and everyone would make a mistake, because they all interpreted it according to the old interpretation of the old line.

You understand, it isn't the old line, but perhaps it would be the interpretation which changed. Take a man like Badoglio in Italy, who was considered to be a Fascist and a viper and, although the line was to be violently against him, suddenly we get orders that he is a desirable leader, and that is in evidence of interpretation in the line.

But, Stachel would come along and ask you "What do you think about this situation?" And everybody would argue along, according to the old interpretation and all would be wrong and then he, I have never seen such ability to use your arguments against you—he then figures out how to offset your arguments, and would knock you over.

Senator McMAHON. Then tell you you were all wrong?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. Then there was a man named Milton Howard, who is still on the Daily, so prostrate is the Communist mentally—he would run his hands through his hair and say, "Why can't we be better Marxists?" He knew you couldn't tell what Moscow wanted on a thing like that.

Senator McMAHON. I am interested.

Mr. BUDENZ. The psychological problems of a Communist are amazing.

Senator McMAHON. You are developing that very nicely.

Senator GREEN. Did you say "death or life"?

Mr. BUDENZ. I meant political life. They have been in danger of life, too. Julia Stuart Poyntz was killed by the Communists—she was, I discovered that. You see, in my zeal to defend the Communists I discovered that they really had killed her. I wanted to defend the Communists and they wouldn't let me. The thing is that she was killed here in New York by the Communists, but she was about to close out, and they caught her before she got away, and her own husband, as I understand it—I wouldn't swear to it—but her own husband betrayed her and called her up to meet him.

Senator TYDINGS. He was a Communist, too; is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. She was in the underground.

Senator GREEN. Do you know of any case—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is Julia Stuart Poyntz, P-o-y-n-t-z, an American school teacher and a very active open Communist leader, out in the open.

Now, another thing they do: they buy out people to keep them from testifying. I know that Harry C. Wycks, editor of the Daily Worker, was on the payroll of the Communist Party. This was officially told to me by Weiner—this is secret—he was on the payroll of the party to keep them from the Dies committee, at the time he was attacking the party, he, Harry Wycks: The thing is, the reason I know it, that we had difficulty with that Chicago Communist paper out there financially, and I was always urging for more and more money, and Weiner said, "We have so many calls upon our funds from that so-and-so Wycks; I have to give him so much money every month to keep him from the Dies committee."

Senator McMAHON. Tell me, when you were in these conversations with the agents, I presume that their inquiry and their main interest was the way that the party was cooperating in developing the world Communist line. I suppose that was one of their main—

Mr. BUDENZ. That was of interest because they were building up that case, I believe.

Senator McMAHON. Against 11 Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. That started a long time before.

Senator McMAHON. I suppose, too, that if they were not they should have been very interested in who we had in the Government service, who were off line, and were Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I suppose they were, although that question I didn't discuss the Government people with the FBI, and I left them to the end.

Senator McMAHON. Were they content to do that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I don't know whether they were or not.

Senator McMAHON. I mean, the loyalty program, you see—

Mr. BUDENZ. They asked me about a number of people specifically. That is to say, I have said that a number of people came to me, and I think that I have been responsible, insofar as my information is concerned, in having people exempt, more than or as much as I have called them Communists, because of facts.

Senator McMAHON. You have cooperated in the loyalty program then, since it started in 1947?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes.

Senator McMAHON. Right from the start?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator McMAHON. Given the best that you had in you?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was spasmodic, of course. There were other things that came in, these cases came in between.

Senator McMAHON. I recognize that, but of course it is all one huge conspiracy, and these fellows that were contacting you, McCarthy was one, do you want to give us the other names?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well—

Senator McMAHON. Was one Pat Cohen?

Mr. BUDENZ. Pat Cohen, yes.

Senator McMAHON. I have known him for many years.

Mr. BUDENZ. There had been also, Guard, but he is only irregularly.

Senator McMAHON. Pat has probably been your closest—

Mr. BUDENZ. Pat Cohen gave me my initial bath, so to speak.

Senator McMAHON. Quite a fellow.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; a very fine man. And, McCarthy has been the man in touch with me most of the time, although from time to time other agents have accompanied him.

Senator McMAHON. I see.

Mr. BUDENZ. Irregular agents.

Senator McMAHON. Well now, those 11 that have been convicted, has that affected things a good deal, do you think?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I think it has affected public opinion, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. You think it has affected the operations of the party any—weakened it?

Mr. BUDENZ. To a degree. I mean, as yet—if they are convicted—

Senator McMAHON. You mean if it is upheld?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

We must remember that the Communist counts his apparatus above all, and if he can maintain an apparatus, he is content; he knows he is going to be under attack. Now, the thing is that if they are convicted, that will certainly be a blow to their apparatus.

Senator McMAHON. I should think so.

Mr. BUDENZ. No doubt about it.

Senator McMAHON. Tell me, as far as you know, the FBI seems to be running down all the leads that you gave them, do they not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes.

Senator McMAHON. Pretty strenuously and vigorously?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. Of course, I will tell you, sometimes Senator I must confess this: You must not think this is laches, or anything, but I sometimes confine myself to answering questions. That is to say—

Senator McMAHON. It gets pretty tiresome.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it gets tiresome and it gets well—it isn't only tiresome, but for instance in the Harry Bridges case, I begged not to go on the stand. I think you will find that I had the evidence, and they had all the evidence they needed against him, but I begged not to, I am not making a plea there—

Senator McMAHON. That is understandable.

Mr. BUDENZ. So that once in a while, I do not. It isn't that I don't want to serve the Government, but once in a while I do not give to the FBI, or take the initiative in any way, and remain sort of passive and let them ask the questions.

Senator McMAHON. I suppose that you must have been able to give them hundreds of names in this conspiracy and I think it is a wonderful thing.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I don't know how many hundreds. The fact of the matter is, I think I have given quite a few, but I was not content with what I had given them. I felt that I wasn't covering the field well enough, that is why I began this other list. I think, though, that I have given them a lot of names.

Senator McMAHON. In this other list, it will include, or will it, any names that you have heretofore given them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; there are duplications in there, but I want to make a whole complete clean sweep.

Senator McMAHON. Do you think that this Institute of Pacific Affairs—

Mr. BUDENZ. Relations.

Senator McMAHON. The Institute of Pacific Relations was a potent force in molding opinion?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think so. I will tell you why: First of all, it had this aura of the YMCA back of it. Secondly, it was a splendid agency for penetrating Washington.

Now, you see I have heard Field's report, which has not been detailed, on Washington activities, that he was active down here. I know, for several reasons. One time J. Peters came to me, and that is the name—I don't foolishly call Field a Soviet agent, espionage agent—J. Peters came to me and asked for a list of names who were in the Washington cell here, not like Pressman or that crowd, or not in the Field group, but who were separate and fresh, and he mentioned Field as operating. I know from Field's report, although he was very cautious of that, I mean in the Politburo, Field did not get up and make a report on Communist activities.

Senator McMAHON.—I don't happen to agree with what you said the other day was the Communist theory that whoever gets China gets the world. I think that is a mistaken impression.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator McMAHON. But, I could rebut in my own mind——

Mr. BUDENZ. I was only reporting.

Senator McMAHON. I was just saying, it is not important, but I don't think that is right. However, that is neither here nor there. They believe, the Soviet believes, and hence you, as a good Communist, believe that whoever won the east won the world; that is true?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. This Institute of Pacific Relations, in your opinion, was the spearhead of the Communist propaganda movement in this country?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it was going—yes it was, in part, not the whole thing, but it was a big part.

Senator McMAHON. I understand.

Mr. BUDENZ. Of course they also relied on Harry Bridges. He was to penetrate Hawaii.

Senator McMAHON. He was an individual.

Mr. BUDENZ. He was completely under control.

Senator McMAHON. I am talking in terms of a publication, that was a principal publication—what was it?

Mr. BUDENZ. I called the organization——

Senator McMAHON. The principal organization which had a publication.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Then, in your opinion, that had tremendous influence in the most vital field of operation, according to the Soviet Union, and this fellow Lattimore was the editor of that publication for how many years?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think seven.

Senator McMAHON. Seven years?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator McMAHON. You know, that is why I can't figure out how you could have spent hundreds of hours with the FBI agents and never mention his name.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the reason is, because that matter of the Institute of Pacific Relations, while it came up, did not come up in a very definite or vivid way. We had other things we were busy about, you must understand.

Senator McMAHON. You can see my puzzlement, can you not?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can see your puzzlement; but nevertheless, I can show you other puzzlements that might also puzzle you if we had time, other people that I have not dwelt upon with the FBI.

Senator McMAHON. I see.

Mr. BUDENZ. You see, take for example another thing, Senator: You understand also, a man who is an ex-Communist, he just simply also respects a certain amount of power, too. He doesn't rush out and reveal every one. I had the greatest hesitancy in revealing that list today, even in executive session, not that I mean to say it will be revealed. The point of the matter is that to clash with certain individuals and forces is not desirable. I don't mean to say you are afraid, or anything like that, but for you to rush out to do it is not a desirable thing. If you are approached and examined and questioned—here is what happened, the first thing was the cases. You see, I have many other things to do besides this. I teach 14 hours a week.

Senator GREEN. How often?

Mr. BUDENZ. Fourteen hours a week which is considered more than the ordinary burden; and then, in addition to that, I was confronted immediately with practical problems, confronted with a number of deportation cases, many more than I even served in, and in order to get the cases up, you have to have the greatest care. I felt that Eisler and Peters were very important. It was my opinion that the strategy should be first to get those people who were obviously Communist agents, that is what I thought.

Senator McMAHON. Obviously Communist agents?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. And then the ones suspected of being Communist agents?

Mr. BUDENZ. Those whom you could prove were Communist agents, for this reason—that you had to consult their opinion, and consult the facts of it during recent years, Senator.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator McMAHON. Let me ask you this question: Do you know of anybody in the State Department now, other than the ones whom you have named, other than the one you have named, Hanson, to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, might I ask the privilege of presenting to this committee such names as I have in the Government, during the next 2 weeks?

Senator McMAHON. Such names as you have?

Mr. BUDENZ. In the Government.

Senator McMAHON. People in the Government?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, including the State Department.

Senator McMAHON. Well, yes; are there some?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to do it carefully. I believe I shall present some.

Senator McMAHON. If they do exist, we certainly want them.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to do it very carefully, though, and with an explanation of how I know.

Senator McMAHON. Will they be names of people whom you have given to the FBI?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think most of them are; yes. I mean, I can't always remember.

Senator McMAHON. What is the decision of the committee with respect to proceeding?

Senator GREEN. I think we can excuse him while we are in executive committee.

Senator TYDINGS. I think this is more important than answering a little criticism down on the floor.

Senator McMAHON. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator McMAHON. Can you give us, for our record, and this may be a repetition of the questions we asked the other day—when was Lattimore discussed by you with the FBI? Do you have a record of the date?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not.

Senator McMAHON. Was it in the past week?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; it was. I said I thought, Senator—it is approximately a couple of days after—

Senator TYDINGS. You said 3 or 4 days of the following week, something of that sort.

Mr. BUDENZ. A couple of days after.

Senator TYDINGS. Yes. But you said distinctly that you had talked to them about Lattimore—until after we had been down there.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator McMAHON. And you gave Lattimore to the FBI, everybody you knew, of course.

Senator TYDINGS. We are all being criticized as to what happened this morning.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator McMAHON. Tell me, is it a systematic business or in part, or was it, to start whispering campaigns about people?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I don't know.

Senator McMAHON. It seems to me I recollect either in some article that you wrote, or maybe it wasn't your article, but that is—

Mr. BUDENZ. They start character assassination upon people who attack them, yes.

Senator McMAHON. Frequently they will start a rumor that you are a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not to my knowledge.

Senator McMAHON. No? You never knew that to be done?

Mr. BUDENZ. No. That would confuse their own ranks.

Senator McMAHON. I was under the impression, I read somewhere that one of the favorite techniques was to get somebody and say "Now, he is attacking us, but really he is one of us."

Mr. BUDENZ. I never heard of that.

Senator McMAHON. It is not true?

Mr. BUDENZ. It would cause too much confusion in their own ranks.

Senator McMAHON. If you haven't heard it, they don't?

Mr. BUDENZ. They attack you on character assassination, they accuse you of every crime under the sun, sometimes, when your acts injure them.

Senator McMAHON. Frequently, of course, as you pointed out yesterday, any member of this committee might have some public question and would coincide for the moment with the views that they have.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; that is right.

Senator McMAHON. I remember one instance in my public career when I felt very strongly about something, and was astounded to find that one of the arguments used against me was that the Daily Worker was in favor of it. I had evolved that belief before then.

Mr. BUDENZ. I think that is not a good argument. That would not be a good argument in itself.

Senator McMAHON. Not a good argument to prove McMahon is a Communist sympathizer?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; it would not be. I am not discussing you personally, I mean against anyone.

Senator McMAHON. I mean, I was just using that as an example.

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, the Daily Worker, or—the Communists naturally hang together on things in order to penetrate. That is their means of infiltration.

Senator McMAHON. I was thinking, therefore, in the light of that, and the experience I had myself, that it was likewise very dangerous to conclude that a fellow was of the party or in the party, if either line happened to coincide.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the only thing is—no, that isn't it.

You don't do it by that. You have to have other evidence, but if someone keeps coinciding, or it does happen that they don't coincide, there is a reason for it. Then, of course, you have a different situation. That is to say, we do know that Communists exist. We do know that they are concealed—

Senator McMAHON. Do you think that, or do you think—this is a question I would like to ask you: Do you consider, as many people do, one of the prime tests of a person's adherence, or nonadherence to the Communist line to be whether or not that person changed overnight, as the Daily Worker had to on the famous night when Russia was invaded?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is, in the case of most people. However, there are exceptions. You will find in the record of Harry Bridges, that that is not the case. They had to persuade him by almost strong-arm methods, I don't mean to say literally, to change; and, there have been many hesitations. As a matter of fact, as I mentioned in my testimony, the Daily Worker has been compelled to criticize some of its own members from time to time to bring them into line, but my answer there is, that is correct.

Senator McMAHON. And you had to do this flip-flop yourself?

Mr. BUDENZ. Any open Communist would have to.

Senator McMAHON. You had to do that flip-flop in June of 1941?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very decidedly; yes.

Senator McMAHON. That must have been a night that will live in your memory.

Mr. BUDENZ. I had to do a couple of flip-flops. I had to do one where we had the Hitler-Stalin pact.

Senator McMAHON. And, they reversed on it, and flopped both ways?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. To me, the second was not nearly as difficult as the first.

Senator McMAHON. I was quite impressed by Lattimore's statement, and I asked him, I was the one that asked him, how he acted at the invasion of Russia, and his answer was that he had been on the side of aiding the Allies, and that, as I recollect his answer—now, I will have to look it up—and that of course he had no position to change in June of 1941. That was one of the strong points in his case, to me.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would have to examine that. In fact, I do want the privilege of examining some of those facts and presenting them to the committee in written form, as I said, for this reason: I believe, although you will find a number of other men who are under Communist discipline that did the same thing, they had special permission.

Senator McMAHON. Special dispensation?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator McMAHON. Tell me, you know Lattimore was adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, did you know that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; I knew that.

Senator McMAHON. During that period when he was adviser to him, was there ever any indication to you, through reports or any other way, that he was doubling Chiang?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I can't remember that distinctly, Senator.

Senator McMAHON. You don't remember that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not offhand, now.

Senator McMAHON. You know, he testified that he of course advised Chiang, and supported him to the best of his ability when he was sent out there as an adviser. That was, of course, after he had been made editor of Pacific Affairs, of the Institute of Pacific Affairs.

Mr. BUDENZ. Of course there are gaps in some of my information because I was not present through all the Politburo meetings.

Senator McMAHON. You were not present at all of them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no. I came up there when I was called up, or when some circumstances compelled me to go. However, I was there frequently.

Senator McMAHON. Now, I would like to ask you—and I am about through, I think you will be glad to know—

Mr. BUDENZ. I only hope to get to Fordham tomorrow. That is the only thing I hope. That is the thing I have to fulfill.

Senator McMAHON. As I understand, Senator Tydings read off a long list of congressional hearings that you have been to, and talked about this thing, and this is the latest of them, and of course we have developed in some way your fine relationship with the FBI, and your effort to cooperate with them.

What other investigators have you talked with—have you talked with the Department of Commerce at all?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir. I talked with the Department of State on the Marzani case.

Senator McMAHON. That was the case tried here, Carl Marzani?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. He swore falsely. However, I could not help him on that case. That is the only time, to my recollection, that the State Department representative ever came to see me physically, face to face.

Senator McMAHON. You remember where that took place?

Mr. BUDENZ. At Fordham.

Senator McMAHON. At Fordham?

Mr. BUDENZ. This man, Lennox, he came to Fordham and he may have seen me once or twice. I think that is the only place he came, out there.

Senator McMAHON. He saw you more than once there?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. That was the only case that I developed anything with them and told them I couldn't, after checking it over, help them.

Senator McMAHON. Because what you had was hearsay?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew him as Wales, and I didn't know him as Marzani, and it was necessary to know him as Marzani too.

Senator McMAHON. I know the rest of the members of the committee will be glad that I have satisfied a good deal of my curiosity, and will now cease and desist.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have some questions, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to ask.

I shall not insist, one way or another, but I would like to ask about some names.

Do you know of a man, officially—Albert Rhys Williams?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do. I am surprised that you asked me, but I know him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know anything about whether he is a Communist or not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, he is a Communist of long standing.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know that personally, or by official report?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have known him for many years. Of course I have not seen him recently, but I have known him for years; even before I was in the Communist Party, I knew he was one.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. So, you know he is a Communist.

Mr. BUDENZ. Right.

Senator McMAHON. Who is that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Albert Rhys Williams.

Senator McMAHON. What does he do?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think he was a former minister, or educator for the—I am not quite sure, something along that line, and then he became a Soviet propagandist. He has written. He always claimed to be a liberal and not a Communist, but I know him to be a Communist. He was a great friend of Robert W. Dunn.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you know anything about Donald Hiss? Would you like to comment on that?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would not like to comment on that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. That means that you would not like to comment at this time on it.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Now, these three names, would you like to comment on whatever personal knowledge, official knowledge, you may have on John Davies, of the State Department?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know nothing about him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I see.

Senator McMahon mentioned three names, three other names. I mention here Ruby Parsons and John Carter Vincent, who is now Minister to Switzerland.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would prefer not to discuss those at the moment, until I can file the list with the committee. That will permit—I feel this is quite a responsible obligation—without being more careful in my statements.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I shall not press—

Mr. BUDENZ. I will say, in reference to Albert Rhys Williams, I don't know what he is today, whether he is a Communist or not. I know he was a Communist up to the last minute I heard of him.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you familiar with Henry Wallace's book that he wrote and published in 1946 about his trip to Siberia, and up in there?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have read his book, but I could not discuss it at the moment. I would have to read it over.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Then, you have no comment at the moment as to whether the Communists consider that to be a Communist—

Mr. BUDENZ. That was what you might call—Wallace was just surrounded by Communist influence there, in the writing of that book, and also, his policies——

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Are you aware of the fact that Henry Wallace, in writing that book, gives credit to Owen Lattimore and to John Rhys Williams as his——

Mr. BUDENZ. Albert Rhys Williams.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Albert Rhys Williams as his collaborators in the writing of that book?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am aware of that.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Chairman, if you are anxious to leave——

Senator TYDINGS. Go ahead, I will remain.

Mr. BUDENZ. While the Senators wait, I don't know whether this is an impertinent observation or not, but would it be agreeable if I were to furnish anything I know, outside of Mr. Lattimore, what I could on the Amerasia case to Mr. Morgan?

Senator TYDINGS. It would, and let me say this to you, Mr. Budenz: Obviously, as you already know, this is primarily directed to the State Department employees, past and present.

Mr. BUDENZ. I understand.

Senator TYDINGS. Anything that touches on that would be pertinent. If it does not touch on that, so far as I am concerned, I would like for you to turn it over to the F. B. I., because we do not have the facilities to go into things outside of the scope of our investigation.

Mr. BUDENZ. Very well.

Senator GREEN. On this list, some of those who are on that list were in no departments——

Senator TYDINGS. If you will wait——

Mr. BUDENZ. People I would know of, in Government departments.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. May I complete my record?

Mr. Budenz, I have here a copy of a magazine that is called The Reporter of April 25, 1950. It has pictures of people who have left the Communist Party. Your picture is up here, and there is a man there alleged to be Arthur Koestler; also the name and picture of a man alleged to be Stephen Spender; the name and picture of Ignazio Silone; also, a woman named Ruth Fischer——

Mr. BUDENZ. That is Eisler's sister—Gerhart's.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Also a man Traicho Kostov; also a man named Granville Hicks; also a man Wladyslaw Gomulka; and a man by the name of Laszlo Rajik.

Do you know all those people?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know some of them—I don't know all.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I will show you the pictures. The only thing that I was going to ask you——

Mr. BUDENZ. The only one I know personally, of those, are Ruth Fischer, whom I met after she left the Party, and Granville Hicks. I don't know anyone else.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Do you have any reason to believe, any sound reason to believe, that any of those people may not have been sincere in leaving the party, or that they may be back, actually, in the party, but openly——

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no. The point of the matter is that the people that leave the party and attack it in this wise, openly, are anti-Communists. You can count on that. The party will take care of that, and the person who is suspect, however, when they leave the party, are the ones who remain silent and quiet in regard to the party.

I understand. See what I mean, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is not due to the fact that they leave the party to become agents of some kind, but after they leave, you see this thing I talked about, about being bribed, about being intimidated or something like that—now, the ex-Communist, such as Silone, Koestler, Ruth Fischer, and myself, as far as we are concerned, are hated more by the Communist Party than anything else. Their press is full of vituperation of us and use every opportunity for injury. They use every device and that is the reason you have to be so cautious, but an ex-Communist who remains silent is a problem.

I will give you an example.

Off the record.

[Discussion off the record.]

Senator GREEN. Mr. Budenz, just as you have told us already, there are certain people in the party who make believe they are non-Communists, so are there not people that are outside that make believe they are Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; no.

You see, those people—look, Senator—those people who would do a thing like that, especially if they were to go and attack the party, month after month, and in trial at the trial—

Senator GREEN. That seems rather absurd.

Mr. BUDENZ. That doesn't happen. That is to say, a man like Koestler, for example—

Senator GREEN. But, there are certain people in the party that make believe they are not; that is true?

Mr. BUDENZ. Surely. That is different. That is to deceive the outside; but, you would have utter confusion within the Communist army, if you try the other thing. In addition, see, one thing, Senator, that they do, they are always watching for agents of the Government.

Senator GREEN. That would be one way to put people off, make believe you are opposed to a thing when you are in favor of it?

Mr. BUDENZ. You would not say you are a Communist, I am sure, and—

Senator GREEN. You don't know of any such case?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; no. That is unheard of, because that would create utter confusion and would destroy the party, itself, eventually.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have nothing else.

Senator GREEN. You have not told us, it would be very illuminating, in view of all you have told us, if you told us why you originally joined the party.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I would be glad to tell you that, Senator, and why I left. Of course it is a long story, and linked up with my religion. Briefly, it is a sort of personal story.

Senator GREEN. It must be an interesting story.

Mr. BUDENZ. The thing is, I was a great labor—I don't mean "great," I mean intense, and intent labor worker when I was young, and was also very strongly opposed to discrimination against the Negro people and a number of other things, and thought these reforms were not being cured fast enough. In fact, I took a trip out to Leeds, S. Dak., to help the fight of Bishop Bush, a Catholic. The bishop was against a 7-day week. That was a long time ago. I was about 18 or 19 years old, and I thought he didn't get proper support. I got angry, and in addition—that is what helps to make Communists, thoughtlessness, and impatience, and I felt that he wasn't getting the proper support and that made me criticize the Catholic Church of which I was a member. I left the church.

I did not become a Communist; I went on fighting for labor. I organized strikes. The fact is that I was arrested 21 times in the injunctions, the old days when that injunction was such a problem. I used to get sent in for the A. F. of L. union. Time went on, and I got more and more impatient, thinking that things were not remedied, and I became a Communist.

Senator GREEN. Did you become a Communist at once, or gradually?

Mr. BUDENZ. I fought the Communists; I opposed them. I opposed them very strongly when I was working for the A. F. of L.; and then I gradually, especially in 1935, came around to a certain extent. I will say this, though: I don't want to make it public, because it just looks like an excuse, but to a certain extent I was taken in. That is, that although I knew that Stalin ruled the organization, when they said in 1935, at the People's Front Congress, that they were going to cooperate with a democratic organization and democratic nations, I thought then that communism was becoming democratic on its part, and that it would merge, you understand, into a democratic Communist development.

Therefore, after People's Front Congress was when I joined, after 1935; but of course I soon found, when I joined the Communist Party, right up on the ninth floor here was Eisler.

Senator GREEN. In New York, you joined them?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right. I became part of the Daily Worker, right away, because they knew me.

Senator GREEN. What do they do or what did they do to test you, to be sure you could stick it out, and that you'd be loyal to them?

Mr. BUDENZ. First of all, they knew me, or had known of me for a number of years in a neighborhood movement; knew my views on how I was opposed to them, and then worked with them in the united front, and so forth; and, secondly, they wanted to use me, as they frankly told me later, because at that time they were trying to weave into the CIO union, and I had been on friendly terms with many of the men who helped form the CIO, like Tom Kennedy of the Miners and, well, John Brophy, and a number of those men who knew me from years back. So, they used me in a sort of front. Jack Stachel told me that. That is why they put me on the central committee so fast.

However, I found Eisler on the top floor, and Peters; and there was Ferruccio Marini, whose real name was Fred Brown—they were running the party. Browder was a stuffed shirt, just a front. That is the rule of the Kremlin. The man running the party in every country is never from that country. An American can run the Philippine or Chinese Party.

Senator GREEN. When you are initiated or whatever you call it, you have to take an oath?

Mr. BUDENZ. You take an oath to Stalin; you pledge to Stalin.

Senator GREEN. Did you abjure your country at that time?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; you don't do it that way. You just simply take a pledge of allegiance to Stalin.

I introduced that in the Communist trials. It is in print.

Senator GREEN. I don't have it. I am not familiar with the trials, as you found out the other day.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is all right. The thing is, I introduced this in the trial, and here is the interesting thing about that, Senator: There is a thing that people would say, "Why didn't he bring that forward a long time ago?" I only gave the FBI knowledge of that oath, although it was very clear to me—I only gave Mr. McGohery knowledge of it on the morning I introduced it.

Senator GREEN. Do you have a copy of the oath?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know whether I have or not.

Senator GREEN. Can you remember it?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. He repeated it in the record; did you not?

Mr. BUDENZ. Only part, the concluding part. It is a little bit long.

Senator GREEN. Will you put it in the record?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is to Stalin, "The leader and the teacher and guide of the oppressed and proletariat of the world."

That is the lead. You are supposed to read that. They don't make you swear to it, because they don't believe in God, you understand.

Senator GREEN. What do you do; promise it?

Mr. BUDENZ. You pledge, as a Communist.

Senator GREEN. They do not believe in a pledge; do they?

Mr. BUDENZ. You understand that it means punishment of some kind. They don't go into all that.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask a question?

Senator GREEN. I haven't finished yet.

I am interested in following this up.

Mr. MORGAN. Sorry.

Senator GREEN. Do they have a ceremony at which you are initiated?

Mr. BUDENZ. They don't, for one who has been——

Senator GREEN. In your case, what was it?

Mr. BUDENZ. If you have been in some leading position, some place, they don't have a ceremony.

Senator GREEN. What do they do?

Mr. BUDENZ. They have you read that declaration, and you just agree to subscribe to it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I think I will go on the floor, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Did you subscribe to it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. What "subscribe" means——

Mr. BUDENZ. They compel you, Senator, in addition to that, to make a public statement, but that is separate.

Senator GREEN. But, when you say "subscribe," that word "subscribe" means that you underwrite or write under; that is what it is.

Mr. BUDENZ. I understand.

Senator GREEN. Did you write your name?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; but what they do then is make you make a public statement, and I made a public statement, not exactly in the line of the oath, because it is sort of clumsy.

Senator GREEN. Does that appear in the Daily Worker?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes; on October 2, 1935.

Senator GREEN. That appeared—your statement?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. Since then, you were a loyal follower up until when?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, see, when the slave-labor camps—many things bothered me, but the slave-labor camp matter in 1943 was very, very hard for me to take, and I learned that this slave-labor camp situation extended over so many areas, and in the Soviet Union, and I began to sort of reorganize myself and consider—what is this, anyway?

Then, from that point on, I began to be more and more critical. Of course, I had a number of problems in how to get out of the party. It was in January 1945 that my wife and I decided to return to the Catholic Church. She was not a Catholic.

Then, we decided to write to Monsignor Sheehan, because he had been our severest critic. He had written a pamphlet against me, and we decided that a show of our sincerity would be to go to him, because, after all, you go to a man that just lambasted you, and it would be a sign of your sincerity.

We had to wait for my vacation, and I wrote Monsignor and he got in touch with me, and then that happened.

Senator GREEN. What then? Did you have any ceremony when you went out? Do they pass a vote expelling you?

Mr. BUDENZ. No. I went out—you understand—

Senator GREEN. You were expelled, you say?

Mr. BUDENZ. I went out without their knowledge.

Senator GREEN. But you said they expelled you.

Mr. BUDENZ. They do expel you.

Senator GREEN. What form does that take, that expulsion?

Mr. BUDENZ. It took this form, where I had left them like that. I had expelled myself from them. They took a form of attacking me.

Senator GREEN. Didn't this take some formal recognition? Didn't they formally recognize the fact that you were no longer a Communist? What did they do? They don't give you a certificate? They must pass a vote, or make a statement in the Daily Worker.

Mr. BUDENZ. The statement is made officially by the Politburo.

Senator GREEN. In the Daily Worker?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. What date was that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Two days after I left.

Senator GREEN. Could you put copies of both of those in the record?

Mr. BUDENZ. By all means. I don't want—

Senator GREEN. You said you had it.

Mr. BUDENZ. The oath to Stalin. I will be glad to, and the second one—

Senator GREEN. Yes?

Mr. BUDENZ. I will dig them up.

Senator GREEN. We would like to know what it says.

Mr. BUDENZ. All right.

Senator GREEN. And now, that pledge of allegiance to Stalin is inconsistent with a man being a citizen of any other country than Russia; is it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. It certainly is. However, you must understand when you read it that it puts it in the form of "Stalin, leader and teacher of the world," and doesn't say a word about conquest, but that is the understanding you get as time goes on.

Senator GREEN. Do you think you are, after that, a loyal citizen—

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the Communist knows that he is now under the control of Moscow, if he knows anything.

Senator GREEN. It is not consistent.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I must leave, if you will excuse me, to go down to the floor.

Senator GREEN. I will remain.

Now, I have one or two other questions that I want to ask you on a difficult subject. I don't know whether we ought to go into it. Perhaps you would rather have them here than tonight.

Were you coming back tonight?

Let me ask you now. I don't care about going down tonight and listening to that—

Mr. BUDENZ. I will be glad to answer them.

Senator GREEN. I think these are all the names that were mentioned at the previous hearing when you appeared.

Remember, I asked you about Mr. Kohlberg?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. I would like you to refresh your recollection about that. It seems to me you rather minimized your association with him.

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't intend to minimize it. I know Mr. Kohlberg, but the thing is, Senator, I didn't want to give the impression that Mr. Kohlberg had any influence on my thinking or actions.

Senator GREEN. I am not saying he had the influence. Perhaps you had influence on his.

Mr. BUDENZ. I doubt it.

Senator GREEN. I don't care. I want to know your association with him, how often you saw him, and for how long?

Mr. BUDENZ. I see him irregularly, from time to time. I will tell you, here is the thing: There are several things that make me see him, or made me see him—one was the fact that he had helped George Hewitt, an ex-Communist, a Negro that had had a very difficult time, and who is now paralyzed; and, several other things like that caused me to know him, but I have been—

Senator GREEN. How many years have you known him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, as well as I could place it, it was at the time he was making this contest in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator GREEN. I don't remember what year that was.

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it isn't very long ago.

Senator GREEN. About 2 years ago?

Mr. BUDENZ. Just about that. It may be—no longer, certainly. Well, I wouldn't say definitely; at any rate, it isn't long.

Senator GREEN. How recently have you seen him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I saw him last week.

Senator GREEN. What day?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I don't remember the date, exactly. I saw him very hurriedly last week. In fact, on a couple of occasions I saw him very hurriedly.

Senator GREEN. Where did you see him in New York?

Mr. BUDENZ. At my house.

Senator GREEN. Is your house in New York?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. You think you saw him two different days?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Was Morris there?

Mr. BUDENZ. I should say—no.

Senator GREEN. You should know—last week.

Mr. BUDENZ. I will tell you. Here is the situation: There has been coming and going. At any rate, the point is, the point of the matter, Senator, is that I had not seen Mr. Kohlberg, prior to these 2 or 3 days, for weeks.

Senator GREEN. You had seen him several weeks before?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it must have been a month, a whole month, at least.

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. Maybe longer, that I had not seen him.

Senator GREEN. Before that, you had seen him several times?

Mr. BUDENZ. On and off.

Senator GREEN. A week or two apart?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it may be.

Senator GREEN. Now, the 2 days last week when you saw him—

Mr. BUDENZ. That is, these engagements were irregular.

Senator GREEN. I don't mean to say you had regular dates with him. These last 2 days you saw him, what did you discuss with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, we didn't have much of a discussion of anything, to tell you the truth.

Senator GREEN. You didn't sit and twiddle your thumbs?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, we didn't. I think that—well, once he had been in touch, I think, with Senator McCarthy.

Senator GREEN. He had been?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. That was the first time?

Mr. BUDENZ. The first day I think I saw him, that is what I suppose—

Senator GREEN. So then, did you discuss your coming testimony?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, we did not.

Senator GREEN. You knew you were going to testify, or expected to testify?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. As a matter of fact, nobody knew about my testimony in full, until I talked to Mr. Morgan.

Senator GREEN. I mean, in part.

Mr. BUDENZ. I may have known, in part.

Senator GREEN. Did he give you any advice?

Mr. BUDENZ. He did not. Mr. Kohlberg has never given me any advice and I would not take any particular advice.

Senator GREEN. Did he give you any information?

Mr. BUDENZ. From time to time, he has.

Senator GREEN. On that day?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't think so.

Senator GREEN. When you mentioned Senator McCarthy, he must have told you something about Senator McCarthy.

Mr. BUDENZ. He told me he was in the city.

Senator GREEN. Did he give you any message from Senator McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. He may have told me that Senator McCarthy would not subpoena me next week. I am not sure whether he told me that, or someone else.

Senator GREEN. But someone told you that he would not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was my understanding.

Senator GREEN. If it was not Mr. Kohlberg, who was it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, it may have been Mr. Kersten, who was there one day—Charles Kersten.

Senator GREEN. When had you seen him?

Mr. BUDENZ. I saw him about in the middle of the week, before I left, and went to Michigan.

Senator GREEN. Well, to go back to Mr. Kohlberg, the first time he came to see you, did he come in order to tell you he had seen Senator McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Senator GREEN. He came for some purpose; didn't he?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think that was the second time that he spoke about Senator McCarthy.

Senator GREEN. What was the first time, then?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, the first time, I think that I had left word that he should get in touch with me because I was interested in this case of Hewitt.

Senator GREEN. About what?

Mr. BUDENZ. George Hewitt, the ex-Communist.

You see, Mr. Hewitt was a Negro Communist who became quite ill, and before that, however, Mr. Kohlberg, I think, employed him. At any rate, I was very interested in Mr. Hewitt, and things—I think we discussed him.

Senator GREEN. Mr. Kohlberg was very much interested in this investigation; was he not?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was interested in it, but he did not discuss it very much with me.

Senator GREEN. That day, you may have mentioned it incidentally, you mean?

Mr. BUDENZ. We may have mentioned it.

Senator GREEN. Why did he come back the next day?

Mr. BUDENZ. I say, the day I remember he came was the day that Senator McCarthy was in New York, and if I recollect correctly, it may have been that Mr. Kersten told me, if I can recollect—Mr. Kohlberg told me very hurriedly, because he was only in the house a very short time, that Senator McCarthy would not call me, as I understand it.

Senator GREEN. You don't remember anything else about the conversation?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, we discussed China and other things.

Senator GREEN. What his views of China were, from a pro-Chiang—

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Senator GREEN. And he had been?

Mr. BUDENZ. I cannot see why anyone cannot be for Chiang Kai-shek. He is not threatening to destroy it, but the Chinese Communists are. My point is, I will talk to anybody anti-Communist. I will talk to Archbishop Yu Pin. I have had many talks with Yu Pin, archbishop of Nanking, and he can be accused of being pro-Chiang Kai-shek, too. He is interested in the missionaries who are going to be slaughtered by the Chinese hordes and other people.

Senator GREEN. That is no test of loyalty, whether you are for or against Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. BUDENZ. The only point I want to make is, my association I have, any association I have with Mr. Kohlberg, was on the same friendly basis and association that I have with many other people.

Senator GREEN. I would think it would be very natural, if you knew that Mr. Kohlberg was very much interested in the Chinese question and that he would doubtless be interested in the Lattimore case—

Mr. BUDENZ. Undoubtedly he was.

Senator GREEN. He must have known that you might be called as a witness, and one day he came to you from Senator McCarthy and told you that you would not be called. What else had he to say about the Lattimore case?

Mr. BUDENZ. We discussed very little at all. I can't think of a thing he said about it, except his general statements in regard to the people who were friendly to the Chinese Communists. We did not have a detailed discussion, he and I, on any material—

Senator GREEN. In general?

Mr. BUDENZ. Or about Mr. Lattimore.

Senator GREEN. In general, what did he say about the Lattimore case?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't know that he said anything in particular that I can recall.

Senator GREEN. He must have mentioned that things might have been going well, or going badly, or that Lattimore was a liar, or that Lattimore was this, that, and the other.

Mr. BUDENZ. As a matter of fact, to a large extent, I avoided the Lattimore case in detail, because I have been aware that there had been an attack on Mr. Kohlberg, and I am friendly to Mr. Kohlberg but certainly not influencing Mr. Kohlberg; never have been.

Senator GREEN. I don't know what attack you have heard of, but did you talk to Mr. Kohlberg about the attack on him, or did he mention it to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Some time in the past I think we have; yes, I joked with him about it.

Senator GREEN. But not on these 2 days.

Mr. BUDENZ. Not that I recall.

Senator GREEN. Are you positive that you did not?

Mr. BUDENZ. I don't recall exactly, because, as I say, Mr. Kohlberg came in while Mr. Kersten was there. I mean, during those days when they arrived, and I don't recall the conversation of each one. As a matter of fact, what I was trying to do was to organize my own thinking independently of other people so I could present it to Mr. Morgan, and was in a hurry to dispense with discussing it with people—

Senator GREEN. Excuse me, had you had any other messages from Senator McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I understand Dr. Matthews called me up originally. He had learned that I knew something about Mr. Lattimore. I was very cautious in speaking over the telephone, however, as I always am, and stated that anything I have to say about Mr. Lattimore will have to be said in a nonpartisan way, before a committee, under subpoena.

Senator GREEN. Can you tell us—that was a telephone conversation, you say?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, Senator.

Senator GREEN. Did you have any other conversation, personally, with him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Never with him, or anybody, on this question, in detail.

Senator GREEN. Any other question?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator, when Mr. Morris and Mr. Kersten came to my house of their own volition, I discussed briefly the case, although I didn't give the full evidence, kept it to myself, until I saw Mr. Morgan.

Senator GREEN. When was it that you last saw Mr. Matthews?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, I haven't seen him personally for years. I know him. You see—

Senator GREEN. When was this telephone conversation?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was very recently.

Senator GREEN. What day?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would have to check on that and advise you, Senator, for this reason: You understand, a number of things have happened. I told you I shall send here to the committee the letter, if I can recover it, that Senator McCarthy first wrote me, which was after, as I understand it, the Lattimore case was already in the papers, because he refers to Owen Lattimore there as somebody.

Senator GREEN. A letter from Senator McCarthy?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. Do you know him, or did you know him?

Mr. BUDENZ. Senator McCarthy?

Senator GREEN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. I never heard of him except as a Senator.

Senator GREEN. Until you got the letter?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. That was the first communication you had, either oral or in writing?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. You had no oral message from him?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is all.

Senator GREEN. And later, the message?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. How did you happen to discuss with Mr. Matthews the Lattimore case?

Mr. BUDENZ. He raised it; Mr. Matthews I know very well—

Senator GREEN. Why should he have raised it with you?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was the investigator for the Dies committee. He also is an expert on communism for the Hearst magazines, and in that connection apparently learned that I knew something about Mr. Lattimore. He intimated in his telephone conversation as to that, and I didn't say whether I did or not.

Senator GREEN. I am not asking you what you said. What did he say about Lattimore to you?

Mr. BUDENZ. He said, "I understand you know something about Owen Lattimore as a Communist."

Senator GREEN. Did he say anything about testifying?

Mr. BUDENZ. I told him, "Whatever I have to say about Mr. Lattimore must be on a nonpartisan basis, under subpoena."

Senator GREEN. Did he ask whether you were willing to testify?
Mr. BUDENZ. I don't think he used the word "willing."

Senator GREEN. What did he say about it?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, he indicated that he wanted me to testify, and I said I would not except under subpoena and on a nonpartisan basis.

Senator GREEN. Was that before or after you talked to Mr. Kohlberg?

Mr. BUDENZ. May I say something off the record?

Senator GREEN. Why?

Mr. BUDENZ. So I can explain.

Senator GREEN. Do you have any objection to putting it on the record?

Mr. BUDENZ. I will tell you why, Senator, and then we will see.

(There was discussion off the record.)

Senator GREEN. I don't see what that had to do with your explanation of my question.

Mr. BUDENZ. I was explaining to you why I took that position to Mr. Matthews. I didn't catch it.

Senator GREEN. You were talking to Mr. Matthews—was it before or after you talked to Mr. Kohlberg?

Mr. BUDENZ. Before.

Senator GREEN. Before?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. So, you knew, then, that they were looking for you to testify, that you would refuse, and this was a message brought by Mr. Kohlberg from Senator McCarthy; is that right—or it may have been—that they would not call you?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator GREEN. That is right?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator GREEN. Well, now, you mentioned also, who was it, Congressman Kersten?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator GREEN. Where did he come into this?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know Congressman Kersten, and have for many years. He was on the House Labor Committee. When he was investigating communism I was just as reluctant to testify for him as I have been to testify all along.

He just called up and came out to my house, and I did not go into any—

Senator GREEN. How often had you talked to him about this case?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think—once.

Senator GREEN. Only once?
